MR. W. Y. FULLERTON,
Preacher at Exeter Hall, Jan. 5—27.

Works by F. B. MEYER, B.A.

ELIJAH:
AND
The SECRET of his POWER.
By F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Sixth Thousand. With Nine Original Illustrations. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Rock:—
"The lessons to be learnt from the life of this prophet are well drawn out and emphasised in the pages before us. . . . Mr. Meyer's language is clear, forcible, descriptive, and interesting; his doctrine is always pure and elevating."

From The Presbyterian Messenger:—
"This is a most stimulating book. It sparkles with heavenly light, and glows with heavenly fire from beginning to end. We honestly and heartily recommend it."

ISRAEL:
A Prince with God.
THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.
By F. B. MEYER, B.A.

With full-page Illustrations of the RIVER JORDAN and JACOB'S WELL. Sixth Thousand. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled bds., gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Baptist Messenger:—
"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life; and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the readers some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."

From The Sword and Trowel:—
"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical."

"And Abraham said unto Lot, ... Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left."—GEN. xiii. 8, 9.

By F. B. MEYER, B.A.

ABRAHAM: or, The Obedience of Faith.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.
With NINE Illustrations Specially Engraved for this Work.

"This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from its perusal without feeling consciously strengthened in God and inspired afresh for the godly life. Our teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the sacred Word."—Gospel Magazine.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.
By F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Fifth Thousand.

Cloth boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

From Footsteps of Truth:—
"Mr. Meyer writes with all the warmth of one who tastes, handles, and feels the Word of Life. In this book he stretches out a loving hand to his fellows in the Christian course, eager to help them in the pathway of holiness."

From The Christian Commonwealth:—
"Every page is full of stimulating thought for Christian workers; and we heartily commend its earnest admonitions, and cheering appeals for a higher life. From beginning to end it is a live book; and is worthy of a place in every Christian library."

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 20,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

Subjoined show the Homes, &c. sustained by the Donations contributed.

To the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."

It is indeed a pleasant duty to bear testimony to the Lord's "goodness and mercy" through another year. "Not one good thing has failed." The work of 1888 was commenced in reliance upon Jehovah's faithfulness, which has been abundantly fulfilled. And now the work of 1889 is entered upon, in hopeful anticipation that He will bless the means used to rescue the perishing in the future as in the past; also that He will dispose the hearts of His Stewards to supply all needful contributions.

It has been suggested to me that the financial interests of the Institution might be advanced if I were to devote more time to organising meetings in the Provinces, to plead the cause by public meetings. In a sense I should be glad to do this, but experience has proved the desirability of my seeing every new applicant, to advise and encourage them to enter upon a new life, which involves the necessity of my being at my post as constantly as possible, and I am sure that every supporter will sympathise with this sense of paramount duty.

Above all things I ask the prayers of the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Limp cloth, 6d.
Cheap Edition, for general distribution, 2s. per dozen.

"'The Second Coming of Christ' is a statement of what is known as the doctrine of the pre-Millennial return of the Lord. It is one of the most forcible and lucid expositions of a doctrine which many divines hold is the great Scriptural antidote to the worldliness and self-seeking which mark average religious society."

WORKS BY
REV. J. CULROSS, D.D., M.A.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.
A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER, WRITINGS, THEOLOGY, AND INFLUENCE OF THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

By Rev. J. CULROSS, D.D., M.A.
Principal of Bristol Baptist College.
With two Chromo-lithographic Views.
Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON says: "Preachers abound; but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter; but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work entitled 'JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED,' we have found a book. Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices—they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn forest. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way."

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."
The Sword and Trowel.

"Dr. Culross has handled his subject in such a way as to have produced the most complete as well as the most interesting biography of the Apostle John it has ever been our privilege to peruse. To his task, or rather, we should say, labour of love, he has brought a well-furnished and evenly-balanced mind: great literary skill and taste: and an unusually profound spiritual insight."—Stirling Observer.

Cheap Editions: Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR, AND KNOCK."
CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT LAODICEA.

By Rev. J. CULROSS, D.D., M.A.
With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Two evils are obvious enough among us—Ritualism and Rationalism. But there is a third more terrible and more insidious than either of these—the Laodicean spirit, with its blended lukewarmness and pride. It is this spirit that Dr. Culross examines, describes, and rebukes. All who admire the author's insight, his delicacy of perception, his felicity of language, his broad and tender sympathies, his grasp of great truths, will welcome this volume."—The Freeman.

"Another 'gem of purest ray serene' from the deep waters of our brother's teeming mind. He possesses a ripeness of thought and a beauty of expression which, in our judgment, are scarcely equalled, and in not one instance surpassed, by those of any other living teacher known to us."
The Sword and Trowel.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which the imagination sheds over the author's style, gives it a great charm."
The British Messenger.

"We do not know higher-toned or healthier devotional literature, of the evangelical type, than is represented by this and Dr. Culross' previous works. This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly; these latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."

It carries on a large Temperance work, provides ships with Loan Libraries, gives medical help to Sick, and RELIEF TO DESTITUTE SEAMEN.

The Committee are anxious to clear off the debt of £200 owing to the Bankers, and also the debt of £180 on the New Sailors' Bethel, Ramsey, Isle of Man.

A site for a SAILORS' HOME AND REST has been secured at Fowey, Cornwall, but £500 is still required to meet the cost of its erection.

GEORGE WILLIAMS, Esq., the President, said at the Annual Meeting that "an enormous amount of work was done by this Society, and the money given to it was splendidly spent."

Donations, whether by Cheque or P.O. Order, should be crossed London and Westminster Bank, Eastern Branch, and forwarded to GEORGE JOHN HILL, Secretary, 255, Burdett-road, London, E.

POOR IN EAST CENTRAL LONDON.

PHILIP GAST, 12, Noel-street, Islington, pastor of Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road, pleads for the poor of St. Luke's and Clerkenwell, for sufferers, for the Widow and Fatherless, and for those in want. The work is carried on in one of the most poverty-stricken districts in London. Clothing and money will be gladly received.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS for the POOR

Sympathising friends are heartily thanked for contributions toward giving Food, Coals, and Clothing to the Poor of a very poor London parish. For each 10s. forwarded, 15 adults or 20 children can be provided—by a local Committee—with a substantial meal.—A. HOMES of HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD, LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

The Committee are in very urgent need of £250.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS, and DISEASE of the RIGHT LUNG—CASE AT HIGHBURY.

MRS. EMILY SAVAGE, then of DRAYTON PARK, came to Coombe Lodge to consult me first in 1884.

She had been always subject to colds. Had had Bronchitis seven years before, which became chronic.

On examination by Dr. B., it was found that the upper lobe of the right lung had become diseased.

Expectoration was profuse now, breathing oppressed, much pain below the clavicle and in the breast. She had got considerable weaker, and was losing flesh fast.

She was fully advised, and correspondence continued for eight months, during which several prescriptions were sent, in addition to the usual course of medicine. She continued, however, under my treatment for some months longer, and got well. She has had (I believe) two children since.

I received a letter from her recently (Oct. 24), in which she suggests my making use of her case. She says:—"I was very ill indeed when I applied to you, and none of my friends thought I should live the year out. I had been patient at the Chest Hospital for twelve months before coming to you, and had been getting worse. I recovered, have passed through two confinements, and have kept strong and well. You can make any use of this. I shall be happy at any opportunity to recommend your valuable medicine."—E. SAVAGE, 24, HORSELL ROAD, HIGHBURY GARDENS, N.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

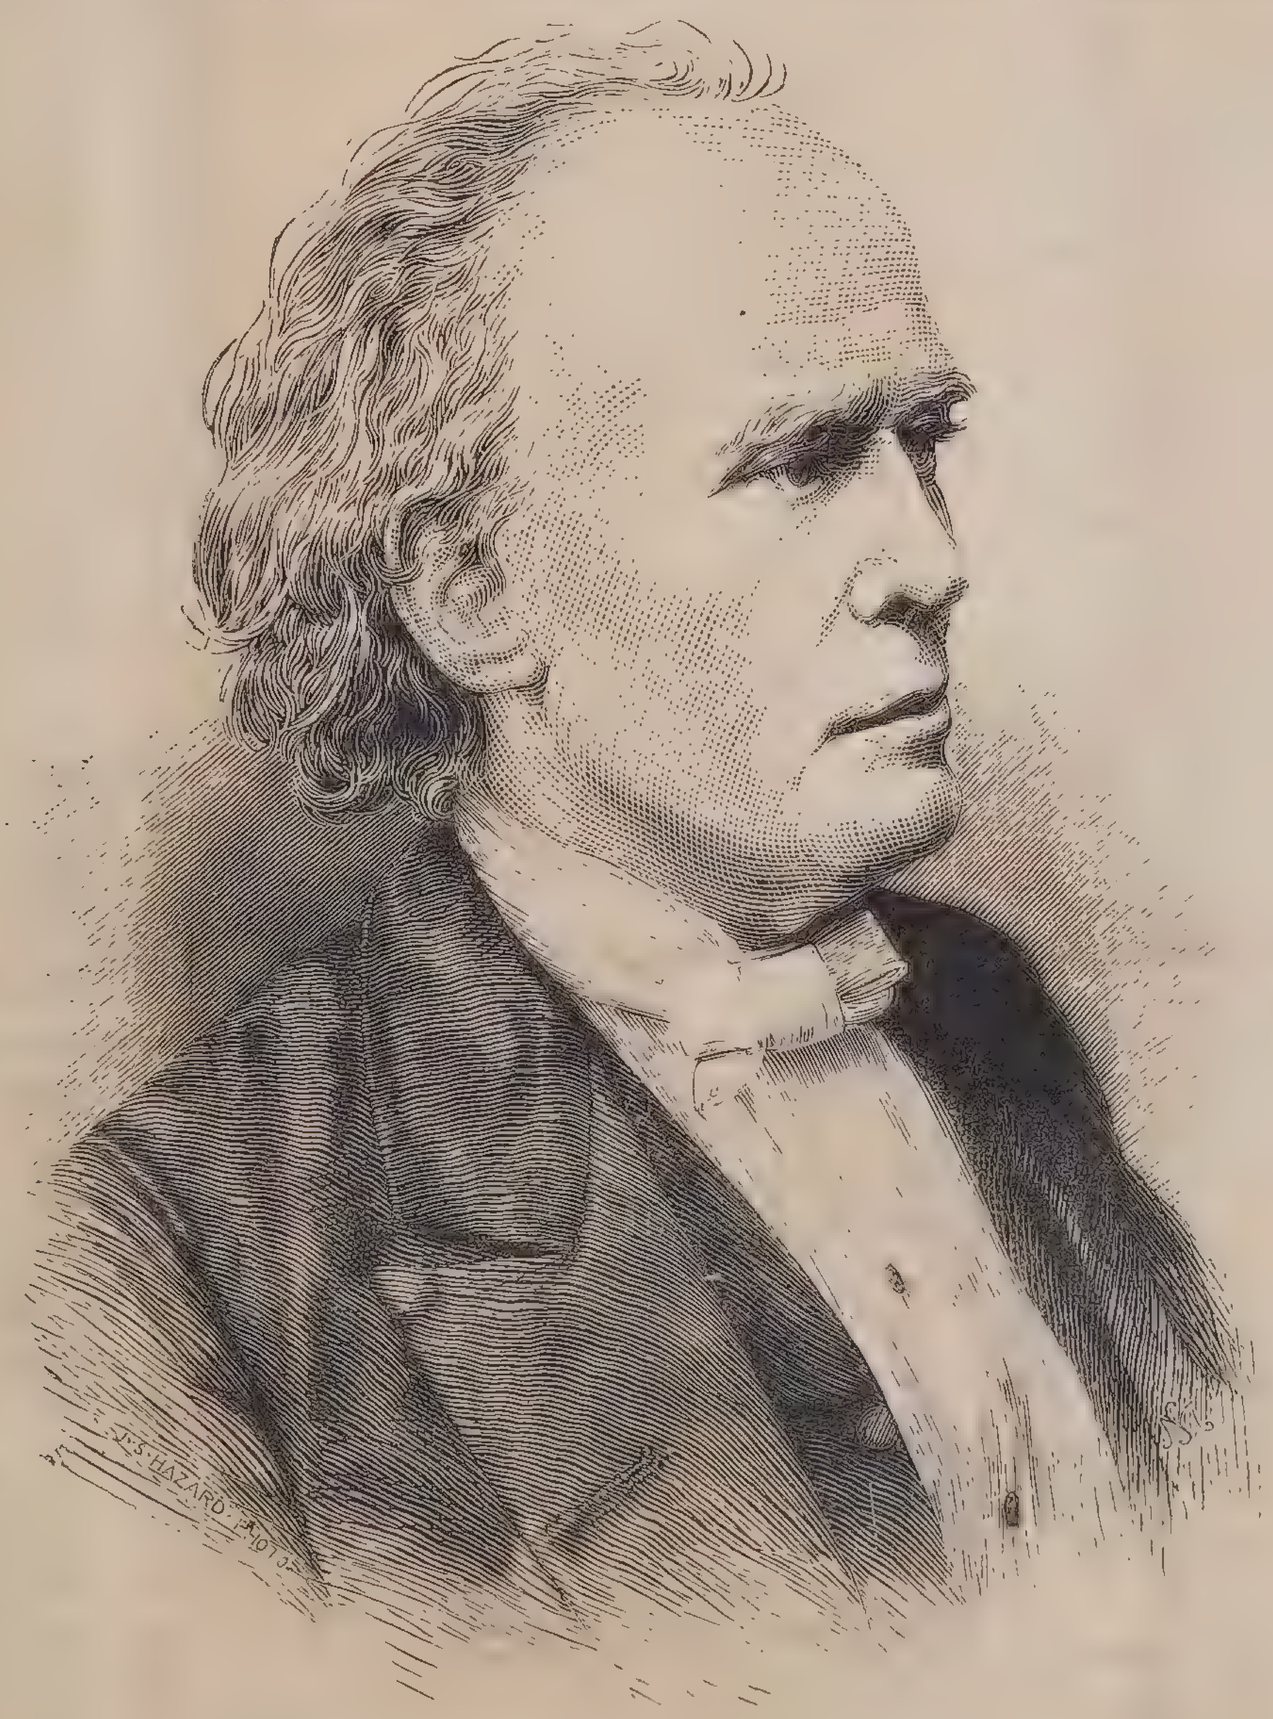
THE CHRISTIAN.



FRIDAY, JANUARY 4, 1889.

REV. EBENEZER E. JENKINS, M.A.,

Hon. Secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society.

FEW ministers have gathered about them such a wealth of esteem and affection as Rev. EBENEZER E. JENKINS, the subject of this sketch. Several reasons may be assigned for this. Mr. Jenkins has rendered priceless service to the Church of Christ, both as a successful missionary and as a Secretary of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society. He is one of the most widely known, cultured, and powerful preachers of the denomination to which he belongs. He is in hearty sympathy with that form of aggressive evangelism which is finding ever-increasing favour in the Methodist Church.

Mr. Jenkins was born at Exeter in 1820, and is therefore in his sixty-ninth year. He was educated in the Grammar School in his native city, where an excellent foundation of knowledge was laid. Without the advantages of what is known as a theological training, he has attained a high position as a scholar, a position which is largely due to the habits of industry and diligence acquired during those early years. In the morning of his life he made choice of Christ, and, true to the instincts of the new life, he at once sought to lead others into the same joy. His efforts as a local preacher indicated fuller service as a preacher of the Gospel, and, in 1845, Mr. Jenkins was accepted as a minister on probation, and sent to that great district in India known as the Madras Presidency, a district containing over seventy-one thousand villages and over eighty-one million souls. Here Mr. Jenkins engaged in the difficult but fascinating and congenial work of a missionary, now learning Tamil, now getting the natives to read to him extracts from the tracts which he carried into their homes, and now preaching to them in their own tongue the unsearchable riches of Christ. After several years spent thus, unusual facilities for extending missionary operations presented themselves, and Mr. Jenkins returned to England, having been absent ten years, to convey information to those at home, and to awaken the spirit of enthusiasm and enterprise which such opportunities demanded. In Exeter Hall, in the presence of the Earl of Shaftesbury and nearly four thousand people, Mr. Jenkins, in a masterly and convincing speech, gave details of the work accomplished, showed the need for more labourers, and pleaded for funds to enable him to consolidate and develop this work among the Brahmins and Hindoos. After having in some measure awakened the British conscience to its responsibilities, he returned to India, having been appointed chairman of the Madras district.

(From Photograph by J. S. Hazard, Clapham.)

The wealth and hope of a nation consists in the souls of the children that are born into it, and, in order to influence these in favour of Christianity, Mr. Jenkins established the High School in Madras. Some idea of the importance of this agency may be gathered from his own words at a later date. He says: "The school which I commenced twelve years ago with three boys now numbers 320, among whom are nearly one hundred Brahmins." Mr. Jenkins then stated that some of the young men who were studying for their degree were members of the Methodist Society and local preachers, and explained how the knowledge they acquired enabled them to resist and expose the threats of the priests who sought to intimidate them by their heathen philosophies and legends. This Methodist high school in Madras is still sending out young men to fill the foremost positions of trust and honour and influence in the country—young men who become not merely magistrates, surgeons, and engineers, but centres of spiritual, moral, and intellectual power among the natives.

Indications of a great change in the minds of the ruling class as to the character and effect of missionary operations were not wanting. The baptism of a Hindoo named Viziarangum in 1858 was made the occasion for a riot in Madras, but the Governor so vigorously defended the work of the missionaries, and so severely punished the rioters, that this happened rather to the furtherance of the Gospel. Emboldened by a feeling of security, the native preachers became more aggressive, and marked success attended their labours. In that year the vast dominions of Hindostan passed from the control of the East India Company to the Government of Queen Victoria, an event fraught with issues of a momentous character both to the millions of people and to the missionaries and native agents who worked among them. Greatly did Mr. Jenkins rejoice in the facilities which these changes afforded for sowing more freely and widely than ever the incorruptible seed.

In 1862 Mr. Jenkins spent a month in exploring the newly discovered district on the banks of the Godavery river. Here was soil upon which no Christian missionary had ever stood, and he had the joy of telling the natives of Him whose name had never before fallen on their ears and of whose love they had never before heard. The people gladly listened to the truth, and there was no priestly influence to render abortive the missionary's labour. The only occasion for regret was that in this, as in many other districts of a similar character, no one could be sent to cultivate the ground, and this lack of helpers so distressed Mr. Jenkins that he resolved to return to England to seek for more generous support in this direction, and also to free from debt the Madras High School. Returning by way of Australia, he spent several months in the Colonies, lecturing to large audiences and securing by his powerful appeals considerable financial aid for the objects so dear to his heart. On reaching England, early in 1864, he had an opportunity of pleading in Exeter Hall, nor was his championship of the needs of those who waited for the light of the Gospel in vain.

At the Wesleyan Conference of that year, Mr. Jenkins was honoured by being placed in the Legal Hundred, and was appointed to the Hackney Circuit. Three years afterwards he removed to Brixton-hill, where he passed through a great sorrow—a sorrow which his congregation did much to mitigate by their deep sympathy and great kindness. In 1870, Mr. Jenkins removed to Southport, and the Lancashire people rejoiced greatly in his ministrations, both in the pulpit and on the platform. Returning to London in 1873, he was pressed by the Committee of the Missionary Society to visit the East again. Mr. Jenkins consented, and India, China, Japan, and other lands were visited, the missionaries and their churches were encouraged, and stores of valuable information were acquired as to the position and promise of Christianity in these regions. When Mr. Jenkins told those who had sent him what he had seen, how glorious were the triumphs of the Gospel, and how loud was the summons to new effort among these millions of people, the impression was marvellous. A man was needed to fill a vacancy at the Mission House, and by a spontaneous and enthusiastic vote Mr. Jenkins was called to this important office. From this position he has only recently retired, after having rendered invaluable service to the Society by the intellectual power, keenness of vision, geniality of temper, and unstinted enthusiasm and devotion, which have ever characterised his labours. As honorary secretary of the Missionary Society, he still places at the disposal of the Church his matured experience and sound judgment.

In 1880 Mr. Jenkins was called to the Presidential Chair, and right well did he discharge the duties with which this honour is always associated. He is one of the ablest preachers of the day. His sermons are marked by such clearness and polish as indicate a mastery of the best English classics. He is at his very best in defending Christianity, and in exposing the inefficiency of a no-faith philosophy. His well-known Fernley lecture on "Modern Atheism" is full of subtle distinctions, deep penetration, and irresistible force, and his sermons of recent date on similar topics have proved invaluable, especially to the intelligent young people who have heard them, in view of the unstable modes of thought which have prevailed of late in certain directions.

Mr. Jenkins's sympathies and advocacy are by no means confined to missions to other lands; his influence has been of great service to the London Wesleyan Mission, and he takes the deepest interest in the vigorous evangelistic spirit that is abroad in many of the home churches. This accounts, very largely, for his popularity with the younger ministers of the denomination to which he belongs.

In addition to his book on Modern Atheism, Mr. Jenkins has published a volume of Sermons, preached first of all in India, sermons which take a high place in such literature. A volume of Addresses and Sermons was also published at the close of his presidential career, which contains some of the ripest productions of the author's intellect and heart. A shilling volume, entitled "My Aspirations," is also from Mr. Jenkins's pen, and we cannot close this sketch without expressing the hope that he will be spared for many years to promote, both by tongue and pen, the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

Our poor Liverpool widows' sewing-class continues. They get their tea and some sewing, for which work they are paid sixpence. Poor aged widows! How hard a lot is theirs; toiling and starving in their last years of loneliness. As we go from class to class we hear testimonies sufficient to show the blessedness of the work.

The child rescue work is going on as extensively as our yet limited premises will admit. We have a fine band of boys and girls training and preparing for our fair Dominion in the spring. This work being entirely for the widows, fatherless, and orphans of this great seaport, all should consider it a privilege to aid and help it on. The new building is progressing rapidly, but we still need some £1200 to finish it without burden. Louisa Birt.

CHINESE SERMONS.—Rev. H. C. Du Bose, of the American Presbyterian Mission, Soochow, China, has sent to the Mission press in Shanghai two hundred sermons in Chinese. It is said to be the first volume of the kind printed in Chinese.

THE NEW YEAR.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST, F.G.S.

"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Few of the deathless words of our adorable Lord are more serious and suggestive in import than these. Gentile dominion has existed since the rise of the Babylonish Empire; it still has sway; it is destined to end; and every New Year is a remembrancer of the two-fold announcement to which Scripture has committed itself: the termination of Jewish prostration, and of an exclusive Gentile predominance.

Obviously the present European tranquillity is only the thin covering of latent volcanic agitations. Militarism is slowly ruining the prosperity of Continental nations. Revolutionary forces are waiting their opportunity. Conflicts, changes, and disasters of tremendous import impend. The last decade of the century must prove among the most momentous the world has known, and we begin a year over which admonishing shadows of the events at hand will be cast. In view of these things, of the seriousness of the times, and of those perils around the cause of true religion which have been indicated in the two preceding papers, let faithful servants of Christ ponder the following six lessons:—

Let us, first: Renew our confidence in the sure Word of Truth.

Let us not, even by word or thought, regard it as an open question, but a fixed and settled one, that the Bible is the all-sufficing revelation to men of the inspiring Spirit. Our hearts ought to overflow with joy that in an age of research in every part of the world, of a scientific ability unparalleled, and of a literary activity that has shed the light of scholarship on every possible question of the date and authorship of the Biblical records, these, instead of shaking, have wondrously strengthened the evidences for the historical accuracy, and the superhuman nature of the books of Scripture. Materialism has done its utmost to make man not the offspring of God, but of an automatic evolution. The effort has been a consummate failure. Unceasing have been labours to place man's origin in a remote antiquity that would discredit the Bible testimony. Equally abortive has been the result. A criticism at once formidable and threatening has sought to show that the Bible was a merely human and a humanly constructed Book; but, instead of eliminating it, the more has the superhuman lifted up its invincible witness for a supernatural realm, and for a controlling providential love that has ever been seeking man in his errors, miseries, and apostasies. Once the bush burned with fire, and was not consumed; but now this burning light of revelation has seen menacing floods of hostility poured around it, and, so far from being quenched, it shines all the stronger and brighter as we enter on the last year of the ninth decade of our nineteenth century life.* The supreme authority of Scripture, therefore, in all things that fall within its intention, should reach an absolute settle-

* I was told a few months ago, and on the very best authority, of the death of a gentleman who was an official member of the Ordnance Survey of Sinai. That Survey of Her Majesty's Government directed its investigations to trace the path of the Israelites from Egypt to Sinai. It was conducted by eminently scientific men. One of the party, on starting, was a confirmed sceptic; but when he saw that, after unerring measurements, most careful engineering observations step by step, and exact ment with all Christian men as they begin the year.

Let us, secondly: Magnify the Bible testimony respecting Christ's atoning work.

It is not only because all lines of confirmatory evidence are pointing to the Scriptures; nor because their wonderfulness grows exceedingly, and after years of daily study, to those who "delight" in them; but their preciousness is in this: their pages open the door of salvation to a sinful, bestormed, and sorely tempted world. There is nothing more astonishing than that a man with the Bible in his hand can have any doubt respecting the doctrine of pardon through atonement. That atonement is among the few primal truths which Paul received by revelation (1 Cor. xv.). It is the mightiest proof of the love of God. Because love was hindered by man's sins, therefore Christ came forth to "put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." Because there could be nothing for the guilt of a sinner but the opposition of Divine holiness, therefore love found through atonement for that guilt a new method of pouring itself over a created spirit. Yea, the sinner's conscience needed that redemption of the cross. The greatest and best of men have acknowledged that nothing but the ceaseless memory of an all-availing sacrifice can meet the difficulty as to sin which is felt by every ingenuous mind.

Against all modern errors we must uphold this plain Bible testimony of a completed vicarious atonement. Sacramentarianism may perchance be made light of with its symbolical dresses, and shows, and puerilities; when, however, it audaciously affirms that the great sacrifice of Jesus is not complete except through priestly functions at "the altar," it is vehemently to be resisted. This is as though God darkened the morning sun until priestly hands drew aside the veil.

Firm also must be the attitude against what is spoken of as "the new development of Christian doctrine," and what is, we are told, to be "the theology of the future." Far be it from us to minimise the truth of a risen Christ which the new theology would exclusively maintain. But to the student of Paul the ascension and the headship of the Lord Jesus are the fruit and the crown of his atoning sacrifice, and if the latter perishes in neological denials, the former will lose its meaning and its glory.

As to preachers who ask, as one has done, "Why should Christ be dragged into every sermon?" the answer is easy. No Christ is preached when He is thus introduced. And none but a hireling, who has never gone as a penitent sinner to the feet of the Saviour, would talk after his manner.

I well remember, when a pastor in Leeds, listening in the spring of 1858, to an address before the Congregational Union of the West Riding of Yorkshire, by Dr. Enoch Mellor, of Halifax. The argument of that address was that the denial of the doctrine of the substitutionary work of Christ was to throw the whole fabric of revealed truth into disintegration and collapse. Rarely could an argument have produced such an overwhelming impression. If appealed to, the large audience of ministers would have stood up, and with tears pouring from the eyes of not a few, would have sworn eternal fidelity to the supreme testimony and theme of ministry—"CHRIST AND HIM CRUCIFIED."

Let us, thirdly: Judge all pretended "new theology" by the language of Scripture.

We are safe while we submit our reason to the higher reason of God. If we attempt in pride and selfishness to frame a Christianity which is reasonable to man, it will be merely human and not that which is Divine. Teachings in England and America which have been chaotic in their indefiniteness are at length coming to something like a formulated creed; and the "new reformation," as it has been called, is to consist of these two articles—the Universal Fatherhood of God, and the Brotherhood of Men.

These are plausible-sounding terms. They will captivate men. But, according to the rationalistic conception of them, they will neutralise all effective preaching; they will cease to urge God's message to men, which, according to Paul, was to entreat them by his ministers to be reconciled to Himself; and they will abolish the New Testament distinction, which separates men into the two classes of those who have yielded up self to the pressure of the Divine love, and those who perseveringly resist the invitations of that love. This "new reformation" will, indeed, prepare the way for a teaching that will deny the doctrine of the Fall, which is not only one of the Bible, but of our very senses, and which will introduce eventually a reign of naturalism, or living according to nature, which goes in the very face of Scripture, and must pave the way not to the elevation but the barbarism of peoples.

Let us, fourthly, in our testimony against abounding errors: Keep watch over our own spirit.

"Beware of acrimony, William," said the elder Forster to the son whose Life was published last year, "lest while inveighing against an unchristian system thou shouldest be influenced by an unchristian spirit." To testify against departures from Scripture is a duty; to mourn over that which prevents a dead nominalism of Christian profession from realising the authority of the Spirit's revelation is demanded from all who are Jesus Christ's; but, oh! how difficult to be like Him who finished his stern warnings against the teachers who misled the people with that unequalled burst of pathetic concern which closed the great discourse in the Temple in Matt. xxiii.

Let us, fifthly: Be steadfast in maintaining the obligation of personal righteousness.

Accursed to us be the antinomian idea that the Gospel emancipates us from that obligation. On the contrary, it gives to it the highest and most commanding enforcement. Well has the eminent scientist, Sir William Dawson, said: "The sin of Adam was the stretching forth of his hand to grasp the peculiar powers of Deity." But let us adoringly note what is written of Him who came to be the new Head and Representative of our race: He was in the form of God, yet He claimed no independent existence; He caught not at the prize of self-assertion, but placed Himself in perfect subjection to the absolute will of God. Instead of grasping, like Adam, independence of Deity, He became obedient. Mark that word "obedient"; it is the keynote of the sublime passage: "Obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross." Obedient to the eternal principles of righteousness which demanded that death. Therefore said the inspired teacher to the Philippians who had believed: Have this mind in you which was also in Christ, i.e., be conformed to your Lord and Leader, in obedience to the will of God, at all cost, and sacrifice of self-surrender.

And here may I warn, with pleading entreaty, against an evangelical preaching which approaches to that Nicolaitanism which Christ says He "hates." I may have been specially unfortunate in this, but it has been my painful experience to listen to sermons in chapels, and addresses in mission rooms, which must have conveyed the impression to the hearers that the Gospel was meant to make them happy rather than good. Incalculable is the evil of this. An easy religion in our world is not a New Testament religion, and is heard scornfully by intelligent artisans. A Christianity without cross-bearing does not captivate high-minded young men. They like to be urged, as St. John did the young men of his period, to "overcome the wicked one." The message of the great Methodist Revival was not an urging sinners to be happy, but to "flee from the wrath to come"; and the Gospel to which the Spirit gave such an abounding blessing was a salvation from the reigning power, as well as the damning guilt of sin.

But, once more, let us persevere in personal communion with God. In many respects we, in this age, are stronger than our fathers. We are stronger in the freedom of our religious services, and in hymns that interpret the love of the Gospel, and in music born out of the heart, as well as of the understanding, and in the services of Christian laymen, and especially of devoted women. But—and what an exception it is—we are weaker in private prayer. It is a Chelsea apostle of cynicism and melancholy who has given the dictum to our times that "to work is to pray." We are so secular, so busy here and there that we have no time to be alone with God. Estranged from communion with Him the error lies straight in man's pathway to doubt the supernatural. We know how Luther, and Baxter, and Martyn, and Bramwell, and Payson, and John Angell James prayed. When the spirit is with God; when its plans and ambitions are subjected to Him; when in absolute self-subjection and quickened understanding we catch the whispers of his will; when in the nothingness of the creature the life becomes wholly his; then false motives cease to sway and the body becomes "full of light"; then we speak without compromising his claims, and with a depth of pleading tenderness tell of his love; then can God use us and the Spirit overshadows us; and then in sympathy, fidelity, and compassion, we are one with Christ and the Father, and men believe the urgency and the heavenliness of our message.

These hints I venture to lay before my brethren in Christ as, at a serious time, they begin the year, and, being companions in his tribulations, and kingdom, and patience, let each of us say—

Forerunner to the purchased abode!
Oh, shed Thou upon me—e'en upon me,
Thy light to find, thy strength to tread the road,
To where the pure in heart shall dwell with Thee
Take all thine own—inspire, enkindle, raise,
My thoughts, my tongue, my life, to thy immortal praise.

geological tests, there was a complete coincidence of the present features of the country with all the requirements of the Mosaic narrative, and that "theories of a late authorship disappeared like mist," his unbelief gave way, and he died in the full faith of Him whom Moses and the prophets did say should come.

NORTH AFRICA.—To meet the convenience of friends interested in North Africa, it has been arranged to hold a meeting for prayer and praise at the Y.M.C.A., Whittington-avenue, Leadenhall-street, on the first Friday of each month at 6.30 p.m. The first meeting will take place to-day (Friday), when it is expected Mr. Edward H. Glenny, who has just returned from North Africa, will be present and give some account of the progress of the work.

FALLOW GROUND.

A THOUGHT FOR THE NEW YEAR.

THE words, fallow ground, spoken by Jeremiah and Hosea, had almost a deeper meaning (when regarded naturally) in the days of old, than they have in the present.

Passing through the richly cultivated fields, and marking the alternate crops of an agriculturist of to-day, one often thinks that had the land a few more Sabbaths it might, in the result, yield finer, fuller harvests. But they tell us it is only our inexperience which allows us to imagine this, and so it may be. Certain it is that it is a dangerous experiment when it is tried in a spiritual sense. "Break up your fallow ground" (Hosea x. 12) is the command, and as we stand upon the threshold of a new, untried year, blessing our God for all his wonderful and gracious love to us in the past, our hearts go out in a great desire, and we cry, "Lord, help me to do it!"

The writer remembers hearing of a young wife whose husband had become a Christian, and who urged her to yield her heart at once to the Lord.

"No, no," said she; "I will begin the new year by giving myself and our child to Him as a new year's gift.'

Poor young thing! Her child was born before the new year, and she left it an orphan just a week before she had meant to seek her Saviour. "Now" is "always the accepted time" in reference to anything whose issues will affect us for good through all eternity.

"Break up your fallow ground, for it is time to seek the Lord, till He come and rain"—"There shall be showers of blessing" (Ezekiel xxxiv. 26)—"righteousness upon you" (Hosea x. 12). Fallow, meaning uncultivated, neglected, unoccupied, unused. Can it be possible that this is the state of some of our hearts?—that there are barren wastes therein, neglected spots, upon which the iron of conviction has never descended to prepare them for the sowings of spring, the suns of summer, and the harvests of autumn? It is, indeed, then "time to seek the Lord," and to ask for his Spirit to help us, one and all, as we begin, in his name, to break up our fallow ground.

(1) Fallow, uncultivated. Perhaps some of us have not cultivated the habit—no, that is a stereotyped, misleading word—rather let us say the joy of earnest, importunate prayer. We have had so many blessings that we have forgotten to ask for those we might have had for ourselves and others, and the consequence is we find ourselves cold in our love and weak of faith, and we wonder why this is. But we need not wonder; declension in prayer means coldness in love; for oh, how we grow to love those for whom we constantly pray, and whose names are ever on our hearts before the Lord! And the oftener we go to Him, the more we learn to love Him—the patient hearer and answerer of our loving prayers! Let us resolve, God helping us, that this fallow ground shall be broken up, and that this year shall find us renewing our strength in unbroken waiting upon the Lord.

Some time ago the writer sent a letter to a young man who was a moralist (but who did not desire to be a Christian), and then definitely asked God to save his soul. The next day brought two letters from Mr. A. C. P. Coote and Mr. Hind Smith, and one from himself, telling how graciously and fully the prayer had been answered. Oh, we have such encouragements to prayer. Do let us be more constant, definite, and real in our cultivation and exercise of this blessed privilege!

Or, maybe, we have neglected our Bibles. Of course, we have read them regularly, but how much have we brought away from them of fresh knowledge of our Father's will concerning us and those around us, and of strength for the battle which we must fight if we are true soldiers? Our attitude as Christians is determined by the intimacy and communion we have with God upon our knees and with our Bibles, Lord, help us to break up all "fallow ground" that speaks of neglect of Thee!

(3) Fallow, unoccupied. There are unoccupied places in our hearts, and these must be filled by the love of God, and for his glory. The present writer, who had held aloof (from mistaken motives) from the ministry and communion of love with one of God's dear children whom she constantly met at his table, received a touching reproof from this one: "We are, perhaps, more apt to remember the needs of our poorer brethren and sisters, and hardly realise how much those in our own position need sympathy and love, and the fellowship is not complete without it. Will you not give it to me for his sake?" In the coming year, by his grace, we will seek to break up this fallow ground, and "by love serve one another" (Gal. v. 13), for there must be those known to all of us who, during the past, have felt the need of that love and sympathy which would have brought us together closer to Him who is "the Head of the body, the Church."

(4) Fallow, unused. Someone invented the phrase, "The luxury of giving," and it comes to us with all the force of irony, that, to some, the joy of giving is indeed a "luxury." Not only the giving of money, but of time and talents, which we all possess, more or less, will come under this head. A young girl—a dressmaker—who is earning £30 a year, gives a third of this to God. Another who enjoys "the luxury of giving, but who has neither silver nor gold to offer, has given HERSELF in loving service among the little ones; and Mr. Broomhall tells of a poor old Scotch body whose only reliable income is half a crown a week from the parish, sending now and then her five shillings to the heathen out of pence given her for the purpose of getting a bit of meat for once in the way! Surely, the ground does not lie fallow in the heart of this richly-blessed one! Shall it any longer be true of some of us that this also is one of our unused privileges?

And now, a word of parting, as well as of greeting. Let us open our windows wide towards Jerusalem, that we may get what we have together been asking of God—his Spirit in us, flooding and awakening every corner of our hearts with his glorious shining and power.

A resident in Rome not long ago told the following:—"When I was in one of the many beautiful spots on the shores of the Mediterranean, I visited a garden, one of the most beautiful in luxuriant growth that I ever seen. I could hardly tear myself from the scene, but as I did so, I saw in its centre a barren spot—a bed with but the dry, twisted, withered stems of plants, looking so out of keeping with all else, that I said to the owner of the garden, 'How comes this dry, arid bit of waste in the midst of so much gorgeous life and fertility?'

"'Oh,' said my friend, 'thereby hangs a tale. It is now evening: you see the dews are falling; come in the morning, at noon, and you shall see this plot under a different aspect.'

"I went. The sun was shining in his strength; the flowers in the garden were some of them drooping under his power; but the plot of dried stalks I had seen the night before, was one blaze of radiant bloom. The dry stems were supple, and full of life; the distorted heads held themselves up proudly under the sun. I could hardly believe I saw aright. My friend said, 'This is a flower which responds neither to the wooing of the winds, nor to the kisses of the dew; only to the smile of the sun will it open its petals, and live as you see it now.'"

What a fitting emblem of the life that we may live during this opening year! Oh that our souls may respond to nothing and to none but the Sun of eternal Righteousness; and then, at the close of 1889, those of us who may be permitted to see it will not have to mourn that much that is within our spiritual nature has to be sorrowfully regarded as uncultivated, or fallow ground.

M. BUTLER GERDS.

THE "THREE CHILDREN."

SIR,—Kindly allow me space to state, for the information of your readers, that the litigation in which I have been engaged, in preventing these children from being captured by the Romanists, has at last come to a definite conclusion. The chief cause, I am sorry to say, is the death of the mother, which took place rather more than two months ago.

Until yesterday the solicitors for the other side threatened to carry on the strife, and applied to the Court for leave to appoint a "next friend" in the mother's place, in order to do so; but I have now heard from my solicitors that the Romanists have deemed it prudent to abandon their appeal against Mr. Justice Stirling's decision altogether.

It will interest those of your readers who so sympathetically responded to my appeal in September last, for pecuniary assistance towards the legal costs (£300) which I had to pay, to know that I received altogether the sum of £95, for which help I feel most grateful. I owe now for costs about £200. Just before the mother's death, I was able to arrange for the two children in England to visit her at the hospital, where she was lying ill. The eldest girl I took myself, and when the poor woman heard that I was in the house, she sent to ask me to go to her, which I gladly did. She took my hand and said, "Mr. Davies, I have never had any feeling against you. I am very thankful to find my children looking so well, and for the care which I can see has been taken of them, I know they are in good hands, and happy." This really only showed more plainly what I had known all along—viz., that she was nothing more nor less than the unfortunate tool of the Romish priests.

The children themselves will now be left in peace, and have every prospect of getting on well. They are all being brought up in the faith of their father. Again thanking you and your readers for your kindness and sympathy in this distressing case, I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

ERNEST KEVILL-DAVIES.

TO OUR READERS.

WE are thankful to say that our circulation has increased 7000 during the past three years, and naturally we wish to study the comfort of our readers in every way we can. We have therefore, in compliance with the wish expressed by many, verbally and by letter, reverted to our original plan of placing the advertisement pages on the outside of the number. We thereby lose an advantage, as the portrait is less en evidence, but we hope this will be more than counterbalanced by the increased interest of our friends, in consequence of the removal of their objection to the advertisements being in the midst of the reading matter.

Everyone can materially help forward our circulation in various ways, which we need not here particularise; but above all things we desire that, in view of the probability of great changes in the religious world, and great events in the political world, we may be helped by the prayers of all, that we may in all things be guided by the Spirit of light and truth, of faith and hope and love.

In lieu of Notes on the Sunday-school Lessons (which are supplied by most of our contemporaries), we shall next week commence Notes on Bible-readings, beginning with Genesis, which will run concurrently with those of the Bible and Prayer Union, originated and continued by Rev. T. Richardson. Instead, however, of critical or expository remarks upon particular verses, these Daily Notes will present a bird's-eye view, first of each book, and then of each chapter, as a whole. They will be quite unlike anything that is attempted by any other periodical. The Notes will be a valuable help to preachers and teachers, to those who conduct family worship, and to every Bible reader in private meditation. We consider this an important addition to the contents of the paper.

That well-known friend of children, Mrs. Eva Travers Evered Poole, contributes this week the first of a series of chapters on Flowers, which will be continued monthly throughout the year. The department devoted to the young will receive increased attention, and we trust that The Children will be among our warmest friends and supporters.

We again ask the special and studious attention of our readers to the papers on "The Question of the Hour—Foreign Missions." They not only deserve it on their own merits, but also as indicating a tendency not less than revolutionary respecting the conduct of mission work abroad and of all Christian work at home.

To all our readers we heartily wish, in spirit and soul and body, a joyful and prosperous New Year.

JOHN-STREET CHAPEL, MARYLEBONE, W., is a centre of influence which many of the aged and poor of West London have learned to highly appreciate. One part of the work during many winters past has been to minister to the temporal necessities of the needy and infirm, while the Gospel has been faithfully preached and the young have been instructed in the things pertaining to life and godliness. For over eighteen years Mr. W. T. Russell has been identified with this quiet effort, and we trust it will be possible for him to continue at the helm. There is at present urgent need of funds, and other help, of which more may be learned from the nineteenth annual statement, to be had from Mr. Russell, 27, Cambridge-street, Edgware-road.

How Good and How Pleasant.

ONE of the first symptoms of revival is the good and pleasant sight of brethren dwelling together in unity; as on the other hand, the surest evidence of declension is the handiwork of that seventh abomination to the Lord—the sower of discord among brethren.

When Ezekiel prophesied upon the dry bones there was a noise and a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone. Then the sinews and the flesh came upon them, and the skin covered them above. The spirit of life could not come into them until they were united, but when at the prophet's word bone came together to his bone, God clothed the skeleton with flesh, and again bid the prophet prophesy, and the Spirit came into them, and they lived, and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

The union in this vision of Ezekiel is that of an army, a nation, a house, a people; it will be fulfilled in the national resurrection of God's ancient people. But Ezekiel had seen a sublimer vision at the outset of his ministry, in the four living creatures which yet were one; who went and returned like a flash of lightning; for where the Spirit was to go they went, thither was their spirit to go. Ezekiel saw them on the earth in service; John saw them as the Executive carrying out the behests of Him that sitteth upon the throne. They represent the redeemed out of all nations, serving God on earth and bearing rule in the kingdom of heaven. But whether it be Israel on earth, or the Church of Christ on earth or in heaven, God can only work where there is unity.

The Apostle of the Gentiles, however, gives a further view of the purposes of God, and reveals a closer union than that of the houses of Judah and Israel, or even of the fourfold living creature. He shows the Church to be the body of which the risen Christ is the Head, and says that we are the Eve in the second Adam, members of his body, even of his flesh and of his bones.

In his encyclical letter, addressed not to the church at Ephesus alone, but to all the churches of Asia, the Apostle shows that Jesus has broken down the middle wall of partition, and made Jew and Gentile one, reconciling both unto God in one body by the cross and having slain the enmity thereby. If that long separation, which had been originally ordained of God, breeding exclusiveness in the Jew and enmity in the Gentile, could be and was overcome and slain by the Equal of God, the Man who was his Fellow, humbling Himself to the death of the cross: how much more is there power in Christ crucified and risen to overcome every cause of separation which can arise among Christians, whether Jews or Gentiles, who are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit!

How touchingly does the appeal come from Paul, "the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles," to preserve this unity. But observe the sublime parenthesis of chap. iii., the magnificent truths of which are intended to give weight to the entreaty of "the prisoner of the Lord" that we should make it our supreme endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

How are we responding to the beseechings of that beloved and aged prisoner, the echo of whose clanking chain should surely lend an unexhausted emphasis to his words in our ears to-day? Are we honestly endeavouring to keep the sevenfold unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace? Are there two churches in Great Britain—are there two missions in London—are there two individual Christians anywhere—whose supreme endeavour it is to keep this unity?

I do not ask if we are feeling kindly to fellow-Christians in New Zealand, or even to those a mile away. But are we—are there two men upon the earth to-day—entering with all their souls into the desire of the Lord's prisoner and of that prisoner's Lord, as expressed in Eph. iv. 15, 16? Here are, e.g., two, three, four, missions in one locality. Is it from morn till night the one set purpose of any Christian worker in any one of these, to do his part as a joint to supply that which God qualified him to supply, in order that THE WHOLE BODY fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, may make increase of the body to the edifying of itself in love? "Oh, yes, we are most anxious for the welfare of every mission all over London——except these two or three close to us." Yes: that is the little fox that spoils the vines; the dead fly that causes the apothecary's ointment to send forth a stinking savour. This jealousy is a little one of that Babylon which is the perpetual enemy of the Church of God. "O Babylon, that art to be destroyed, happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the Rock."

Behold, how good and how pleasant it would be to the Man upon the throne to see you go to that fellow-Christian whose mission a little interferes with yours or yours with his, and wish him a happy and prosperous year; and then prayerfully consult with him how you can mutually further each other's work; and give the world in that neighbourhood an opportunity of believing that God sent Jesus, because his disciples are so evidently one.

More to follow. M.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

THE New Year meeting on Tuesday morning in the Mission House, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C., was largely attended, and the proceedings were characterised by much warmth. After a season of earnest prayer and hearty singing, a very helpful address was delivered by Rev. H. J. BERGUER, of Islington. It was based on the words, "Labourers together with God," as found in 1 Cor. iii. 9. The responsibilities and privileges involved in this statement were described in the light of the words in the parable: "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard." If one part of the address stood out above others in timely force, it was that in which Mr. Berguer well maintained that nothing can be doubtful in its issue which is undertaken in the fear of God by those who really work together with Him. The concluding exhortation was full of encouragement and incitement to increased energy in work for the Lord during the year just entered upon.

A few kindly words were also spoken by Mr. George Williams, whose generosity in presenting each of the missionaries with two more volumes of the "Biblical Museum" was highly appreciated, and duly acknowledged.

A GOSPEL PURITY COUNCIL FOR INDIA has been formed, with Mr. Alfred S. Dyer for chairman. Before long, it may be expected to have correspondents in the principal cities and towns throughout India. The spirit in which this council has been initiated justifies the expectation that it will be an effective instrument for the promotion of righteousness in India.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Professor Christlieb, of Bonn, Germany.

Our valued contributor, Rev. F. B. Meyer, has undertaken the editorial charge of The Christian Treasury (6d. Marshall Bros.). The January issue is replete with valuable matter, much of it from the Editor's own pen. Among the contributors are Lady Hope, Prof. Elmslie, Rev. R. Shindler, &c.

Since the article on The Agapemonè Iniquity appeared in our issue of Nov. 30, we have received three communications from readers who have suffered from these demoralising doctrines either in themselves or their friends; but no contradictions of the statements which we made have come to hand.

The Hospital records the pleasant fact that during the year which has closed two large bequests to hospitals were made, one of £50,000, by Mr. Henry Quin, the other of £98,000, by Mr. Graham. It is to be regretted that wealthy benefactors do not oftener bear in mind the needs of charitable institutions for the relief of the suffering poor.

We thank the two contemporaries, from which we quote the following paragraphs, for their kind words respecting ourselves :—

THE CHRISTIAN regrets to hear that a housekeeper in a clergyman's family has been discharged because she read, and refused to give up reading, THE CHRISTIAN. If this was her chief crime, she will find plenty of people more than anxious to employ her. Our contemporary should have given the name.—The British Weekly.

When will some of our clergy cease to bring discredit on the Church by their intolerance? One clergyman, it is stated has discharged his housekeeper for no other reason than that she reads THE CHRISTIAN, and refuses to have her liberty interfered with. THE CHRISTIAN is not one of those papers that bitterly oppose the Church; indeed, nothing ever appears in it antagonistic to Churchmen. There is very little controversy of any sort in its columns, and its devotional articles and contributions are very helpful to Churchmen as well as others. Intolerance on the part of official representatives of the Church will do more harm to our cause, and help to lower us in the eyes of enlightened, liberal-minded men, more than all our enemies could do against us.—The Rock.

A paper on "The Journal for To-day," in the New York Christian Union, has the following :—

America needs a journal which represents the Church of Christ, and not certain churches; a journal which shows that Christianity is more than an aggregate of denominations; which is the servant of no party, so that it may tell what Christianity is doing in the world, and not merely what a special organised fragment of it is doing; which promotes union in this spirit of liberty; which has no fear for the faith, and does not court controversy; a journal whose field is the world, whose instrument is truth, whose inspiration is love, and whose magna charta is: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

Such, we may say, without undue assumption, is the scope and programme of THE CHRISTIAN. Christianity greater than all the sectional controversies of our period; charity and firmness; watchfulness against false liberty; the speaking of the truth in love; the tidings of what the Lord is doing by all his servants—these are the aims we desire to reassert at the opening of another year.

"General" Booth has made important proposals towards meeting the distress and misery which the winter season must accentuate on the streets of our great cities. In a circular setting forth his scheme, a brief account is given of what has already been done in connection with the Salvation Army by way of sheltering and feeding the unemployed poor at a nominal cost, and helping fallen women to return to lives of honesty and virtue. During the past ten months 25,000 beds, and 500,000 meals have been provided at the Shelter at Limehouse, and much good influence has been at the same time brought to bear upon most needy people. The General says that girls are now being rescued at the rate of a thousand per annum, placed in situations, restored to their relatives, and enabled to earn an honest living. The Homes at present open are not large enough to accommodate those who would willingly enter them.

The circular referred to states :—

General Booth is prepared to establish at once ten more Rescue Homes, with accommodation for 300 girls (which will enable the Army, by the help of God, to rescue at least another thousand a year), and also to establish ten food and shelter depôts in the Metropolis, six for women and children only, and four for men, with a capacity for supplying 1000 beds per night for women, and 500 for men, and 200,000 meals per week, or at the rate of 547,500 beds, and 10,400,000 meals per annum. In order to be enabled to carry out this proposal, it is necessary to appeal to the country for £15,000, being the amount required to meet the expense of fitting up and furnishing the said twenty buildings. This sum is a comparatively trifling one when due consideration is given to the enormous amount of suffering which will be removed, and good which will be accomplished.

The philanthropic and Christian public will not, we feel sure, allow such a practical scheme as this to fall to the ground. Already Mr. Booth has secured four large buildings in different parts of London suitable for night shelters, and we trust they will speedily be opened, and prove a great blessing to many. The fullest information can be obtained upon application to the financial secretary, 101, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

Mr. Caine, M.P., who is spending three months in India in the furtherance of temperance, is sending home letters in relation to this question. The increase of drunkenness, and of the consumption of ardent spirits, has aroused the attention of native gentlemen, and they have accorded Mr. Caine a hearty and sympathetic co-operation. In the capital of Guzerat 200 of them met him, and formed themselves into a temperance society. Similar results followed his visit to the capital of Baroda. The Maharajah, his brother, and the Prime Minister, united with other influential persons to help forward a total abstinence movement. There was a loud call for such action; and it is gatifying to read of India's own efforts to counteract the deplorable effects of the introduction on the part of Europeans of intoxicating liquors among the Hindoos.

Another Indian agitation may be noted. In Ceylon the British have been the powerful patrons of Buddhism. They took on themselves the responsibility of maintaining Buddhist worship, and the revenues of hundreds of thousands of acres of public land have turned Buddhist priests into voluptuaries and sensualists. Native opinion is growing adverse to this arrangement, and members of the English Church are joining in the protest. There are, doubtless, difficulties, but the attention which is being drawn to these administrative and social questions in India is very hopeful as we begin the year.

A correspondent writes from Italy :—

The climate here is very beautiful, but the surroundings are so vitiated and polluted through Monte Carlo, which is in view, and only one hour from me by rail. We hear so much of its horrors that we daily plead for its downfall. Satan seems to be rampant, for the place is full of visitors. I cannot understand Christians going into the Casino "to look on only."

In looking over hymns of the glorious year 1859, we find some very stirring ones by Mrs. Raban. The following for example :—

Quicken, Lord, thy Church and me;
Send the promised Spirit down;
Holy One! Eternal Three!
All thy former mercies crown:
Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,
Send another Pentecost.

Let the living fire descend,
Cloven tongues on every head;
Tongues which all may comprehend;
Speak thy life unto the dead!
Suddenly the power of grace
Send from heaven and fill the place.

Send the "rushing mighty wind,"
Give the "utterance" Divine;
Let us know the Spirit's mind,
Let us speak in words Divine!
Send a pure baptismal shower,
Tongues of fire and words of power.

As of old so be it now;
Now the glorious scene repeat;
See thy humbled people bow,
Waiting lowly at thy feet,
Crying all, with one accord,
"Send thy promised Spirit, Lord!"

We have lately found the devoted and saintly writer in deep poverty and agonising pain.

The doubtful thoughts of many a man have been moulded into mistake, hardened into heresy, and crystallised into crime (theologically speaking), by injudicious judging and unjudicial judgment, whereas a wiser treatment might have saved the doubter, and converted him into a confirmed Christian fellow-worker. A case in point. A member of an evangelistic mission had imbibed a heterodoxy very fashionable nowaday, and not only held but taught it. Instead of being, according to the tradition of the elders, cornered, judged, reprimanded, and expelled, to spread his craze elsewhere, the wise and spiritual teacher at the head of affairs treated him friendly, diverted his attention, brought him out of his corner, gave him something to do, and made a useful man of him. There are hardened heretics, in the pulpit and out of it, who might have been made excellent workers in the Church on earth, and prevented doing multiplied mischief, had they been treated with spiritual sense and tact, Christian kindness, courtesy, and brotherliness. Men's creed goes with their will, and their will follows their affection, as Adam followed Eve. They may be loved out of their errors, if their restoration be sought in a spirit of meekness; but the north wind of harsh condemnation will make them bind their errors closer round them.

An interesting, though by no means novel, correspondence on "Temperance and Total Abstinence," has been proceeding in The Times. It is well that a subject so closely affecting the morale and the general well-being of the nation should receive ample attention in the daily press. As we have indicated, the arguments pro and con have not been different from those frequently advanced before, but the drink evil has now become so monotonously prevalent that nothing new remains to be said about it. When we leave the airy regions of precept, and descend to matter-of-fact practice, we find that the teetotalers have it all their own way.

Rev. W. Bryan, from a parish experience of thirty-four years, declares that the minister who does not himself abstain, will accomplish very little in the way of reclaiming drunkards. We fancy every temperance worker of any standing could tell the same story. The moral, of course, is that the man or woman who stands on his natural rights, and cares for nothing else, may make a fair show of argument in his own defence; but if he would have a share in the stern fight against the admitted evils of the drink, he can only attain that honourable position by adding the force of example to that of precept.

Would that all kings, rulers, governors, and persons in authority, cherished the same feelings towards the drink "demon" as the Chief Khame of Bechuanaland, who lately wrote as follows to the Assistant-Commissioner of that Protectorate:—

I fear Lo Bengula less than I fear brandy. I fought with Lo Bengula when he had his father's great warriors from Natal, and drove him back, and he never came again, and God who helped me then would help me again. Lo Bengula never gives me a sleepless night. But to fight against drink is to fight against demons, and not against men. I dread the white man's drink more than all the assegais of the Matabele, which kills men's bodies, and it is quickly over, but drink puts devils into men, and destroys both their souls and their bodies for ever. Its wounds never heal.

"The Native Congress which met last week at Allahabad is a warning that a despotism, however benevolent and however indispensable, is beset by peculiar difficulties in an age of discussion." So it is written in a Times leader on New Year's Day. How much more need to be warned when the despotism is not benevolent. Mr. Dyer's story of a monstrous injustice, committed in the name of law, by an English Court of Justice at Patna, is a far louder warning than the Native Congress at Allahabad. The reply of Sir John Gorst to a question asked by Mr. H. J. Wilson in the House of Commons a few weeks ago, is shown to have been glaringly inaccurate. Is it not time to have a Native Congress in England to protest against Secretaries and Under-Secretaries of State throwing dust into our eyes respecting questions of this kind? See Mr. Dyer's painful narrative, pp. 27, 28, of the present issue.

A correspondent of The Times takes up the tale of the growth of Chinese cultivation of opium. He maintains, however, that the advance in home supply is not accompanied by a sensible decrease in the imports from India. The plain English of this is that we, as a nation, continue to derive an income of some £8,000,000 from the excesses and miseries of the richer part of the Chinese people; while the poorer classes of Chinese are creating a demand for a cheaper home-grown article. And so the enslavement of the entire nation to this fatal habit appears to be a matter of early accomplishment. As to this The Times correspondent and the writer of a leading article on the subject have no word of regret or remorse; neither apparently have the Indian Government. Yet there are some who sneer at the idea of God's righteous judgments overtaking the English people for their share of the responsibility.

Our enterprising young friend, The British Weekly, gives a summary of its articles during the past year on young women, under the head of "Tempted London." These papers on the young men and young women of London have rendered splendid service both to the Church and nation, and as published in separate form, we trust they will be very widely read and studied.

The brief letter by Rev. E. Kevill-Davis, on another page, will be read with interest and satisfaction by all lovers of religious liberty. Roman Catholics complain loudly of what they term Protestant "proselytism," though they are themselves ready to compass sea and land to make proselytes. Mr. Davis deserves all sympathy and support in his successful endeavour to preserve the "three children" from the violation of their faith and freedom.

The Times, in a review of the horse racing of the past year, speaks of two "noble" turfites who have won between them during that period more than £53,000. The total value of the stakes of the year's "sport" was about £400,000. One is inclined to ask: What commodity have these winners supplied in exchange for their gains? What of the multitudes who have not only lost their hardly earned (perhaps dishonestly gotten) money, but have lost honour, peace of mind, and, in some cases, the forfeiture of life itself? We should heartily like to see an English Parliament with moral backbone enough to prohibit, under the severest penalties, the staking of any money on a horse race, whether by aristocratic or plebeian gamblers.

No words are more suitable for a new year than those of our Lord in John vi. He had been speaking of a union with Him in his suffering in the flesh for sin, which offended many of those who had followed Him. He told them that a carnal hearing without the inward discernment would profit nothing: that it was the Holy Spirit which gave life to the soul. How far does this saying reach! What a craving there is among preachers to please the eyes and ears of worshippers! Would that this utterance of the Lord could be written on the hearts of preachers and hearers alike.

The recent address of the Duke of Abercorn to the Society of Arts has again drawn attention to the subject of developing native Irish industries. He urged that Government should assist the fisheries, especially on the Atlantic seaboard, the number of men and vessels now engaged in deep-sea fishing being only one-fourth of what it was forty years ago. The speaker pointed to the fact that in and about the counties of Donegal, Derry, and Tyrone, £20,000 is annually earned by sewing and embroidery (much of the work being done by women and girls at their own homes), and suggested that Ireland might furnish much of the million pounds' worth of lace which comes to England every year. Why, too, should not Irish farmers largely export cheese, butter, and eggs, and why should not more attention be paid to the manufacture of tweeds?

Two things, however, are wanting. The necessary capital, which in Ulster has been furnished by private philanthropists, might either wholly or in part be supplied by the Government; secondly, the people must be carefully and patiently taught habits of industry, energy, and thrift, without which capital will be of little use. Progress in this respect must needs be slow; there must be a period of patient nurture; but the eminent success which has attended the Donegal Industrial Fund, now holding its fourth annual sale of the products of Irish industries, is fraught with much encouragement for the future.

The important paper on popular amusements by Pastor A. G. Brown, from which we make some extracts, forms an introduction to the annual report of his mission work, copies of which may be procured at this office, price 4d. Mr. Brown feels very strongly on the matter, and by no means expresses himself in rosewater phraseology. It is much to be desired that a friendly and representative conference should be called to consider, in the light of Bible teaching, the relations of the churches to amusements.

The false tolerance of our times that charges the friends of the Reformation with narrowness, and that maintains that the Romanism of to-day is not that of the past, should ponder the language of one of the most widely circulated Romish missionary journals. The following, from the Continental correspondent of The Nonconformist, is, it is stated, a literal translation of the words of the Annales Catholiques:—

As vicar of Jesus Christ the Pope is truly on earth the sign of God. Earth has put on his forehead the kingly diadem; God has caused his own attributes to be reflected in him. God is truth, and the Sovereign Pontiff is the organ of truth, for he is the infallible mouth which defines and utters to the world the dogmas and principles of eternal order. When he speaks light is found on that side of the question on which he speaks, and darkness on the other.

That against which English Christians once protested was that the Pope assumed to be the representative of Peter. But his claims now stretch far beyond that of an Apostle, and few things are more serious than the objections taken to protests against such blasphemy and deceiving pretensions.

The Christian Socialist states that in the manufacture of glass there is a process in which young lads have to handle lead. Boys who are employed at glassworks, and upon the strength and dexterity of whose right hands depend their daily bread, get what is termed a "dropped hand," the result being "present loss of wages and diminished efficiency in all future time." This, says the writer, "is like a sentence of death passed upon them." One would think that everything possible would be done by employers to prevent such painful results, but our contemporary states that, although an American manufacturer recently, in this country, pointed out a simple and inexpensive adaptation which superseded the necessity of the handling of the lead, such was the apathy displayed by his brother manufacturers that he could not get one of them to adopt it. We hope that some Member of Parliament, in whose borough there are glass manufactories, will take the trouble to make inquiries as to the facts.

XI.—THE WORD OF GOD, AND ITS EDGE.

HEBREWS iv. 12.

WE all have to do with God. "Him with whom we have to do." You cannot break the connection. You must do with Him as a rebel, if not as a friend; on the ground of works, if not on the ground of grace; at the great white throne, if not in the fleeting days of time; you cannot do without God. You cannot do as you would if there were no God. You cannot avoid having to do with Him, for even though you were to say there was no God, doing violence to the clearest instincts of your being, yet still you would breathe his air, eat his provender, occupy his world, and stand at last before his bar.

And, if you will pardon the materialism of the reference, I will follow the suggestion of my text, and say that the God with whom we have to do has eyes. "The eyes of Him with whom we have to do." "Thou art a God that seest" was the startled exclamation of an Egyptian slave girl whose childhood had been spent amid the vast statues of gods who had eyes with far-away stony stare, but saw not. And she was right. "The Lord looketh from heaven, his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men."

Those Eyes miss no one.—"There is not any creature not manifest in His sight." The truest goodness is least obtrusive of itself. It steals unnoticed through the world, filling up its days with deeds and words of gentle kindness, which are known only to Heaven, and herein it finds its sufficient reward. It prays behind closed doors: it exercises a vigorous self-denial in secret; it does its works of mercy by stealth. Thus the great blatant world of men, with its trumpets and heralds and newspaper notices, knows little of it, and cannot find the nooks where God's wild flowers bloom in inaccessible heights, for his eye alone. But the Father seeth in secret. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous. His eyes run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show Himself strong on behalf of those whose heart is perfect toward Him. Do you want guidance, look up; those eyes wait to guide by a glance. Are you in sorrow, they will film with tears. Are you going astray, they shall beckon you back, and break your heart as Peter's. You will come to find your heaven in the light radiated by the eye of God, when once you have learnt to meet it, clad in the righteousness of Jesus.

Unconverted reader, remember there is no screen from the eye of God. His eyes are as a flame of fire, and our strongest screens crackle up as thinnest gauze before the touch of that holy flame. Even rocks and hills are inadequate to hide from the face of Him that sits upon the throne. Whither shall I go from thy presence? That question is unanswered, and unanswerable. It has stood upon the page of Scripture for 3000 years, and no one yet of all the myriads that have read it has been able to devise a reply. Heaven says, Not here. Hell says, Not here. It is not among angels, or the lost, or in the vast, silent spaces of eternity. There is no creature anywhere not manifest to his sight. He who made vultures able from immense heights to discern the least morsel on the desert waste has eyes as good as they. And think how terrible are the eyes of God. When Egypt's chivalry had pursued Israel into the depths of the sea, they suddenly turned to flee. Why? Not because of thunder, or lightning, or voice; but because of a look. "The Lord looked out of the cloud, and troubled the Egyptians." Ah, sinner, how terrible will it be for thee to abide under the frown of God. "With the froward He will show Himself froward."

Those Eyes miss nothing.—"All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do." It is said of the Lord Jesus, on one occasion, that He entered into Jerusalem, and into the Temple, and when He had looked round about on all things He went out. It was his last, long, farewell look. But note its comprehensiveness. Nothing escaped it. We look only on parts of things, and often look without seeing. But the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart. "Naked and open." This is a sacrificial phrase, indicating the priestly act of throwing the victim on its back before him, so that it lay, exposed to his gaze, helpless to recover itself, ready for the knife. Ah! how eagerly we try to hide and cloak our sin. We dare not pen a truthful diary; we dread the illness which would unlock our tongues in wholesale chatterings; we shrink from the loving gaze of our dearest. We deceive man, and sometimes ourselves, but not our great High Priest. He sees all—that secret sin, that lurking enmity, that closed chamber, that hidden burglar, that masked assassin, that stowaway, that declension of heart, that little rift within the lute, that speck of decay in the luscious fruit. And thus it is that men are kept out of the Canaan of God's rest, because He sees the evil heart of unbelief which departs from Himself, and on account of which He swears now, as of old, "they shall not enter into my rest."

Is it not a marvel that He who knows so much about us should love us still?—It, indeed, were an inexplicable mystery, save for the truth of the words which so sweetly follow: "Seeing, then, that we have a great High Priest." He has a Priest's heart. His scrutiny is not one of morbid or idle curiosity, but of a surgeon, who intently examines the source of disease with pity and tenderness, and resolves to extirpate it as quickly and as painlessly as possible. Is it not frequently the case that fuller knowledge will beget love, which once seemed impossible? There are some people whose faces are so hard, and their eyes so cold, that we are instantly repelled; but if we knew all, how they have been pierced and wounded, and disappointed, we should begin to pity them, and pity is close kinsman to love. The Saviour has known us from all eternity, our downsittings and uprisings, our secret possibilities of evil, our unfathomed depths of waywardness and depravity, and yet He loves us and will love us.

He knows all,
But loves us better than He knows.

And out of this love, which wells up perennially in the heart of Jesus, unfrozen by the winter of our neglect, unstaunched by the demands of our fickleness, there comes the stern discipline of which this passage proceeds to speak. In majestic phrase the Apocalyptic seer tells how he beheld the Word of God ride forth on his snow-white steed, arrayed in crimson robes, whilst the many crowns of empire flashed upon his noble brow. Two features are specially noted in his appearance, his eyes were as a flame of fire, this characteristic looks back over the words we have considered; out of his mouth goeth a sharp two-edged sword, this looks forward to the words which now invite us. We must never divorce these two. The eyes and the sword. Not the eyes only, for of what use would it be to see and not strike. Not the sword only, for to strike without seeing would give needless pain; this would be surgery blindfolded. But the searching, tender vision followed by the swift and decisive flash of the sword of amputation and deliverance. Oh, who will now submit to that stroke, wielded by the gentle hand that often carried healing and blessing, and was nailed to the cross; guided by unerring wisdom, and nerved by Almighty strength? Not death, but life and fruitfulness, freedom and benediction are all awaiting that one blow of emancipation. That sword is the Word of God.

THE WORD OF GOD IS LIVING.—The words He speaks are spirit and life (John vi. 63). Wherever they fall, though into dull and lifeless soil, they begin to breed life, and produce results like themselves. They come into the heart of an abandoned woman, and straightway there is compunction for the past, vows of amendment, and the hasty rush to become an evangelist to others. They come into the heart of a dying robber, and immediately he refrains from blasphemy, and rebukes his fellow, and announces the Messiahship, the blamelessness, the approaching glory, of the dying Saviour. They come into hearts worn out with the wild excesses of the great pagan ages, and ill-content though enriched with the spoils of art and refinement and philosophy in the very zenith of their development, and, lo, the moral waste begins to sprout with harvests of holiness, and to blossom with the roses of heaven. If only those words, spoken from the lips of Christ, be allowed to work in the conscience, there will be forthwith the stir of life.

THE WORD OF GOD IS ACTIVE, i.e. energetic.—Beneath its spell the blind see, the deaf hear, the paralysed are nerved with new energy, the dead stir in their graves and come forth. There are few things more energetic than life. Put a seed into the fissure of a rock, and it will split it in twain from top to bottom. Though walls, and rocks, and ruins impede the course of the seedling, yet it will force its way to the light, and air, and rain. And when the word of God enters the heart, it is not as a piece of furniture or lumber. It asserts itself, and strives for mastery, and compels men to give up sin, to make up long-standing feuds, to restore ill-gotten gains, to strive to enter into the strait gate. "Now ye are pruned," said our Lord, "through the word that I have spoken to you." The words of Christ are his winnowing-fan, with which He is wont to purge his floor, whether in the heart or the world. We are not therefore surprised that a leading tradesman in a thriving commercial centre said that the visit of two evangelists, who did little else than reiterate the word of God, was as good as a revival of trade, because it led so many people to pay up debts which were reckoned as lost.

THE WORD OF GOD IS SHARP.—Its sharpness is threefold. (1) It is sharp to pierce.—On the day of Pentecost as Peter wielded the sword of the Spirit, it pierced 3000 to the heart, and they fell wounded to the death before him, crying, "What shall we do?" Often since have strong men been smitten to the dust under the effect of that same sword, skilfully used. And this is the kind of preaching we need. Men are urged to accept of the gift of God, and many seem to comply with the invitation, but in the process of time they fall away. Is not the cause in this, that they have never been wounded to the death of their self-esteem, their heart has never been pierced to the letting of the blood of their own life; they have never been brought into the dust of death. Oh! for Boanerges, able to pierce the cardboard armour of excuses of vain hopes, behind which men shield themselves, that many may cry with Ahab, pierced between the joints of the harness: "Turn thine hand, and carry me out of the battle, for I am wounded!"

(2) It is sharp to divide.—With his sharp knife the priest was accustomed to dissect the joints of the animal, and to open to view even the marrow of the bones. Every hair was searched, every limb examined; and thus the sacred gift was passed, and permitted to be offered in worship. And God's scrutiny is not satisfied with the external appearance and profession. It goes deeper far. It enters into those mysterious regions of the nature, where soul and spirit, purpose, intention, motive, and impulse, hold their secret court, and carry on the hidden machinery of human life. Who can tread the mysterious confines where soul and spirit touch? What is the line of demarcation? Where does the one end and the other begin? We cannot tell; but that mystic word of God could cut the one from the other, as easily as a tailor the selvage from the cloth. It is at home in distinctions which are too fine drawn and minute for human apprehension. It assumes an office which Christ refused when He said, "Who made me a judge and divider over you?"

(3) It is sharp to criticise and judge.—"Quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart." Christ is eager about these. Because what a man thinks and intends in his heart, that he will be sooner or later in life. We must expect to have our most secret thoughts, relations, and purposes questioned, criticised, and measured by the word of God. No court of inquiry was ever presided over by a more exact inquisitor than this. The corpses of the dead past are exhumed; the old lumber-rooms with their padlocked boxes are explored; the accounts of bygone years are audited and taxed. God is critic of all the secrets of the heart. As each thought or intention passes to and fro, He searches it, as they do the dockyard labourers. He is constantly weighing in the balance thoughts and aims light as air, and unsubstantial as the texture of the soap-bubble.

On one occasion, when Saul had spared the spoils of a doomed city, together with its monarch, the latter came to Samuel, not as a criminal, but delicately as a pampered friend. And Samuel said, "As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord." Thus is it that we have spared too many of our sins, at the risk of our irreparable rejection from the throne of true manhood and righteousness. How much better to let Christ do his work of amputation and excision. If we do not know ourselves, let us ask Him to search us. If we cannot cut off the offending member, let us look to Him to rid us of it.

Do not fear Him; close after these terrible words, as the peal of bells after the crash of the storm on the organ at Freiburg, we are told that, "He was tempted in all points like as we are," and that, "He can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities." "Does she sing well?" asked the trainer of a new operatic singer. "Splendidly," was the reply; "but if I had to bring her out, I would first break her heart." He meant that one who had not been broken by sorrow could not touch the deepest chords of human life. Ah! there is no need for this with our Lord Jesus; reproach broke his heart, and has made Him able to understand and soothe and save all who come unto God by Him.

A NEW AFRICAN EXPLORER.

FROM "THE TIMES."

AFRICA continues to be the continent of surprises and novelties. Europeans visit even its very centre; and everyone of these, if he has eyes to see and ears to hear, has a tale of wonder and interest to tell when he returns home. It is not only on the Zanzibar coast, not only down in the Lake Nyassa region, or in the Cape interior; not only on the Niger and by the Cameroon, that white men, and especially Englishmen, are found wandering and sojourning among the natives. Into those mysterious regions where Livingstone found his death while vainly seeking for the sources of the Nile, the region which Cameron and the Portuguese explorers skirted, more than one Englishman has succeeded in penetrating from the West, while not long ago a couple of Germans reached it from the East. One of those Englishmen has just returned home, and will tell the story of his wanderings at the next meeting (January 7) of the Royal Geographical Society. Mr. F. S. Arnot is a countryman of Livingstone, and from Livingstone personally he, when a boy, received that touch of enthusiasm which gave him a longing to enter the heart of Africa. That was twenty-four years ago, and seven years ago he was able to carry his boyish wish into effect.

In September, 1881, Mr. Arnot arrived in Natal, and not many weeks ago he returned home for the first time, quitting the continent by the opposite coast. Meantime he has crossed Africa diagonally, partly by Livingstone's route, but with many divergences into little known or wholly unknown regions. In company part of the way with that mighty hunter, Mr. Selous, Mr. Arnot made his way through Khama's kingdom, north through the Kaharrai and the desert country lying between Bechuanaland and the Zambesi, till he reached that river near Sesheke. Mr. Arnot was a volunteer missionary pioneer, though unconnected with any missionary society. His outfit was of the most slender character. He travelled practically unarmed. He was almost everywhere received with friendly welcome by chiefs and people, who clearly appreciated his confidence. If he had any grievances he never took the law into his own hands; he invariably appealed to native tribunals such as they are, and never without receiving practical justice. Thus he faithfully followed his master's example, and has met with a fair share of his master's success.

Proceeding up the Zambesi Mr. Arnot visited Lealui, the town of Liwanika, the chief of the Barotse empire. The chief received him with great friendliness, and entertained him for some months, but would not permit Mr. Arnot to carry out his cherished wish, to visit the mountainous country to the north. Mr. Arnot therefore struck north-west, through that wonderful country of rivers, to Bihé, the well-known town on the Portuguese frontier, proceeding thence to the West Coast for letters. The hydrography of this strange region he has helped to unravel. One can stand almost on the very spot where rivers rise that flow north, south, east, and west.

It was not till the end of 1884 that Mr. Arnot found himself making his way eastward towards the sources of the Zambesi and the Congo, to the country of the Garanganje, a name which only quite recently has found a place on our maps. He crossed the upper tributaries of the Liba (one of the feeders of the Zambesi) at Lake Dilolo, and, making his way into the magnificent valley of the Lualaba, found a welcome (in spite of the enmity of Arab slavers) at the capital of the great King Msiri, or Msidi, the Chief of the Garanganje. Here Mr. Arnot stayed two years, and made the best use of his time. His important contributions to geography will no doubt be described by himself in detail in his forthcoming book. One thing he seems clearly to have proved, that Livingstone's Leeba, coming from the north-east, is the real Zambesi, and not the river which comes out of Lake Dilolo. All the country here, though a plateau, is so flat that great areas are periodically flooded by the numerous rivers, so that we find lakes on maps in places which are really only temporary swamps.

Msiri's kingdom, where Mr. Arnot spent two years, and about which he has so much to tell, is, like so many other African kingdoms, of comparatively recent date. It lies in the wide triangle formed by the Lualaba and Luapaula. Msiri is really a native of the Unyamwesi country, to the east of Tanganyika, where his father was a copper trader. The late King Sanda took a fancy to him, and made him his successor. He has shown great governing powers, and has gradually extended his kingdom until it embraces an immense area, and includes many tributary chiefs. What between Kangombé, King of Lovale, on the one side, and Msiri on the other, the power of the great empire of Muato Yanvo has been completely broken, and it has almost disappeared from the map.

In consequence of Msiri's many conquests, the remnants of various tribes are gathered into his kingdom, and he has also with him a good many of his own people, the Wanyamwesi. Towards all he endeavours in a crude way to administer justice Still here, as elsewhere, the slave trade is rampant In his expeditions Msiri captures great numbers of slaves. These are sold by their captors to Arab and Zanzibari traders, as well as to the many native traders that come from Bihé, and from the countries of Zumbo, Vabisso, Malungu, and even Uganda. The large quantities of ivory, copper, salt, and slaves that these Garanganje people have for sale make Msiri's town a most important market. This town, Mr. Arnot tells us, is an immense inhabited plain, called by the people Mukurru. Msiri has 500 wives, who are really officers of State, one of whom represents him at the Court of each of his minor chiefs.

After two years' stay with this interesting chief, Mr. Arnot left for the West Coast. Like Lieutenant Wissmann, he has to tell of great regions depopulated to the west of the Lualaba, mainly the route of the slave trade. Of the natives themselves, of their enterprise and hospitality, he has formed a high opinion, and even speaks well of the "gentlemanly consideration" of the Portuguese. Altogether, an interesting paper may be expected from Mr. Arnot, and those who are interested in Africa will look forward to the publication of his book.

SELF-HELP FOR THE BLIND.—An excellent sketch of the methods adopted at Dr. Campbell's Normal College for the Blind, Norwood, is given in last week's Queen. It is astonishing what can be done in the way of education and acquirement by those sightless friends.

WATERCRESS AND FLOWER GIRL MISSION AND BRIGADE.—A practical and real work is effected by this agency, whose headquarters are in Clerkenwell-close. In summer and winter much is done to instruct and comfort young and old women of a very needy class. The deserving are relieved in many ways, and free meals are given, especially at this time of year. The aims and methods of the Mission are well set forth in a little tract, "Shall they Perish?" which may be had of the hon. superintendent, Mr. J. A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C. At present the funds of the Mission are very low.

SPEZIA.—This important port of Italy stands in great need of a hospital, in which Protestant patients may be treated. The members of the evangelical churches in the town are generally poor; but they would not be alone in the enjoyment of the benefits of the institution, as many British steamers call, and sometimes leave sick sailors behind for weeks and months. To be handed over to the care of priests and nuns is not pleasant to Protestants; while to Italians who are not Romanists, the Catholic hospital is a dreaded place of molestation and cruelty. It is reasonably believed that the founding of a Protestant hospital will induce many parents to send their children to the evangelical schools. A suitable place may be secured and furnished for about £4000, and there is no doubt but the institution would be easily maintained afterwards. Among Englishmen to whom reference may be made, is Mr. M. Pollack, Mayor of Birmingham; while full information may be obtained from Mr. A. A. Coates, proprietor of the Grand Hotel Royal, Croce di Malta, Spezia.

Christ and the Scriptures.

BY REV. DR. PIERSON.*

THE Bible is confessedly the most remarkable Book of the ages; and Jesus Christ is confessedly the most remarkable Person of the ages. And this Book and this Person are so remarkably connected that the mysterious link which unites them is not less wonderful than the Book and the Man themselves.

On close examination and comparison of the Holy Scriptures and the Holy Child, we have found that He bears to them so close a relation that they actually contain a minute history of Jesus centuries before his birth. Here is a biographical sketch, a kind of portrait of a man, prepared, without doubt, hundreds of years previous to his advent. The very year and place of his birth, his life and death, his crucifixion and resurrection, with many of the most marked features of his character and career, even to the beast on which he made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, and the treacherous bargain by which a disciple betrayed Him, the exact sum which was the traitor's hire, the insults that were heaped upon Him at his trial, the mockeries that derided his dying agonies, and the peculiar facts of his burial: these and many other minute matters are recorded long before one of the events either happened, or could have been foreseen by the most sagacious conjecture.

Take a man of intelligence, a stranger to the Christian religion; place before him the Jewish Scriptures, calling special attention to the portrait which they furnish of one whom they call "God's servant," or "Anointed." Then ask him to note that the Old Testament writer lived more than three centuries before the Christian era; and that we have historic proof that those Jewish Scriptures, in their complete form, were in the hands of the Jews for three hundred years before that era began. Then place before him a copy of the Christian Scriptures, and ask him to read the Gospels, and note that they were never in existence till at least four hundred years after the last Old Testament writer laid down his pen. And, without suggesting any Divine or supernatural element, either in the writings, or in the person of Christ, leave him to compare the two. With what amazement would he find all the main facts recorded in these Gospel narratives, long before anticipated in these writings? The fact of this correspondence is so familiar to us that its force is greatly lessened.

Of this mysterious correspondence between the Jewish Scriptures and the person of Christ, those Scriptures themselves give us a solution. They declare that this wonderful person is the Son of God, and the Messiah, anointed of God for the salvation of men; and that so important was his advent that the holy men of old were inspired of God to tell, in advance, the story of his life and death.

* FROM MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

THE CRIPPLES' NURSERY.—In a booklet, "Light among the Shadows," some account is given of the good work carried on at 15, Park-place, Clarence-gate, Regent's-park, N.W. Many a crippled child enters sick, deformed, and helpless, and leaves in a robust and healthy condition, able to learn a trade, and even earn a living. There is a seaside branch at Margate, but the institution is sadly hampered through want of funds. Mrs. Kirk is the lady superintendent of the nursery.

ROYAL ALFRED AGED MERCHANT SEAMEN'S INSTITUTION.—The Home at Belvedere, Kent, is large enough to accommodate 200 old sailors, but the funds at disposal are so limited that only about half that number can enjoy the advantages of the Institution. Many sick and aged sailors are receiving out-pensions at the rate of £12 a year. Those who wish to know more of this agency for helping "Poor Jack" should write for information to the secretary, Mr. W. E. Denny, 58, Fenchurch-street, E.C.

Isaiah's Inspiration.*

THIS is in some respects a valuable addition to "The Expositor's Bible" Series. The author has spared no pains to make his work successful, and none can question the scholarly ability he displays. He has laboured to arrange the prophecies in chronological order, and to connect them with historical events which transpired at the same time. By means of Isaiah's prophecies he has sought also to learn more of Isaiah himself, and to discover traces of development exhibited in his doctrine. Many of his readers will differ from his conclusions, but none will fail to recognise the ability with which the work is done. The author is practical as well as expository. The Land and Drink questions receive faithful treatment; while on page 163 creeds are described as modern illustrations of "bargains with hell"—a comparison which some of his readers will regard as illustrating how foolish a thing a wise man can say. Upon geographical and historical questions the author treats with great clearness. There can be no doubt that the book contains much valuable and interesting exposition. But we are bound to point out what seems to us its serious errors. The author's own words are his worst condemnation. Here, for instance, is his definition of Isaiah's inspiration:—

> To Isaiah inspiration was nothing more nor less than the possession of certain strong moral and religious convictions, which he felt he owed to the communication of the Spirit of God, and according to which he interpreted, and even dared to foretell the history of his people and the world (p. 372). There is thus, with great modifications, an analogy between the prophet and the scientific observer of the present day....Old Testament prophets...seized hold of principles as conspicuous and certain to them as the laws of nature are to the scientist; and out of their conviction of these they proclaimed the necessity of certain events (p. 373).

Such a theory of inspiration of course destroys all certainty in the prophet's predictions. But the author is consistent with his own theory, and speaks of "changes and inconsistencies in the prediction" (p. 371), and describes the vision of Jerusalem's glory in Isa. ii. 1—5 as "a Utopia"—a "dream of the impossible" (p. 25), produced "by his imagination" (p. 27); a "castle in the air, with no ladders to it from earth" (p. 34), requiring him to "recall his words" (28). A theory that involves such conclusions is self-condemned.

A further indication of the author's doctrinal position may be gathered from his explanation of the live altar coal by which Isaiah's iniquity was purged. He connects the coal rather with the domestic hearth than with the altar of sacrifice. He speaks of Isaiah as "presenting his guilt to God upon his own lips," as being "his own altar." "The only sacrifice he offers is the purely spiritual one of confession" (pp. 72, 73). This seems to us like making the sacrifice of Christ an unnecessary thing. Paul recoiled with horror from the suggestion that "Christ died in vain"; but that conclusion is inevitable from this author's exposition.

CONTROVERSY.—Many people deprecate controversy altogether. Especially when the truths of religion are the subject, there is a strong aversion in many minds to everything of the sort. But, where there is much intellectual activity on any subject, controversies are sure to arise, for the simple reason that men will not think alike. Most of the Apostle Paul's writings are controversial. They were called out by errors, which it was necessary for him to oppose. There has never been any great religious revival which has not been connected with active controversy. If evils attend it, at least it furnishes a sign of life, and almost anything is better than stagnation. The thing to be desired is not the complete avoidance of controversy, which is not to be expected, but the regulation of it according to Christian principles.—Scribner's Magazine.

AMERICAN NOTES.

THE oldest student of Princeton Theological Seminary, New Jersey, is Henry Chapman, seventy-two years old. Disappointed in early life from educating himself for the Gospel ministry, the desire of his life never left him. Five years ago an inherited fortune put him in circumstances of freedom, and he immediately began with enthusiasm the study of theology.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, the new pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, is pushing his congregational work upon a most practical basis. In a recent speech he said: "If we are going to carry the Gospel to the poor, we must practise what we preach. It will not do to go to the poor and say to them that God so loved mankind that He let his Son die for them, so that they may be saved, and allow them to live in crowded and filthy tenement houses from which God's free air and light are shut out. . . . If we could close up every church door in Brooklyn on next Sunday, and put a placard on every door to the effect that to-day, instead of preaching the Gospel, we are going to practice it, and every man and woman, Bible in hand, would visit the abodes of the poor, we would accomplish more than all the combined eloquence of Brooklyn."

The many millions of the great A. T. Stewart estate are all gone, in twelve brief years. "Lawyers, thieves, jealous relatives, unwise sales and investments and inevitable accidents and incidents of business have used it all up. 'The last of the Stuarts,' the pitiful consummation of a great royal line, was not more sad than is the disintegration and decay of this other Stewart line. Gone! Completely gone! Ignobly gone! And only mockery of the name left." His body, before it reached its splendid mausoleum, was stolen; none appear to-day to rise up and call him blessed.

Mr. Thomas Needham has closed a three weeks' mission in Emilystown, New Jersey, where the Lord was pleased to use this earnest evangelist to the conversion of many, and the quickening of many more.

Mr. D. L. Moody's work in Portland, Oregon, and Walla-Walla, Washington Territory, has been crowned with much of the old time blessing. The crowds and eagerness to hear have been quite as in days of yore. Mr. G. C. Stebbins has joined him at San Francisco, as leader of the praise.

Rev. W. J. Erdman, the delightful Bible teacher, has settled in Ashville, North Carolina, and through the Southern States is entering altogether new fields of labour.

"A PEEP INTO AN EAST-END PARISH."—Rev. Arthur J. Robinson's report of work in the parish of St. Mary Matfelon, Whitechapel, is as interesting in character as it is novel in form. Varied in size as well as in colour, these many pages tell of unfaltering work in the open air, among the masses, in the lodging-houses, among Jews, and in the slums. Going forth in faith and hope, the labourers have been greatly encouraged, and much blessing has been manifest on many hands. Among the young and the sick, also, offices of kindness and love have been discharged, and men and women have been made to rejoice in view of temporal help and spiritual light. If one tithe of the work set forth in this report were done, the organising mind would deserve warm commendation; but, as there is reason to believe that the half has not been told, it is only fitting that God should be praised for those servants of Christ who toil weary hours in the day and night to rescue the perishing, and care for the dying of this well-known East-end parish. Copies of the "Peep" may be had from Mr. Robinson, whose address is The Rectory, Whitechapel.

WHAT THE FLOWERS TEACH US.

BY EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

HUNDREDS and hundreds of years ago, the Lord Jesus, our great Teacher, often walked over the beautiful fields of Palestine with his disciples, talking and trying to teach them.

He found them very dull. The way by which they seemed best able to remember great truths was when He gave them object-lessons, or wrapped up these truths in nature-pictures; teaching them through the bread they ate, the water they drank, the sweet-voiced birds trilling music over their heads, the dying sunsets, or the thousand and one gorgeous flowers that kissed their feet as they trod them down. Once when He was trying to persuade them that God their Father would always love and care for and help them, He pointed to the gaily painted flowers and bade them "consider" how they grew.

When Jesus said, "consider," He meant "consider"—He did not say "Look how they grow!" for a look may be only a momentary thing, while "to consider," means carefully to observe or notice anything, and to think over it. Shall we to-day think over the lessons the flowers teach us? Shall we "consider" how they grow?

Flowers grow first in God's great mind; and as the flowers always are what God means them to be, and do exactly what He wishes them to do, when we gaze at a delicately tinted, exquisitely shaped flower, we feel sure we are getting a little glimpse at the wealth of loveliness that is in God.

Every flower grows in its own way, different kinds and colours in the same soil, exactly according to God's plan for it.

Flowers grow by feeding! Do you know that flowers can feed? Oh, no! you say; but it is true. Their little roots are like so many mouths, drinking in the softly falling rain or dew from heaven, or the drops from your tiny watering can. Then each leaf is a "mouth," and by its leaves a little plant breathes, drinking in from the air the gas it needs for its life, and giving out the gas you and I need for our lives. What do you think of that? I expect you never guessed that flowers had anything so important to do with you!

How do flowers grow? They grow in two ways—at the top, and at the root. The stem, leaves, flowers, and seeds, are what we see growing, and are beautiful, showy, and pleasant. We may call this the outside or top-growth. But underneath the brown earth, unseen, the long thin roots are growing down, down, down; and if it were not that there is this hidden root-growth, giving stability and strength, we should have no leaf, or flower, or fruit growth on the top of any little plant.

Ah! wait a minute; I think the flowers have taught us a great deal already. Shall we gather up their lessons and store them in our hearts?

How do souls grow? Why, just as flowers do. If a soul is a "plant of God's planting," it grows like a flower, by feeding and breathing. It feeds on the sweet, refreshing Word of God, which "drops like the rain and distils as the dew" (Deut. xxxii. 2).

If any young Christian longs to grow in grace, there must be a daily drinking in of God's holy Word, and he must live in the atmosphere of prayer, for

> Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
> The Christian's native air.

If any dear child-reader says, "How shall I grow more holy, and more like Jesus?" let the flowers teach you that if you feed on God's Word, and "pray always," you too shall know the truth of his promise, "I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily and cast forth his roots as Lebanon. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon" (Hosea xiv. 5, 6).

Why is it, when we look at a child-flower, that we often see great showy leaves of profession growing on a stalk of pride, but no fair, sweet flowering, or ripe, golden fruit of grace? May not the secret of it be that there is no root-growth; no roots of faith, and hope, and love, daily striking deeper and deeper in the heart, no real life in the soul? Is it not a solemn question for each reader?

Am I growing in heart as I seem to be outwardly, or is it only top-growth, and not root-growth at all?

And perhaps the reason some of us are not bringing more glory to God by our daily lives is that we do not trouble enough about this life at the root. We are not really "rooted and built up in Him" as we ought to be; and so men do not see the beautiful flowering and rich fruitage that ought always to be the outcome of life in Christ and the accompaniment of our profession.

Have you got life at the root? I think some of you now can understand how the flowers grow, and what they teach us, and you may ask the very question that a little girl once did as she plucked a delicate harebell from its moss bed on a lonely mountain side: "Why do flowers grow where nobody ever sees them?"

Can you answer it? Thousands of flowers grow, blossom, and die, without ever being seen by the eye of man; dear, dainty mosses, delicate orchids, and fern fronds, and pure pale lilies rising like resurrected souls from deep, dark, forest pools.

"Why," answered a friend, "surely because they know God, and the angels look at them; and to teach you and me, darling, to be lovely and sweet in our lives when only God can see us."

Oh! that is a precious thought. Will you try to be one of those true soul-flowers, caring less about being good before people than about being lovely in God's eyes? Just blossom on day by day this New Year, content and glad, if it be for "Jesus only."

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Fuller-street Church, Kettering, January 12—25. Mr. Herbert W. Pewtress, Crouch End Mission Hall, The Grove, January 7—11; Park-road, Kilburn, January 20—25.

CAPE COLONY.—A correspondent of the Missionary Bureau in business in Cape Colony, writes, offering work for young Christian men, journeymen tailors, who can produce good testimonials. The secretary will be glad to supply the necessary information. The Bureau does not undertake to do more than give letters of introduction to suitable men. Sec, Mr. J. M. Pamment, 186, Aldersgate-street.

SOUTH AMERICA.—A widely extended work is being done in the Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Southern Brazil, in connection with the South American Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church. At the last annual meeting it was reported that religious worship is regularly held in 62 places, the average attendance being 3332, while the adherents number 7490. The Spanish-speaking congregations are beginning to develop a strong church life. At present there is great need for chapels in outlying districts, and a fund has been created with this special object. The superintendent of the Mission is Rev. C. W. Drees, Buenos Ayres.

NEW YEAR TRUST.

"He knoweth the way that I take."—JOB xxiii. 10.

No, I cannot see a single step
Of the untrod, unknown way;
But still in the dark I can feel his hand,
And its guiding pressure I understand,
As it leads me day by day.

I cannot tell if He wills for me
To share in the stirring strife;
In the daily battle for truth and right,
The deadly struggle 'twixt darkness and light,
Oft sealed by his servant's life.

I question not, if He sees it best
I should sit in the stillness sweet;
Learning the lessons his wisdom prepares,
Bearing the burdens He tenderly shares,
If cast at his blessèd feet.

I only know that my fullest trust,
For time and eternity—
For schooling of soul to sit calmly still,
For patience of heart to abide thy will—
May be given, dear Lord, to Thee.

So with heart at rest, and my life love-filled,
And my spirit still and free,
I can cross the brink of the new-born year,
Accepting, without a shadow of fear,
The future awaiting me.

EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

GOSPEL MISSION, PARIS.

IN a communication describing this work, Madame de Launay, 17, Rue Dutot Necker, Paris, writes:—"We began in the district of Vaugirard, and have thoroughly gone over it as a mission field. We have made visits to all the hospitals, and visited thousands of houses. This quartier is one of the most bigoted and priest-bound in all Paris, being full of convents, monkeries, Romish churches, and Jesuit colleges. The results in the past years have proved that we were directed of God in going there. We have been wonderfully blessed. Among the converts were three priests and several nuns. Many Romanists left their church here and came to the mission-hall. There were hosts of careless ones and free-thinkers, with a sprinkling of Protestants. Many have returned to their native land, carrying the Gospel seed sown in their hearts. Many have died triumphant deaths. We have saved persons from suicide, and even children. We used to hold meetings every day in the week in the Salle; but, since Professor de Launay has been obliged to leave me alone, we do not have the services so often. When he returns we shall continue as usual, and will open a dispensary and soup kitchen.

We have now a flourishing Mission, 15, Rue de la Possession, crowded every night, a good Bible-class, and a well-filled Sunday-school. We visited last year five hundred and sixty families, besides many sick at home and in hospitals. We have distributed throughout Paris over nine thousand tracts, Gospels, little books, leaflets, text-cards, &c. There are other features of the Mission, such as relieving the sick, the widow, and the orphan, which must be done in work for Christ.

MEDICAL WORK IN ST. GILES.—Dr. Pring, who, after eight years' hard work, has just resigned the post of superintendent of the London Medical Mission, 47, Endell-street, St. Giles, in a final occasional paper, says:—"During the past summer we have had comparatively little illness in St. Giles. From a sanitary point of view, London cannot have too much wet weather, and St. Swithin's forty rainy days had the advantage of keeping the usual summer epidemics well in check. It seems, however, as if the morbid reaction has now set in, for seldom have we had more to do than just at the present time, and seldom have we had to meet at once so many serious cases of illness.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

VI.—Money and Giving.

OF specific subjects bearing upon the general one of partial consecration, of which we have written, none other is more important than that which heads this article. It is one calling for plain words and courageous dealing. We feel an inward admonition that many godly men will fail to see it in the light in which we feel constrained to put it; that it will meet with questionings on all sides, and with derisive contempt from those who would conduct Christ's work upon the world's principles. From the last we can expect nothing. To the former we would say, "If any man think himself to be spiritual...let him acknowledge that the things that I write [as far as they are found confirmed by the New Testament] are the commandments of the Lord."

Let us remind ourselves of THE PLACE MONEY HAS COME TO OCCUPY IN MODERN CHRISTIAN WORK. It bulks more largely than any other item in foreign mission appeals. "Men and money" is the constant cry. They are the needed factors. Prayer and the Holy Spirit's power receive mention, but these others must be had at all hazards. Without them the work must stop. As to men, they are indeed needed. But as to the other overshadowing item, it is time for the Church of Christ to pause and see whence this need comes, what havoc the prominence given it has already wrought, and what is its real relation and value to the work of God. She merits far more now than when it was written, several decades ago, the stinging criticism of a godly writer, who, speaking of Foreign Missions, said, "The spirits of this moneyed and prudential age preach the crusade of gold as eagerly as Peter the Hermit preached the crusade of steel.... Money, money, money, is the universal cry. Mammon hath gotten the victory, and may say triumphantly (nay, he may keep silence, and the servants of Christ will say it for him), 'Without me ye can do nothing.'"

THE DISGRACEFUL PRACTICES TO WHICH THIS EXALTATION OF GOLD HAS LED ARE NOTORIOUS, and have often been held up to deserved odium. As in the world, so now in the Church, money must be had. As the benevolence of Christians does not supply the need, schemes for getting it must be set on foot for home and foreign work. Fairs, bazaars, suppers, lectures, concerts, rafflings, smoking parties, amateur theatricals, consisting of farces and operettas from the French, also comic singers and negro minstrels: disgrace the house of prayer. Since Christ's once holy and separate Church has come under the sway of the spirit of this world and the lust and power of gold, what wonder that she carries on the Lord's work at the dictation of worldly maxims, and endeavours to supplement what her niggardliness withholds, by turning her places of worship into playhouses and bazaars! It is needful that the Lord come again to his temple with the whip of small cords. With what indignation would He overturn her tables of merchandise, and spill out the gold she so covets for "the cause."

THE REASON FOR THESE THINGS is not far to seek. That lack of outward conformity in simplicity and inexpensiveness of life to the example of Christ, so painfully observable in the individual lives of Christians, has also obtained among them in their corporate capacity as united to forward the affairs of the kingdom of heaven. Hence the worldly and costly character of much that enters into the professed worship of God. There must be elaborate buildings, expensive appointments and furnishing, great organs, paid choirs of artistes, the best pulpit talent, and that also gauged and obtained by a money standard.

These evils are not seen to this excess in mission work. But the same spirit permeates that department also, and the same principles apply. A departure from Christ's simple and unencumbered methods laid down for the conduct of his work in enlarging the frontiers of his kingdom, and which we will presently consider, is the secret of the difficulty. A conformity to the maxims of the world accounts for it. It is spiritual warfare with carnal weapons. It suggests many vital questions, and brings up the whole subject of the economics of missions—the administration at home centres; the expenditures abroad; the way in which missionaries should go out and live and be sustained; the relation and desirability of schools and other civilising agencies in distinctive mission work; the costly item of medical missions and hospitals.

Some of these points will be dwelt upon in other places. As at home, so for the foreign work, the money to sustain a multiform system of effort must be forthcoming. Great apprehension is often felt. Large deficiencies are reported. Curtailment rather than enlarged operation seems required. The money question becomes the great problem. Rich and worldly-minded men are appealed to and depended on. Men of wealth, influence, and position, are often chosen to sit upon the mission boards, rather than men of humility and faith. Thus expediency crowds out faith.

There are not lacking, even in these days, EXAMPLES OF A MORE EXCELLENT WAY. Read the records of Moravian mission work, to learn simplicity, economy, and self-denial, and to see money relegated to something like its proper subordinate place. Let the China Inland Mission and George Müller (who, besides his two thousand orphans, sustains in whole or in part a large number of missionaries and other servants of Christ) teach us that foreign mission work, upon an extensive scale, can be carried on with large success, without resorting to the ruinous principles of human expediency and worldly wisdom. In answer to prayer alone, all the money they require flows steadily in. This is a fact that it would be well for those to weigh who have the responsibility of conducting the affairs of missionary societies.

But it is time to throw upon this picture of prudential manœuvring THE BRIGHT LIGHT OF APOSTOLIC TIMES. What was then the relation of money to missionary work? The first missionaries were men of like natures and needs with those of our times. For what reason should we be better equipped with material supplies than they? In the earliest of those fruitful years there went forth from Jerusalem many thousands, possibly tens of thousands, everywhere, preaching the Word. Will not what sufficed for them suffice for us? Will not the methods which the Holy Ghost then adopted as precedents for all time answer in our days? Modern missionary operations reply "No." But while they went, shorn indeed of outward comforts, and rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name, they were clothed in the power of God; their lowly needs were their Father's care, and continents shook beneath their tread. Now one may not venture forth unless he has a society behind him, to direct his movements and regularly supply the agreed stipend. He goes with complete outfit, and with every provision against disaster or discomfort. But where is the power?

But what do we read of money in relation to the work in the Holy Ghost's book upon foreign missions—the Acts of the Apostles. NOT ONE WORD. May He who inspired that record, with its silences as well as its utterances, engrave this fact upon the inmost soul of this generation. If the silence of the record in Genesis as to the birth and death of Melchizedek was designed in after time to yield deep instruction as to the priesthood of Christ, is not this silence of the Acts laden with momentous meaning to us in this metallic age? WE think much of the need of complete monetary arrangements. WE think them vital to the proclaimers of the kingdom. But the Holy Ghost, though giving us a great variety of other details in the book of his Acts, never once alludes to them. Why should they have occupied a prominent place then? There was no costly humanly devised machinery to run. Indeed, where was the need for money at all? A little space in which to stretch their weary limbs at night, a little bread to feed the continent body, an occasional garment of the simplest sort for these bearers of glad tidings, the supply of the lowly needs of the families of such as had them—in these alone consisted the material aspect of primitive foreign mission work; and these were deeply hidden in the shade, their high office and their daily ministry being, so to speak, spiritualised and fashioned to accord with the kingdom they proclaimed, which is "not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost."

But as to these outward things, the Father was not unmindful. Far from it. The hairs of their head were all numbered. He provided for them, but in his own way and by methods far removed from the cumbersome ones of our day. Their hearts were quite at rest, for they had heard the words of Jesus their Lord, and well they knew that when the birds should begin to build barns and the lilies weave for themselves their incomparable texture, then only need the commissioned messengers of the Most High, Messiah's heralds to the nations, begin to study "ways and means," and take anxious thought for what they should eat and drink and wherewithal they should be clothed. Till then they could leave it to the Gentiles to seek after such things, and trust in the unfailing care of Him to whom they were so dear, and before whom the heavens will sooner fall than he who trust in Him be confounded. Amen! Let all this instruct us as to how much importance the Holy Ghost attaches to that factor, which, in the estimation of the Church, outranks all others in modern foreign effort.

Our modern appliances for getting the water of life to the nations are comparable to a canal, surveyed and planned by human skill, dug out with infinite toil, supplied with its system of locks and levels, and worked and maintained in repair by watchful superintendence. Apostolic missions resemble one of God's resistless rivers flowing on in its winding bed as God ordained in the beginning.

There is no formal close to the Acts. It stops abruptly like an unfinished letter, this signifying, that its story of Gospel preaching and triumph and wondrous works was designed to be continued through the centuries. The unwritten continuation did proceed for a little time, and is yet to be re-begun.

This same subject will next occupy us, especially as it bears upon Christians contributing of their means.

A MISSIONARY.

HARVEST TIME IN THE CHURCHES.

BY REV. R. BALGARNIE.

THE readers of THE CHRISTIAN will be interested in the evangelistic missions conducted by myself during the last three months. The places visited include Dundee, Carlisle, Harley-street, Bow, E., Derby, Manchester, Leicester, Trowbridge, Pontypool, Brighton, and Bedford. Each mission has lasted about seven days; the first service has usually been held on a Saturday evening in conference with workers, where, in earnest prayer and self-consecration to God, the keynote of the mission has been struck.

One new feature of evangelistic work is its union with Church and Sunday-school anniversaries. Hitherto on these occasions the aim has been to secure popular preachers, large congregations, and good collections, but it has been found that the blending of a special mission not only increases collections but brings with it a spiritual harvest which is a welcome return to pastor and people for all their labours. Would that churches generally realised that the deepening of their spiritual life, an increasing solicitude to win souls, a rich harvest of ingathering, are the best conditions of financial prosperity. When hearts are filled with joy and thankfulness they are bound to manifest it in thankofferings unto the Lord.

As to methods of conducting missions every missioner will adopt his own, but my conviction is that what is wanted is not regular sermons or Bible instructions, but brief pointed addresses, immediately followed by close personal dealing with souls. Who does not know that a stranger's voice and method are often a power in bringing to decision for Christ such as have been halting for years? With many young men and women it is but the final step into Christ that remains to be taken, and the seasonable word of a missioner becomes the last inducement to take it. As an evidence of this it may be mentioned that during the last three months more than 1350 persons have come forward as anxious inquirers at the close of the services. These for the most part were not strangers or outsiders, but those brought up in the bosom of Christian families and churches. Many of them have been prayed for and "longed for," so that a mission has just afforded the opportunity to do collectively what they have hesitated to do separately. A harvest time is therefore what every earnest church should expect as the result of its own labours and the answer to its prayers.

Sometimes a doubt is expressed by older disciples whether these younger ones will stand, but why should they not be expected to stand as others have stood? Surely they are more likely to stand when early planted rather than in advanced years. Let not experienced Christians discourage these "little ones," but help them by love and sympathy. Let them feel from the outset of their Christian life that they are not chilled as in an ice-house, but warmed and nurtured as in a hothouse; that they may be expected to become trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He may be glorified.

This communication would be incomplete without a special reference to the great harvest reaped last October at Bow, E., where Rev. W. E. Hurndall is the honoured pastor. Such was the spiritual preparedness of the people, the completeness of the arrangements, and the confident expectation of blessing, that when I came my work as the missioner was that of the harvest labourer, "bringing in the sheaves." Since that mission was held I have received a testimony for Christ signed by about 300 persons who were then brought to decision, and who thus have subscribed with their hands unto the Lord. If, during the coming mission throughout the Metropolis, similar methods be adopted as at the East-end, why may not a day of Pentecost be expected, and the wilderness become a fruitful field, and the joy of harvest prevail, where spiritual sterility long hath reigned? That the contemplated mission in London may be crowned with blessing will be the earnest prayer of every Christian.

TWO BAGDAD JEWS have bought the entire site of ancient Babylon. On this, Le Chrétien Belge well remarks: "Is it not a significant fact that two Israelites should to-day possess the soil and the ruins of the immense city where their ancestors were captives and slaves, and of which their prophets had announced the utter destruction?"

The Church and the People.

An extremely trenchant and outspoken paper has been written by Pastor Archibald G. Brown on the subject of popular amusements as provided by the Churches. He strenuously protests against the growing prevalence of this element in connection with religious effort. We give some extracts:—

"Look which way you may, the evil makes itself manifest. There is little, if anything, to choose between church, chapel, or mission-hall. However these may differ in some respects, they bear a striking likeness in the posters that figure upon and disfigure their notice boards. Amusement for the people is the leading article advertised by each. The concert is fast becoming as much a recognised part of church life as the prayer-meeting, and is already, in most places, far better attended. 'Providing recreation for the people' will soon be looked upon as a necessary part of Christian work, and as binding upon the Church of God as though it were a Divine command.

"The devil has seldom done a cleverer thing than hinting to the Church of Christ that part of her mission is to provide entertainment for the people, with a view to winning them into her ranks.

"My first contention is, that providing amusement for the people is nowhere spoken of in Holy Scripture as one of the functions of the Church. If our Lord intended his Church to be the caterer of entertainment, and so counteract the god of this world, He would hardly have left so important a branch of service unmentioned. Christ, as an ascended Lord, gives to his Church specially qualified men for the carrying on of his work, but no mention of any gift for this branch of service occurs in the list. 'He gave some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of the ministry, unto the edifying of the body of Christ.' Where do the 'public entertainers' come in? The Holy Ghost is silent concerning them, and his silence is eloquence.

"Providing amusement for the people is in direct antagonism to the teaching and life of Christ and all his Apostles. What is to be the attitude of the Church towards the world according to our Lord's teaching? Strict separation and uncompromising hostility. While no hint ever passed his lips of winning the world by pleasing it, or accommodating methods to its taste, his demand for unworldliness was constant and emphatic....How did Jesus act? How significant the introductory account given by Mark, 'Now, after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the Gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the Gospel.' In answer to John's question, 'Art Thou He that should come?' He replies—'Go and show John the things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them.' There is no item in the catalogue after this sort; 'and the careless are amused, and the perishing are provided with innocent recreation.' There was no change of method adopted by the Lord during his course of ministry; no learning by experience of a better plan. His first word of command to his evangelists was, 'As ye go, preach.' His last, 'Preach the Gospel to every creature.' Not an Evangelist suggests that at any time during his ministry He turned aside from preaching to entertain, and so attract the people. He was in awful earnestness, and his ministry was like Him....Jesus pitied sinners, pleaded with them, sighed over them, warned them, and wept over them, but never sought to amuse them.

"As with the Master, so with his Apostles—their teaching is the echo of his. In vain will the Epistles be searched to discover any trace of a gospel of amusement. The same call for separation from the world rings in every one. How did the Apostles carry on their mission work? Was it in harmony with their teaching? Let the Acts of the Apostles give the answer. Anything approaching the worldly fooling of to-day is conspicuous by its absence. The description of their work is, 'And daily in the Temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ.' If they 'ceased not' from this, they had no time for arranging for entertainments. The congregations in those days did not expect anything but the word of the Lord, for Cornelius says to Peter; 'We are all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.' The message given was, 'Words whereby thou and all thine house shall be saved.' Here you have their method—they preached. Their matter—the Lord Jesus. Their power—the hand of the Lord was with them. Their success—many believed. What more does the Church of God require to-day?

"The mission of amusement utterly fails to effect the desired end among the unsaved, but it works havoc among the young converts. Let us see the converts that have been first won by amusement. Let the harlots and the drunkards to whom a dramatic entertainment has been God's first link in the chain of their conversion stand forth. Let the careless and the scoffers who have cause to thank God that the Church has relaxed her spirit of separation and met them half-way in their worldliness, speak and testify. Let the weary, heavy-laden souls that have found peace through a concert no longer keep silence. Let the men and women who have found Christ through the reversal of Apostolic methods declare the same, and show the greatness of Paul's blunder when he said, "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." There is neither voice nor any to answer.

"But what are the baneful effects? Are they also nil? Though I have never seen a sinner saved, I have seen any number of backsliders manufactured by this new departure. Over and over again have young Christians, and sometimes Christians who are not young, come to me in tears, and ask what they were to do, as they had lost all their peace and fallen into evil. Over and over again has the confession been made, 'I began to go wrong by attending worldly amusements that Christians patronised.' It is not very long since that a young man, in an agony of soul, said to me, 'I never thought of going to the theatre until my minister put it into my head by preaching that there was no harm in it. I went, and it has led me from bad to worse, and now I am a miserable backslider, and he is responsible for it.'

"It will be no wonder if the Holy Ghost, grieved and insulted, withdraws his presence. 'Come out,' is the call for to-day. Sanctify yourselves. Put away the evil from among you. Grasp the Book of God. Trust the Spirit who wrote its pages. Fight with this weapon only, and always. Cease to amuse, and seek to arouse. Shun the clap of a delighted audience, and listen for the sobs of convicted souls. Let the Church again confront the world; testify against it; meet it only behind the cross; and, like her Lord, she shall overcome, and, with Him, share the victory."

THE IRISH SOCIETY has recently enlarged its sphere of work, and for some years has been labouring with remarkable success among the Irish populations in Lancashire. At examinations held lately in Liverpool and Manchester, about 500 persons presented themselves, of whom no fewer than 300 passed, in reading, translating, and repeating from memory selected portions of Holy Scripture in Irish or English. It is an oppressive thought that this Scriptural instruction of many hundreds of Irish Roman Catholics in Liverpool and Manchester must be suspended if more liberal support be not furnished. Rev. R. Mease, 32, Sackville-street, London, W., is one of the secretaries.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

The operations of that colossal Christian enterprise, the British and Foreign Bible Society, are admirably presented to view in the 84th annual report, lately published. The superintendent of the literary department, Rev. George Wilson, shows his careful hand and good judgment throughout the volume of over 600 pages. In the general arrangement of matter, there are this year several improvements which, doubtless, many readers will welcome. That which is technical, however, quite sinks into insignificance when compared with the absorbing interest of the contents of the book.

In a lucid introductory chapter, it is well stated that the book is "a bundle of despatches from the fields of battle" in the great spiritual war of Christ and his truth against evil in its many forms. We are glad to say that much of the news from the seats and fortresses of war is distinctly encouraging. Looking at results from the point of view of the number of copies of the Holy Scriptures put into circulation at home and abroad, we learn that during last year the "output" was the largest the Society has ever known, the total number of Bibles, Testaments, and portions being 4,206,000.

The appearance of the now famous version of the Gospels into current French by the well-known littérateur, Henri Lasserre, seems to have given rise to a greatly increased demand for the New Testament in France. In Germany this Society's operations were most encouraging, although the national societies were very active in their endeavours to meet the needs of the people of the Fatherland. From Italy intensely interesting reports have been received; in Rome, the very centre of the ecclesiastical and political power, the circulation was the largest ever known. As religious liberty gains a more secure position, the Bible seems to be increasingly asked for. The Slavonic race appears disposed to turn reverently to the wisdom of the Word of God. "As the Russian learns to read, he is ever willing to possess the Bible." In the interest of some of the families over whom the sway of the Czar extends, new translations have recently been made. Siberia, which is by no means the drear waste that many people imagine, but has its charms as well as its drawbacks, has been traversed by the colporteur, and many thousands of copies of the Holy Scriptures have been distributed, most of them in the way of free grants.

In Turkey there is a very distinct and remarkable change in the mood of the Mohammedan mind towards Christianity. Dr. Thomson thinks "there is no doubt the Word of God is leavening powerfully all classes of the people, and preparing them to act decisively in due time." The year's report from Greece is ful of hope; while in Egypt colportage work has been begun in "the very home of Islam and the Arabic language, and the hitherto almost inaccessible stronghold has been entered by the Stronger than Mohammed." Port Said is the scene of much effort, and in Syria and Palestine many labourers are seeing grand results of patient seed-sowing.

Englishmen will read with special pleasure the reports from China and India, where the Society's operations are on an extended scale. In the New World and the South Seas, as well as throughout the British Isles, the Word of Life has also been vigorously diffused, in harmony with the great purpose of the institution; and the exhaustive reports from different centres not only give a good idea of Christian work under varying conditions, but disclose the questions and problems which are exercising the minds of the people, and throw a strong light on "The Question of the Hour—Foreign Missions."

JEWS IN JERUSALEM.

WHILE visiting Jerusalem in November last I became greatly interested in the good work being carried on in that famous city by Mr. D. C. Joseph. The class most ostracised and looked down upon in Jerusalem are the Jews. Beggars of all colours infest the walls of the Holy Sepulchre, but a Jew is not allowed to go within thecourts. Probably less has been done in the holy city to save the children of Abraham than has been done for any other race or nation. They have been, indeed, the "despised people" during the past reign of Islam in the land. Several years ago Mr. Joseph visited Jerusalem, and his soul was burdened for the salvation of the poor Jews. His interest in their future led him finally to the establishment of "The Evangelical Mission to Israel," in which he is now doing a noble work for the Master alike of Jews and Gentiles. It was a long and laborious work he undertook. It is easy to teach a Jew to love and accept God, and Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; but it is very difficult to get one to accept and serve the Lord Jesus Christ—more slow than the conversion of idolaters to Christianity is the changing of Jews to Christians. But Mr. Joseph understands the methods well, and is having grand success. He spends much time in finding their homes and needs, in showing an interest in their life and destiny, and in teaching and praying with them. He holds three Sabbath services, and three week-day meetings at his mission-rooms, which are attended by Spaniards, Hebrews, Germans, and several other races. In pleasant weather he frequently preaches on Sabbath morning in the open air in front of his rooms, when a large crowd will gather to hear his able expounding of the Gospel.

He has an assistant or co-worker for each of the languages, that is, he has a Spaniard to work among the Spanish Jews, a German among the German Jews, and so on. His aim now is to have a good corps of workers among each class of Jews. He distributes hundreds of Testaments and parts of the Bible among the people of the city, and has just set up a printing-press, with which he hopes to supply all the different nationalities of Jews with the Gospels in their own tongue.

One of the noble works Mr. Joseph has in hand is the building of two large cisterns for the preservation of water for the Jews in the times of drought, when water is sold at so high a price that the poor have almost to die for the want of it. These and other grand endeavours he is putting forth in connection with his Mission. His work deserves the notice and aid of English and American Christians. He depends on friendly aid for the furtherance of the great work, and he is a faithful and efficient worker, as his followers testify.

PENNY DINNERS IN DUBLIN.—Miss M'Donnell's effort, begun a year ago, to supply penny dinners to the poor of Dublin, has proved successful, and been duly imitated. It must not, however, be supposed that the Kitchen in Verschoyle-place, Powerscourt, is self-supporting; its success has consisted in meeting an evident want, the expense which is thus entailed falling for the present upon the generous public. During the past year 42,625 dinners were provided. Miss M'Donnell's address is 38, Merrion-square, Dublin.

THE ROYAL BLIND PENSION SOCIETY is helping 560 blind poor in all parts of the United Kingdom by allowing them pensions ranging from 10s. to 25s. per month. Thus the scanty earnings of these sadly afflicted people are helped. It is, however, cause for constant regret that in many other equally deserving cases similar assistance cannot be given. By increased liberality on the part of those who enjoy the blessing of sight, the Committee hopes not only to maintain all its present pensions, but to extend the help to many others. The office of the Society is 235, Southwark Bridge-road, London, S.E.

CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE HOME.

THIS Home for young women and girls employed in business houses, was commenced at the end of last June, and God is blessing it, though we have only two upper floors and the rooms are small. We can receive only seven boarders. It is a Home, in the true sense of the word; and, above all, a Christian Home. If girls are sick or in real need, they are not driven out, but are sheltered and nursed for Jesus. They want a motherly and watchful care, with the Christian life patiently lived out before them. Business girls are exposed to much temptation, and this surely should be a time of special effort among our girls of London. It is hard to turn girls from the door at night because we have "no room." There is much prayer going up to God for a larger "Home" to be opened.

We are establishing a library of books which have the Gospel for their chief aim. If Christians will aid in this work, we shall seek guidance on the larger Christian Temperance Home. KATHARINE RICHARDS.

A TRAVELLING MISSION HALL.

MR. AND MRS. H. A. BRUCE MOORHOUSE have issued a brief history of "The Highway and Hedgerow Mission: or, Life in a Gipsy Van." Therein is recorded the trials and triumphs of an obscure but very genuine mission during the last eight years. This record shows 3400 public services held in 115 villages and seaports in Hampshire, New Forest, Guernsey, Dorset, Devon, Normandy, Brittany, Somerset, and Sussex, resulting in numerous conversions; the erection of mission halls, and the establishment of permanent missions, coffee-rooms, &c.

A considerable part of this period has been spent in gipsy vans, and latterly a wooden mission-hall has accompanied them in their wanderings. I visited them last May when encamped at Totton, in Hampshire, and saw how admirably adapted their mode of work was to lay hold of the people. The hall is bright, and the meetings none the less so, Mrs. Moorhouse's singing and speaking being specially attractive.

I grieve to hear that so good a work, and one so full of promise for the future, is sadly retarded by want of funds. Here is a picture which must delight every Christian heart. A gentleman and lady renounce home comforts, and lay themselves out for the good of the people with an amount of self-denial not difficult to imagine; who have spent £1000 of their own money in promoting the work to which they have devoted their lives, and are still eager thus to live to bless their fellow-creatures. DAKOTA.—As an agent for the American Bible Society, I visit families in town and country, within the limits of my commission, and see that all are supplied with the Scriptures. The different States and European nations are well represented in the population. The happiest homes I come across are those in which the Bible is prized and its teachings obeyed. In calling from house to house, I find a good opening for general missionary work. Should any Christian feel disposed to send me some Gospel tracts, they will be gladly received. HERBERT GREGORY.

SOUTH SPAIN.—Miss E. J. Whately writes:—The pastor at Jerez, Spain, the chief southern station, now abandoned by the United Presbyterian Society, has been labouring successfully among the gipsies in his neighbourhood. He has also been blessed to members of the "black hand"—a society of which a good deal was heard a few years ago. His labours have also extended to outlying stations very hard to reach. If his diminished salary compels him to leave, the station can only be visited by agents occasionally sent over from other places, and of course the promising labours among these neglected classes will fall to the ground.

A NEW ERA.

THROUGH the rent veil to happiness and God,
Beyond the sin, the heart-ache, and the fear,
Even while a traveller on earth's rugged road,
My soul would enter with the new-born year:
Remove the false, O Lord! bring in the true!
Let old things pass away, make all things new!

Too long between the ranks of heaven and hell,
Between the fires, sore wounded have I stood;
Alternately against them to rebel
Or serve, as led by feeling's fickle mood.
Now place me, Lord, in thy triumphal line,
To start with the New Year entirely thine.

Entirely thine—redeemed by Jesus' blood,
Thy Spirit sanctifying all that's bought;
Entirely thine—to prove the power of God
To bless the soul, so saved, so loved, so sought;
Entirely thine—so consecrate my heart
That heaven's new era with the year may start!

UNION IN PRAYER.

WITH deepest thankfulness we see the great advance in that unity among the members of Christ's Universal Church, for which members of the Union in Prayer are interceding, and which they in common with tens of thousands of others are seeking to develop in daily life.

Not only have hundreds of clergy and ministers, besides hundreds of laity, joined the Union the last few months, but from different parts of the world tidings are coming of the widespread desire for closer communion among the scattered members of Christ's Church, and at home the public papers record continually manifestations of Christian unity which a few years ago would have been deemed impossible. The bishops, at the Lambeth Conference, have so recognised the great movement which is going on that they have not only proposed conference with other bodies of Christians, but have suggested lines on which they hope that there may be a greater development of harmonised action in the Church of Christ.

Still even in our own land thousands are going down into drunkards' graves, and multitudes are living in sin and misery, corrupted and corrupting others, and streaming into eternity "without hope and without God in the world." Therefore something more than prayer is necessary, and the members of the Union agree not only "to pray more earnestly," but "to strive more constantly in the Holy Spirit," for a more definite fulfilment of our Lord's desires for his Church, and to do his work among the masses of our follow-men. There is a loud call for everyone who knows there is a Saviour for the perishing, to come and take their place in the ranks of the hosts of the Lord for the tremendous conflict, so that the whole Church awakened to see the need of action on a scale commensurate with the appalling magnitude of the evil, may, in personal consecration of life, and in unity of purpose under its great Head, be led forth in his power unto victory. Let us therefore "go forward," knowing "the battle is the Lord's."

It is hoped that members of the Union will invite all Christians in their neighbourhood to join in this blessed agreement, and to send their names to Local Hon. Sec., or Central Hon. Sec., 70, Portland-place, W.

[Papers about the Union may be obtained gratis, by applying to the Printers, Hunt, Barnard & Co., 20, Blandford-street, London, W.]

THE "CARTER" HOME (Clapham High-street.)—The Corporation of London have voted 100 guineas to the "Carter" Home for Boys, Clapham High-street, and this gift has been supplemented by a similar sum from Mr. Horace Marshall, C.C., of Brixton-hill, S.E.

A Testimony from India.

THE following portions of a recent letter from the veteran missionary, Rev. James Smith, of Delhi, will be read with interest. It is dated, Simla, Dec. 8:—

I have lived to see wonderful changes in mission opinion, and some startling things that roused violent opposition have been universally adopted. High education has been largely given to sons of men whose whole families existed on four rupees a month; having no moral stamina or deep religious principle, no sooner did they obtain places of trust than they broke down, and by acts of dishonesty made their employers hate the name of a native Christian. They have become moral wrecks by hundreds, and it is only astonishing how Christianity should have made way at all amid so much inconsistency and the absence of the witnessing life power. Let men remain at their own villages; help them to learn enough to use their Bibles and hymn-books. There is no use of grotesque dress or bare feet; the simple Gospel of primitive times will win its way whenever the Master is used as the pattern, and guide, and his Spirit illuminates the path.

I am really overwhelmed with the work of my large parish, four districts almost as large as a small agricultural county, teeming with towns and villages full of people, nearly all poor Mazbees* neither able to read or write. I am the only European missionary in the field. Some of my old natives are drawing towards me, and I hope to make four strong centres with about twenty-four indigenous schools, merely to give the simplest primary education, so as to bring the Bible within their reach. I have had amusing applications. As soon as they ask "how much pay I shall give," I dismiss them, and tell them they have mistaken their calling. The work is grand, and might draw an angel from heaven to enter it; and, with the hills close at hand for refuge from the hot season, I don't think a finer climate for a delicate person can be found—the brilliant atmosphere like a sea of glass; the clear outline of the hills, and their snowy summits glistening like alabaster; the light air like drinking nectar at every inhalation of breath! Just now it is too beautiful for pen to describe.

Itinerating is the right kind of work, but there are sometimes too many cartloads of comforts, and too much of the appearance of the great Government servant to permit the missionary to get near the people. In my last journey among the villages I had neither tent, servant, nor hackney. We cooked for ourselves, and put up in huts, or serais. The advantage was in our having free access to all castes and classes; no one ran away or hid themselves, and our congregations, large or small, listened to the glad tidings with earnestness, following us about from place to place like men hungering for the truth. We must go to the Master afresh for instructions in itineracy.

I went to the Conference in Calcutta last month, and had quite a revival of old times. Many, I am persuaded, went home to begin a new work in a new spirit.

I am taking all the services in the Union Chapel for a time, but next month I shall be among the villages again, God willing, and shall take a small reinforcement of workers with me.

FIELD-LANE REFUGES.—These words suggest to those familiar with London philanthropic institutions several excellent agencies, which have been brought into existence by compassion upon the poor. Ragged schools provide for from 600 to 1000 children, and Homes accommodate 100 men, women, and poor girls. In "Always with us," to be obtained from the secretary, Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C., some account is given of the pressing need there is for such agencies, and of the way in which the Refuges justify their existence.

Education in Scutari.

THE British and Foreign Bible Society three years ago re-occupied the important city of Scutari in North Albania, with a population estimated at 30,000, and some may remember the outcry raised by the Roman Catholic clergy, and their strenuous efforts to prevent our having any depôt or corporteurs there. By the providence of God, however, we have a depôt and two colporteurs for the city and surrounding province; if the sales of Scriptures have not been numerous, they have in many instances been made to earnest inquirers, and many interesting conversations have been held. The fruit of this is seen in the kind reception our colporteurs now meet, and the respect in which they are held by all classes of the community.

There is only one girls' school in Scutari, a Roman Catholic one, taught by nuns. In former years the wives of two of the Society's colporteurs opened private schools, of which some of the first families in the city availed themselves; but in the present instance this is impracticable. In order to get education for one of his children, our senior colporteur asked permission of the Archbishop to send her to the nuns' school. Permission was granted, but when the child was presented she was not admitted. This little matter had been watched by eager eyes, and the refusal to admit the child produced a degree of excitement in the city which strikingly indicated the impatience with which the people submitted to the tyrannical domination of the Romish clergy. The colporteur wrote a second time, and requested the Archbishop to inform him definitely whether his child would be received or not; and, after some delay, he was informed that, though entertaining the highest respect for him personally, as did everyone in Scutari, yet, as he was engaged in selling the Scriptures in other languages than those approved of by the Church—viz., ancient Greek and Latin—the Archbishop was compelled to regard him as an opponent, and hence his daughter, being a Protestant, could not be received.

The announcement of this decision aroused no small indignation, especially among the adherents of the Greek Church. The colporteur was urged to try to get the means from Britain for opening a thoroughly good girls' school; not only was patronage promised, but at least thirty-six Napoleons (£28 16s.) were promised annually for a time. The whole affair seems a most providential opening for an agency of the highest importance for imparting instruction in the Word of God, as well as general education to a people that have hitherto been kept in deplorable ignorance, superstition, bondage, and neglect.

The Bible Society can do nothing in this matter. It has opened the door, but others must enter in, if advantage is to be taken of the opening into this stronghold of Popery. Suitable premises may be got at once; but the desideratum is a properly qualified teacher. It would be necessary for her to acquire in time the Albanian language; but if properly qualified professionally, even though knowing only English, but much more if able to speak and teach French or German, Italian or Greek, she would be welcomed by many friends, and find a wide field of usefulness. Such are the present prospects in Scutari; but, of course, should any offer of help be made, minute and reliable information would be procured at once.

Any inquiries addressed to Rev. Dr. Thomson, Bible House, Constantinople, will be promptly attended to, if forwarded through Rev. Dr. T. W. Brown, secretary of Turkish Missions' Aid Society, 32, The Avenue, Bedford-park, Chiswick. ALEXANDER THOMSON.

BRINKWORTH, WILTS.—A successful mission has been conducted in this village by Mr. John Elliott.

Christian Commercial Travellers.

THE Commercial Travellers' Christian Association is an organisation with a past full of blessing, and a future full of promise. At meetings held on Friday last, in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, in celebration of the seventeenth anniversary, abundant evidence was afforded of the great usefulness of the institution in works of philanthropy, as well as in special Christian testimony. In the afternoon a devotional meeting was held, and in the evening a hearty meeting of a more general character, both being presided over by Mr. Geo. Williams.

At the earlier meeting, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe delivered a vigorous address on Christian life and consistency. He based his remarks on 1 Sam. xviii. 1, "The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul." He pointed out the peculiar relation that subsisted between these two Old Testament characters, both at the time when Goliath defied the armies of the living God, and afterwards. The various circumstances and incidents were made the parabolic basis of some very timely teaching. As David delivered Israel from the Philistines, so Christ has set us free from sin and its consequences. Our relation to Him should be like that of Jonathan to David; but, alas, it is too often like that of the cowardly Israelites, who were ready to enrich themselves with the spoils of the victory without uttering a word of loving gratitude to the conqueror. Or, moreover, perhaps our attitude is similar to that of the pharisaical, self-sufficient Saul, who, although he well knew the stripling, asked, "Whose son is this youth?" or, indeed, to that of Abner, the son of Ner, who gave his king the Agnostic's answer, "I cannot tell." Important lessons for the present time were drawn from these sayings and doings. On the one hand, the worthlessness of self-righteousness was pointed out; on the other, the folly of not knowing what is patent to all honest inquirers, was emphasised. Both Saul and Abner debased themselves by showing want of gratitude and common feeling; and to-day men do the same when they blindly refuse to acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ. Jonathan's love was worthy of imitation; and, as David, touchingly returned it, so Christ returns the affection of his followers. The miserable death of Saul and Abner having been referred to, Mr. Peploe spoke some searching words on warm love to Christ—loving Him, not because of what may come of it, but by constraint of the great victory Christ has wrought for us over Satan and sin. The address was highly appreciated.

In the evening, the report was read by the general secretary, Mr. L. Courtney. It was an encouraging one. During the year the membership has increased by 220, some 1200 Bibles have been placed in as many hotel bedrooms, many new libraries have been supplied, and a good work has been done by the small beneficent fund. The CHAIRMAN, in a hearty speech, pointed out that sometimes the bright countenance of a Christian traveller may get an order where the absence of such good temper would lose it. Addresses of a really practical character were delivered by Messrs. W. W. Thompson, H. Lea, and H. S. Perrin, special reference being made to the temptations of commercial men, and to the overcoming power which Christ gives to those who first give themselves to Him. It was very clear from what was said that there are many illustrations to-day among the commercial fraternity of the truth of the Apostolic dictum that "Godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Christmas Cheer.

On Christmas Day, and days preceding and succeeding, efforts were made among mission workers in general to give the poor and afflicted a substantial taste of the goodwill which is rightly associated with the blessed advent of the Peace-bringer to tabernacle among men. Much was also done to cheer the friendless. It were alike impossible and unnecessary to report such proceedings in detail, but a few notes of timely benevolence in the Metropolis may be given as illustrative of what was done in many places in the manifestation of "practical Christianity."

TWELVE THOUSAND FED.

The annual distribution of Christmas dinner provisions took place on the Monday evening, in the Harley-street Independent Church, Bow-road, E., some twelve thousand persons, in 2345 families, being thereby supplied with a good dinner. Rev. W. Evans Hurndall had some good helpers in his large operations. The Lord Mayor attended on the occasion, with the Lady Mayoress, and from his words and deeds amply showed that his interest in such work as Mr. Hurndall has so well in hand, and so near his heart, is both warm and deep. His lordship delivered an address which was eminently appropriate in character, and his well wishes, so cordially expressed, were highly appreciated by the needy multitudes who went away with hands filled with good things, to their own delight, and the joy of all who doled out the parcels.

MR. CHARRINGTON'S PARISH.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress attended at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E., on Christmas eve, on the occasion of the seventh annual distribution of seasonable fare to poor people, who are the objects of Mr. F. N. Charrington's loving solicitude. Some 420 families, comprising over 1700 persons, shared in the distribution, and, as the circumstances of each had been thoroughly investigated, there was no doubt as to the cases being really deserving. The supplies were regulated by the size of the families, some of which were known to have suffered much of late, the slackness of trade having so reduced their resources that from three rooms they had come down to two, and from two to the miserable single room tenement. The Lord Mayor spoke some words of cheer and wisdom to the company, commending the Mission to the hearty support of the public, and urging the poor to guard against giving way to despair.

DR. BARNARDO'S FAMILY.

The dinner party at Stepney-causeway on Christmas Day numbered between 1200 and 1300. Among them were the little orphan boys from Leopold House, the working lads from the Stepney Home, and the youths and young men from the Labour Home. For the accommodation of these there were seventeen tables, each with sixty-three seats. Two long tables ran the length and breadth of the hall—the new gymnasium—and these were for former members of the Home—young men earning their own livelihood in trades and other walks of life, and young women out in domestic service. Kind mistresses had liberated the latter in order that they might have some time at "home" during the happy season.

Dr. and Mrs. Barnardo were present, and a few other warm friends of the Homes. The supply was, of course, on a colossal scale, and a very happy time was spent by all. After dinner, "Father Christmas" was ushered into the room by the bagpipe boys, and a merry and gay procession followed. Subsequently the children sang some pieces, and gave specimens of their drill. Tea was provided later on, and the evening passed most pleasantly.

MISS MACPHERSON'S HOMES.

The inmates of the Old and New Homes of Industry had a truly joyous time. After dinner the little ones were made happy in many seasonable ways, and later on the Christmas tree was admired and stripped of its varied fruit. The gifts were of a useful kind, and they were appreciated as highly as the warmth and brightness of the occasion was welcome to the little ones, many of whom had never before experienced such lively pleasure. Then, for an hour or so, Miss Macpherson and Miss Stock told true stories of Canada and the children who have gone there from the Homes.

Whilst the juveniles were thus being entertained in the upper hall of 29, Bethnal-green-road, the lecture hall below was filled with aged widowers and men from the lodging-houses, who were treated to a warm dinner. Subsequently they listened to the temperance story of John Tregenoweth, with dissolving views, and the life of Christ, the scenes being explained by Mr. Howard, the devoted superintendent of the lodging-house work at the Home of Industry.

AMONGST THE SAILORS.

At the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, on Christmas Day men of many nationalities were entertained in the manner which is quite easy to the loving workers there, when they are heartily sustained in their endeavours by friends who cannot personally attend. The scene was cheery throughout the afternoon and evening, and the joyful occasion was right well improved by singing, praying, and testimony. The Christmas tree was stripped of scarves, caps, and other articles useful to the men, who again crowded the Rest on Boxing Day, and enjoyed the annual dinner. After the feast several spoke of Christ and his claims upon the heart and conscience, and some of the sailors made resolution henceforth to serve the Lord. Thus the holiday season was turned to account for the furtherance of the Gospel.

The rooms of the Welcome Home, also in Ratcliff-highway, were not only gay with decorations, but filled with a happy party on the last Saturday evening in the year, when the "Christmas boat" was made to discharge her varied cargo. Miss Child spoke kindly words of the generosity of those who had sent gifts, and, after refreshments had been partaken of, the distribution took place, to the great delight of the sailors, some of whom afterwards testified to the great blessing the Home has proved to them.

OTHER ACTS OF KINDNESS.

During the week before Christmas, six free meals were given to poor people under the auspices of the Christian Workers' Mission (office, 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, W.). They were in connection with churches and organisations, and given in response to clergymen or heads of missions, at London Docks, Battersea, Rotherhithe, Hornsey-road, Soho, and Victoria Park. Afterwards, Mr. Edward Wright, and other evangelists, preached the Gospel to the people. A large number made request for prayer on their behalf, and several hundred names were taken of men who are in want of employment.

On two occasions "Robin" dinners were given by Mr. G. Fuller, and helpers, in Brunswick-hall, Poplar, E. The little ones were gathered from cheerless homes, and were made very happy.

At the Field-lane Refuges many a hungry and friendless outcast had a happy time on Christmas Day. About 760 people sat down to dinner in the "Ragged Church," after hearing some practical Gospel addresses. By the kindness of many friends, the provisions were abundant. Christmas parcels were also sent to hundreds of deserving and needy families.

Nearly 800 poor children of Clerkenwell enjoyed a dinner provided by Mr. W. Catlin, of the Cow Cross Mission.

The aged people of Shoreditch were cheered by receiving parcels, made up by Mr. Waynforth and friends. The deserving poor of St. Luke's were looked after by Mr. Hills and others, who distributed parcels to 900 families. In John Addey's schools, Church-street, Deptford, more than 3000 children had breakfast on Christmas morning, through the kindness of the Robin Society.

About 320 very poor families of the parish of St. Thomas, Lambeth, received substantial gifts, accompanied by an illuminated Christmas letter, bearing the autograph of the donor, the vicar, Rev. J. R. Starey. In connection with the mission of Bloomsbury Chapel, taking in St. Giles, Soho, and the Seven Dials district, parcels were given to something like 360 poor persons, mostly women.

Messrs. Tarn, of Newington Causeway, with the aid of numerous Christian workers, distributed tickets for 2400 Christmas dinners. About 500 poor persons living in the district of the Clerkenwell police-court received from the poor-box fund on the Monday before Christmas tickets entitling them to coal and provisions, and, in some cases, blankets. The customary gifts of the Baroness Burdett Coutts were distributed among upwards of 1000 poor tenants on the Columbia estate, Bethnal-green.

Among other places in London in which much seasonable kindness was shown may be mentioned Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road (Rev. Newman Hall's), the Well-street Mission, connected with Cambridge Heath Congregational Church (Rev. W. Marshall's); the New Surrey Chapel, in Blackfriars-road (Rev. B. Senior's); the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New Cut (Messrs Young), &c.

WORK AMONG THE INDIAN GONDS.

THE wife of a C.M.S. missionary in India, writing with respect to a recent notice in these columns as to needed mission work among the Gond tribes, says:—

That letter was calculated to give a very wrong impression to the general public, and did not give full credit to a society which has had men living in the very centre of the Gond district. Mandla, the headquarters of C.M.S. Mission, lies surrounded by Gond villages. A Christian Pundit has lived sixty miles the other side of Mandla in the very centre of the Gonds. For years Rev. H. D. Williamson has lived nine months out of the twelve in these very centres, and has also penetrated to the "Gond Hills." He used to live all the hot weather in tents amongst them, and has even lived amongst them without tents, simply sleeping wherever he could obtain shelter, sometimes on a rude verandah and at others in a cowshed or outbuilding of mud, returning to Mandla for the rainy season only.

There were, a short time ago, three missionaries working amongst the Gonds; at present there are two (Mr. Williamson having gone on furlough) with their catechists. Rev. F. T. Cole and Rev. E. P. Herbert, with their workers, are now itinerating amongst them. The Jubbulpore missionaries are also at work in another centre. Rev. E. Champion first commenced itinerating amongst them years ago, but his name is still remembered by them. Mr. Williamson has worked steadily for ten years, and God has blessed the work and allowed him to see results. I do not say that three missionaries are sufficient for the mass of people, but it is not the fact that the field is altogether unoccupied.

CHERBOURG.—Mr. Thomas P. Sinel, evangelist, asks the prayers of our readers on behalf of the efforts put forth by him in this French seaport town, amongst both English and French. Mr. Sinel is anxious to organise a Sailors' Rest, but is prevented from doing so through lack of means, although he has a large room which would be suitable for the purpose. The Gospel meetings for the French are well attended, and there are not wanting signs of Divine blessing. Mr. Sinel's address is Impasse Vintras, Cherbourg, France.

RECLAIMING THIEVES.

WHILE the prison commissioners are able year after year to report a continuous diminution of crime, the great results of Mr. Hatton's efforts in connection with the St. Giles' Mission are of direct benefit to the nation at large. As will be naturally inferred by those who understand such a work, it could not begin and end with the breakfast at the prison gates. It is in point of fact a service which needs to be carried on without flagging during each of the working days of the week.

To see in what this service consists the inquirer cannot do better than call on any week-day at noon at the branch station in Brooke-street, Holborn. There, day after day, Mr. William Wheatley receives his clients, a truly motley throng, representative of many classes of the community. We have repeatedly visited the house and have ever found some new phases of life and of work. You will there see all sorts and conditions of thieves. The experienced burglar may confront you, desiring to give up a bad business, turn over a new leaf, and become once more a respectable man. The most affecting petitions come from poor women, who appear on behalf of relatives who may have forfeited a fair chance in life by wrong doing. Some are so elderly that one is tempted to think they should give up dishonesty without any exhortation; others are so young that we feel thankful that they are caught in time to be more easily turned into better ways.

Assistance of a varied kind is given. Some want temporary shelter until they can get hold of some likely work; some ask to be taken to a distance where friends will help them, a small trading capital, or necessary tools, will represent the needs of others. The most difficult cases to deal with are those of genteel people, such as clerks or commercial travellers, who have been foolish enough to yield to temptation; and who, being comparatively useless at hard manual labour, cannot readily be put into promising openings. Still, all are helped in every possible manner; and it is because the stream of applicants wishing to reform is so large that the number of criminals is found to decrease.

The work brings a vast return for the outlay incurred; but it is, nevertheless, a necessarily costly work, which ought never to be crippled for want of the means to carry it on with efficiency. By making his home at 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, Mr. Hatton is ever near the scene of operation; and, as he is an honorary worker, he at least deserves all the encouragement that can be given. G. H. P.

NORWICH SOLDIERS' HOME.—The need for a Soldiers' Home in Norwich has been increased by the fact that, in addition to the cavalry, the depôt of the Norfolk Regiment is now stationed in the county town. During last year the superintendent, Mr. F. Adie, was much encouraged in his work, the mission agencies being greatly valued by some of the soldiers. A more suitable centre of operations is sadly required. In the meantime, not only are good endeavours proceeding among the soldiers, but the Gospel is being taken to the poor in the neighbourhood of the barracks. Mr. Adie's address is: Lollards' Pit, Norwich.

BRISTOW, OSBORNE CO., KANSAS.—The Lord is graciously blessing the humble efforts of his people in Osborne and Smith counties. During three months upwards of 500 have professed conversion to God. This has been a specially trying year on account of drought causing such a failure of crops. Still there is much cause for grateful thanks, in that the people are very attentive to the preaching of the Gospel. I would be glad if any friends would send me their used copies of THE CHRISTIAN, and also tracts or illustrated papers for distribution at my five preaching places. There is a great desire for good reading matter, but the poverty of the people prevents them from being able to pay for good literature. A few illustrated almanacks to put up in the log cabins and sod houses out here would do good.

MR. IRA D. SANKEY.

BY special invitation of Miss Graham, of Edge-lane, Mr. Sankey addressed a large gathering of young women in Gordon Hall, Liverpool, on Dec. 20. At the close of the evangelist's address, quite a number rose for prayer, and the after-meeting was largely attended.

Two meetings held at Southport on December 23 by Mr. Sankey were sincerely appreciated. The noble Cambridge Hall was packed to its utmost capacity, and hundreds at each service were unable to gain admittance. Much effect was produced both afternoon and evening through the singing by Mr. Sankey of the hymn, "Shall you? Shall I?" Rev. James Mellis (Presbyterian) and Dr. Wood, J.P. (Wesleyan), read and prayed in the afternoon. Mr. Sankey spoke briefly, but the deep pathos of an incident given at the close moved many to tears. A considerable number rose for prayer.

In the evening, at Mr. Sankey's request, Mr. C. Stidston-Broadbent (whose invitation had brought him to Southport) gave a chapter out of his Christian experience. In a brief but deeply earnest and pointed address, he spoke of his work for God in his native town of Plymouth after his conversion through the preaching of Rev. W. H. Aitken, of the stimulus given by Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit in 1882, and the lasting results which followed. Mr. Champness also gave a short Gospel address.

Apparently these two meetings have moved this fashionable northern watering-place. It is proposed by the friends in Southport to perpetuate the work.

After two months of almost continuous speaking and singing to very large congregations in different parts of England, Mr. Sankey sailed from New York on Wednesday last in the s.s. Britannic. He has been greatly encouraged by the success that has attended this visit to the old country, and in his future work he will continue to speak as well as to sing the Gospel. Many have thought that Mr. Sankey is only a singer. For years past, however, he has conducted overflow meetings in connection with Mr. Moody's services. He has developed speaking powers of no mean order, as those who have attended his meetings during the present visit can fully attest. He is conscious of the extra labour he has thus taken upon himself, and, we think, has wisely decided to undertake only such an amount of work as he can safely accomplish without damage to his voice, which, we are glad to say, is as pure and strong as when he sang in the great London meetings of 1875.

Mr. Sankey hopes to be able to return to this country next summer, and to resume evangelistic work amongst us. He has been earnestly invited by Rev. R. W. McAll to visit Paris during the International Exposition, and conduct services for a time. Large halls are now being erected, and it is proposed to make special efforts to reach the multitudes that will gather from all nations while the Exhibition is open.

METHODIST MISSIONS have been held at Alton, Hants, by Rev. J. B. Grattan; at Lostwithiel, by Mr. C. Minor, of the Evangelisation Society; at Hebden Bridge, by Rev. T. Waugh; at North Finchley, London, by Mr. W. Sampson; at Preston Brook, by Mr. C. Garnett; at Skipton, by Rev. J. Gawthrop, and at other places. The blessing of God has rested upon the labours of the various evangelists, and He has gotten much glory to his name by souls being born again.

SCHOOL BOARD CHILDREN'S FREE DINNER FUND.—The sixth annual report shows the increasing usefulness and extent of the work of this Fund. As the operations are widening, it is hoped that larger support will be accorded to the movement. In view of the many and sad evidences of want among children attending elementary schools in the Metropolis, it is quite needless to press the cause upon the attention of the benevolent. The report contains some painful passages, setting forth the sufferings of poor children, whose well-being is the special concern of the Free Dinner Fund Committee. The treasurer is Mr. H. E. Allen, 299, Oxford-street, London, W.

THE NEW YEAR.

"The living, the living, he shall praise Thee."
ISAIAH xxxviii. 19.

SOME count their life a burden hard to bear,
And, shrinking from the thought of length of days,
Refuse, when dawns another year, to praise
The Lord of life for his preserving care.
Let it be far from us their sin to share,
For in his guiding hand are all our ways,
And through each fleeting year his hand displays
A love beyond all measure or compare.
Let it be ours to praise Him for the past,
Upon his arm confidingly to lean
Amid the changes of life's changeful scene;
And then, where'er our lot be meanwhile cast,
Where'er his will may call our feet to roam,
Give thanks together in our Father's home.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN IRELAND.

WIDESPREAD revival has taken place in Coleraine in connection with Major Whittle's meetings. The services were at first held in the Town Hall, but had to be adjourned to the First Presbyterian Church. This place was also crowded night after night with attentive audiences; hundreds of young men and women have professed their faith in a newly found Saviour.

The meetings at Limerick opened on Sunday last, with good attendances, in the Theatre. Much interest and sympathy from Christians of all denominations were manifested. The meetings continue for eight days, after which Major Whittle will go to Tralee, Clonmel, and Waterford, giving one week to each before commencing his mission in Edinburgh. Prayer is requested for the work in the south of Ireland.

WORKING LADS IN GREENWICH.

IN November, 1882, over 100 working lads in West Greenwich had availed themselves of the privileges of the Lads' Institute. Much blessing rested upon the work from its commencement. In 1886 a new building became necessary, and in December the following year the new building was opened by Mr. F. A. Bevan. It is in every way suitable for the work being carried on. The reading-room, with its well-filled library and coffee-bar, is most comfortable and well used.

There are 112 members, and 30 of these have recently joined, having been accustomed to assemble as members of a "Harriers' Club" at a neighbouring public-house, this has been a change for much good. During the few years the work among the lads has been carried on, several of the members have been brought to rejoice in the Lord Jesus Christ, and are now earnest Sunday-school teachers and evangelists.

HOMES FOR WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.—Through failing health, Mr. and Mrs. Payne are retiring from their positions as superintendent and matron of Hanbury House, 22, Dorchester-place, Blandford-square, N.W. A few days since they were presented with tokens of esteem and affection, from the committee of the Homes, and past and present boys of Hanbury House. Mr. and Mrs. Payne have during thirteen years' conscientiously discharged arduous duties.

"FISHING IN RUNNING WATERS."—A record of a year's work by the Billingsgate Christian Mission has appeared with this title. It is a very encouraging record, showing that the labours of Mr. T. Vicary, of the London City Mission, have by no means been in vain in Billingsgate and its environs. The coffee stalls have not only proved successful in themselves, but men have, through them, found their way to the mission-room, and experienced spiritual blessing. The secretary is Mr. Alfred Walters, 10, Billingsgate-market.

FACTORY HELPERS' UNION.

A LITTLE over a year ago, work was begun by this department of the Y.W.C.A. among the factory, laundry, and other girls of the same class in London; now the work is growing day by day and spreading throughout the country.

Over 150,000 women and girls employed in factories in London. How few realise that we have this toiling multitude of our sisters wearing out their lives to supply us with the necessaries and the luxuries of daily existence. They work for wages, in most cases, quite inadequate for their own bare necessities. They are employed in making almost everything we use—in business, or in our households—from food to clothes, books to brushes.

We cannot enter here upon the question of wages or the excess of female labour to the demand. These social problems too surely exist, but how to alter these things is a question beyond our sphere. We can but seek in some measure to brighten the lives of these poor girls.

What are we doing for them? We are visiting the factories during the latter part of the dinner hour, by permission of the employers, giving simple Bible teaching, and singing hymns with the girls. The report has been that the work is better done, and the general conduct of the girls improved since these visits began. In this way we become acquainted with many who can be reached by no other means. We then open Evening Homes or Clubs in different districts where they can spend their evenings, and attend classes for cooking, sewing, dressmaking, singing, writing, musical drill, &c. Each evening is closed by singing, Bible reading, and prayer.

Drink is one of the terrible temptations besetting these girls, and temperance work is being carried on with much success. The Factory Helpers' Union is at present working in connection with over fifty of the more important missions to factory girls in London, whose work is carried on with the object of winning the girls for the Master. Voluntary workers are much needed—ladies who can give a few hours during the day for factory or laundry visiting, or a few hours in the evenings for work in the clubs and classes. We are specially in need of money help just now, to enable us to open new centres of work in several badly neglected districts, to pay the rent of rooms for Evening Homes or Clubs, and to extend the work in all directions.

The treasurer is Miss Morley, 47, Grosvenor-street, London, W.

Appeals.

A Home of Rest for London Cabmen has been secured at Ventnor (I.W.). Rev. JOHN DUPEE, 165, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, of the Cabmen's Mission, appeals for help in furnishing the new Home.

Christian Blind Relief Society.—The committee propose shortly to invite the blind poor of the Metropolis to a free tea, as in former years. In proportion as the generous public respond to this appeal, few or many will be asked. The committee would like to invite 1000 persons and their guides. Contributions will be acknowledged by Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, St. Stephen's Vicarage, North Bow, E.

North Bow Help-Myself Society.—This organisation, which is directed by whole-hearted workers, is in difficulties just now. The district is a needy one, and it is a great pity that granting free teas to the poor and visiting and helping the weak and distressed should be embarrassed. There is a debt of £75, for rent, gas, and missionary's salary. Contributions may be sent to Mr. GEORGE CALVERT, Mission Hall, Armagh-road, North Bow, E.

Mr. John Barnabas has undertaken a Gospel mission to French residents in Montreal and other Canadian provinces. The evangelist intends to visit all the French colonies under the British Flag, and hopes afterwards to go to Alexandria, Port Said, and finally to China, among the French there. French Testaments, Gospel Leaflets, and money help are needed. The evangelist is well recommended. His present address is 16, Amelia-street, Belfast.

Evangelistic Notes.

Colby, Norfolk.—Mr. A. Hare, Wesleyan evangelist, has closed a fourteen days' mission at Colby, North Walsham. Many interesting cases of conversion are recorded.

Evangelistic services have been held by Revs. H. H. Moore, J. Morrison, and others, in the Presbyterian Church, Clonduff; impressions for good have been made on the minds of many.

Gospel meetings have been held by Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, and others, in the Old Presbyterian Church, Randalstown; much spiritual good is believed to have been done.

An eight days' mission has been held in the Methodist Church, Cloughjordan, co. Tipperary, by Mr. J. Townsend Trench. The meetings were large, and several professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

Gospel meetings, which were largely attended, and extending over a period of eight days, have been held by Mr. Pym in the Friends' Meeting-house at Bessbrook, and created much religious interest in the town and neighbourhood.

Rev. W. A. Meaton has conducted an eight days' mission at Bethel, Sheerness. The meetings were most helpful, especially some home gatherings of children and young people, and there is every prospect of lasting good being accomplished as the result of Mr. Meaton's labours.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has been conducting Gospel services in the villages of North Herefordshire during the past two months. In some districts there is great need of Gospel testimony. Mr. Weaver was gladly received into the houses of many of the villagers. His meetings were well attended, and many desires were expressed for him to pay another such visit soon.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The Y.M.C.A. is exerting itself to discharge its responsibility, by making endeavours to reach the many young men of the city. Large audiences, of two thousand and upwards, regularly assemble in the Town Hall on Sunday evenings, sometimes more than half of them men. The Gospel is preached by visiting evangelists and others, and there has been much blessing already.

Leominster.—Mr. Charles Inglis has conducted a very successful mission here. Many have been deeply convicted of sin, whilst others have found peace in Christ. Christians of all sections of the Church attended the mid-day Bible-readings, and greatly profited by Mr. Inglis's fresh and powerful presentation of the Word of God, resulting, we feel sure, in more devotedness of life and earnestness of purpose in the Lord's work.

Greenock, N.B.—This Mission, instituted in 1880 in a small hall in a back street, has gradually grown, till now the mission premises are situated in the principal thoroughfare of this northern seaport. The large commodious hall, holding between seven and nine hundred people, is often overcrowded. Recently Mr. Daniel MacCann, evangelist, held a fortnight's Gospel meetings, when the attendances were very encouraging. Some were converted sitting, while the word was being preached. This brother is a man of prayer, and is greatly used in the salvation of souls.

Rev. T. Champness is addressing himself to his great work of home and foreign evangelisation with increased vigour. He has taken a larger house in Rochdale, which is henceforward to be the Joyful News Evangelists' Training Home. He has published a second edition of his stirring "Letter to John Wesley's Children," in which he appeals to Methodism to push forward the work of evangelisation. There is a great and increasing demand for Mr. Champness's lay agents, one hundred and fifty having been applied for by home and foreign circuits since the last Wesleyan Conference.

Dr. Munhall has been conducting a very successful mission at Bloomington, Ill. An afternoon talk with young men was a special feature, about 1800 lads and young men filling the Durley Theatre, from the doors of which many others were turned for want of room. By forcible and convincing arguments, the preacher urged upon his hearers the real wisdom of purity of life. Request being made for those to rise in the audience who were willing to renounce evil ways and lead lives of sobriety and purity, nearly 1000 of those present stood up. Subsequently a considerable number publicly confessed Christ.

Messrs. Peet and Crozier, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have conducted, for several weeks past, Gospel meetings in the Friends' schoolhouse at Hilsborough. The services have been largely attended, and many are believed to have been brought to Jesus.

Rhyl, N. Wales.—A very successful eight days' mission was lately held at Rhyl, the special missioner being Rev. E. T. Davies, vicar of Aberdovey. The services and various meetings were well attended, and there have been most encouraging results.

Messrs Fullerton and Smith will commence to-morrow a three weeks' mission in Exeter Hall. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., appeals to ladies and gentlemen to help either in the inquiry-room or in the choir. Meetings will be held nightly (Fridays excepted) at eight p.m., with prayer-meetings at one p.m., and Bible-readings bi-weekly at 3.30 p.m.

Letters to the Editor.

HELP FOR POOR INEBRIATES.

SIR,—Much good is being done in the present day by Homes for Inebriates, but there seems a great want throughout the country of any arrangement for receiving men who are not wealthy into such institutions. There are hundreds of lower middle-class people who would be glad to enter such Homes, who are now debarred, by the excessive cost, from doing so.

Surely it would be possible to start a Home for the treatment of those who are less well to do, which should at least pay its way, as the higher-priced ones seem to yield a handsome profit. If this can be done, there must be many who are interested in the reclamation of their unfortunate brethren, and who would be willing to invest or lend the capital for the starting and maintenance of an institution. I trust you will allow this question to be brought forward. There are numerous Homes for women, both poor and rich, but the few men's Homes are all for the wealthy.

ONE WHO IS WILLING TO HELP.

OUTDOOR RELIEF v. THE WORKHOUSE.

SIR,—It is to be hoped that the recent meeting of guardians of the poor at Exeter Hall, mentioned in your columns, may not lead to any successful agitation in favour of abolishing outdoor relief, else it will most assuredly make the union houses deserve more than even now the name bestowed upon them—viz., that of Bastile. The forcing of the aged poor into the workhouse is more often than not a crying evil, and the extension of that system means really the building up of officialdom, because there is actually less proportionately spent upon the poor directly than in outdoor relief. Even now, religious principles are allowed in some instances to sway the decision as to whether the applicant shall have outdoor relief, or be forced into the house.

Some distinction should be made between the respectable poor and those whose improvidence has brought them to a state of need. If an agitation is to be begun against outdoor relief, then those who have the real well-being of the deserving poor at heart must begin a counter agitation in favour of a fairer and less prejudiced distribution of relief.—Yours truly,

A VILLAGE PASTOR.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a series of Gospel meetings at Pontymoile, by Mr. James Jones, commencing Jan. 6.——For blessing on a fortnight's evangelistic meetings in Trinity U.P. and Pollokshields Free, Churches, beginning Jan. 6.——For blessing on Sabbath evening evangelistic services in Dr. Bonar's Church, Glasgow.——For blessing on special Gospel meetings at the Thornton-road Mission-room, Littleheath, Potter's Bar, by Mr. J. J. Scroggie, Jan 6 to 20.——For services at Marlborough, South Devon, being conducted by Mr. John Elliott.——For our Australian colonies, where pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness are the spiritual ruin of many: but let God be praised for his wonderful works there.——For much blessing upon Gospel work amongst soldiers, and on all Soldiers' Homes during this year.

DR. PENTECOST IN GLASGOW.

WE are thankful to report that during last month a marked work of grace has been going forward in Kelvinside, the western suburb of Glasgow, in connection with the labours of Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, D.D., late of Brooklyn. The mission was undertaken by Dr. Pentecost in response to an earnest invitation from the directors of the West-end Christian Union and several of the local clergy; and as the Union comprises a large number of willing and experienced workers, this secured both ample preparation beforehand and effective assistance during the continuance of the mission.

To the work thus undertaken, Dr. Pentecost brought consecrated culture, large experience, and untiring energy. He was fearless enough to undertake to carry on, week after week, two services a day (except Saturday), a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and an evangelistic service in the evening; and so far from showing signs of exhaustion, this continuous strain seemed to be no effort to him. And what was of more consequence, so far from the interest of his audiences abating, it steadily deepened as time went on. For the addresses given were of no common stamp. They were eminently instructive as well as forcible, and revealed in their massiveness, variety, and grasp, the skilful hand of the expert in theology and exposition, as well as the earnest purpose of the evangelist. And, as was to be expected, where prayer and effort were so happily combined, a large blessing was enjoyed.

In spite of the dismal weather which prevailed throughout December, numbers flocked twice each day to the services, and on Sunday evenings the commodious church (Rev. W. Ross Taylor's), in which the services were held, was much too strait for the eager crowd. At the close of each service there was the welcome sight of several persons remaining either to testify to their acceptance of Christ, or to ask for further guidance. Many Christians also bore witness to having been greatly quickened, and sent back to the study of their Bibles with fresh interest. At the same time, there has been an entire absence of mere excitement; the work, like the teaching, has been deliberate and solid; and all the more on that account the permanent workers in the district confidently expect to find gratifying results which are as yet unknown to them.

Our readers will be glad to know that Dr. Pentecost resumes work in Glasgow on the 11th of this month, still keeping to the West-end, but considerably nearer the centre of the city. May we ask their prayers that the good work may go on increasingly?

THE PEACE SOCIETY.—The Committee of the Peace Society, 47, New Broad-street, E.C., have appointed Mr. W. Evans Darby to be secretary of the Society. He has long been associated with the work of Rev. Andrew Mearns amongst the London poor.

PRAYER FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS. — The Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society repeat their invitation to the committees and officers of the various Foreign Missionary Societies in London to assemble for united thanksgiving and prayer in the Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., at 4 p.m. on Friday, Jan. 18.

CHARLES WESLEY, the writer of "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," and many other hymns which the Church in many lands sings with continued pleasure and profit, was held in honour in many town and cities of the United States last month, on the occasion of the observance of the centenary of his death. In the Hanson-place Methodist Church, Brooklyn, on December 13, Dr. T. L. Cuyler, C. H. Hall, W. P. C. Rhoades, and others delivered appropriate addresses on the great work accomplished by the two Wesleys. Kindly greetings were sent to Dr. S. F. Smith, author of the national hymn "America," J. G. Whittier, the poet, and Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who was described as "Our American Christian Singer Across the Seas." At a union service in New York a similar message was sent to Mr. Sankey.

The Book World.

* Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.*

THE RUBY ALMANACK. We are asked to say that it is for the issue of 1890 that "favourite texts" are required. They may be sent up to March 31, 1889, to the Editor, Wheeler Brothers, 88, Mildmay Park, N.

JACK THE CONQUEROR. By Mrs. C. E. Bowen. 1s. Partridge & Co. This splendid little book comes out in a new edition, and loses none of its sweet freshness and worth in re-reading. There is not a better story to give to boys starting in life.

A PREY TO THE ENEMY, by Mrs. Zillah Dugdale (National Temperance Depôt), is an interesting story, suitable for boys just starting in life. The hero, a boy well trained by a Christian mother, is sent to business, where he is led by a companion to partake of strong drink, which ultimately proves his ruin.

HEROES OF THE MISSION FIELD. By W. Pakenham Walsh, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. A new edition of a most interesting and instructive book. The stories of the various missionary heroes are well told. Churches to-day may learn much from such examples of devotion to the service of Christ long before modern missions were founded.

A MISSIONARY LIFE. Stephen Grellet. 1s. Nisbet & Co. This needs no commendation—the life itself speaks. Such a life can tell only of the love and the power of God, and the blessing and honour He puts upon those who, whether at home or abroad, obey the Divine command. This little volume will speak to the heart of those Christians who wish to lay themselves upon the altar.

DANIEL: HIS LIFE AND TIMES. By Rev. H. Deane. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. Another of the "Men of the Bible" series, from the pen of one specially well qualified to write it. Modern discoveries have not been overlooked, and the result is a very informing and readable book. To interpret the prophecy was not the author's object, although his judgment is in general terms fairly embodied. Without pronouncing on this, we may say of the "life and times," that they are vividly brought to view, the book being a very useful introduction to a thorough study of the prophecy.

SONGS AND HYMNS OF THE SCOTTISH HIGHLANDS. In this collection Mr. Lachlan Macbean has brought together many choice specimens, skilfully polished, from a rich but largely worked mine of Celtic poesy, and has wedded them to melodies that are highly characteristic. To appreciate them rightly, one would require to be "to the manner born," but even an outsider can recognise the depth of feeling and the wealth of expression they embody. The songs are both sacred and secular, and vividly represent the many changing moods of the inner life of the Gaelic-speaking race. (Maclachlan & Stewart, Edinburgh.)

THE HITTITES: THE STORY OF A FORGOTTEN EMPIRE. By A. H. Sayce. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. By those who had no sufficient reason for their doubts, Old Testament references to the Hittites were not long ago summarily disposed of, as being "unhistorical." Recent discoveries, which are well detailed in this volume of the "By-paths of Bible Knowledge" series, have completely vindicated the minute accuracy of the Old Testament Scriptures. Dr. Sayce's book is interesting throughout, and should be read by all who desire a brief statement of what is now known of the people with whom Abraham of old was on terms of friendship, and to whose race David's trusty officer Uriah belonged.

JANUARY MAGAZINES.

The "Tonic Sol-fa Reporter," so well known to many youthful students of music, has entered on a new series, under the title of The Musical Herald. All the old features are preserved, but the scope of the magazine is widened so as to embrace matters of general interest to lovers of the art. Mr. Curwen is editor and publisher.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE contains an exquisitely written and charmingly illustrated paper, under the heading "Round about Galilee," which will be deeply interesting to Bible students. The portion with reference to Nazareth is of striking importance, for it contains several valuable illustrations of Scripture, and the whole article is a valuable contribution to the literature of the Holy Land.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART (1s. Cassell & Co.) has a very interesting and well-illustrated account of the island of Arran, and a quaint article on the rise of illustrated journalism.

In THE QUIVER for January the Bishop of Moosonee writes on Christian work among the Cree Indians, the article being illustrated by a series of illustrations by Mr. Patterson, a member of the Royal Canadian Academy. The Bishop of Derry, Dr. Allon, Prof. Blaikie, and Rev. P. B. Power are among the contributors; whilst complete stories by Miss Evelyn Everett Green and others appear in the part.

THE HOMILETIC MAGAZINE begins a new series with the January number, which contains sermons, papers, outlines, and other contributions from scholars of ability in their special departments. This is a serial which is evidently designed and conducted in a way calculated to afford a large amount of information and suggestion to those whose studies run on homiletical lines. (1s. Nisbet & Co.)

FOOTSTEPS OF TRUTH. Edited by C. Russell Hurditch. Vol. vi. J. F. Shaw & Co. Another annual volume of a monthly which regularly instructs many, and is distinctly useful to not a few of its readers. The pages contain much spiritual teaching, and many a word for workers and waiters. This volume has a portrait of the late Miss F. R. Havergal as frontispiece, and would make an acceptable present to many a saint of God whose book-shelf is wanting in present-day helps for the varying circumstances of life.

THE HERALD OF MERCY begins a new series with the year, and it is hoped that it also enters upon a new career of usefulness. It is designed to meet a definite want—a cheap Gospel monthly for circulation on a large scale. The illustrations are very attractive; the letterpress, also, is instructive, and characterised by plain speaking and personal appeal. Each number of eight pages may be cut up into four sheets for distribution as complete, illustrated leaflets, which are such as would be gladly read in cottage homes and workshops throughout the country. Eight copies a month are sent post free for 4s. for a year; back numbers may be had on special terms. (Morgan & Scott.)

THE EXPOSITOR for January contains an etched portrait of Professor Cheyne, and a sketch of his industrious career. Some of the articles are of peculiar value. We single out for special remark a suggestive note by Professor Driver, on Gal. iii. 16 ("not 'and to seeds' as of many," &c.), and "a last confession of faith," by Professor Franz Delitzsch, entitled, "The Deep Gulf between the Old Theology and the New." The latter is a contribution of great interest. In conclusion, the venerable author grandly declares himself "on the side of the theology of the cross, of grace, of miracles, in harmony with the good confession of the Lutheran Church." He adds: "By this banner let us stand; folding ourselves in it, let us die."

THE THEOLOGICAL MONTHLY is the title of a monthly which promises to more than supply the place of "The British and Foreign Evangelical Review," which it succeeds. The January number contains eight articles on questions of wide practical interest. Principal Cairns writes on "Christianity at the End of the Nineteenth Century," and Mr. C. L. Engström contributes an article on "Sceptical Novels by Women," in which "Robert Elsmere" is subjected to thoughtful examination and criticisms. The list of contributors includes some well-known writers, and there is ground for hoping that this monthly will make and maintain for itself a worthy position as an exponent of current Christian thought at home and abroad. (1s. Nisbet & Co.)

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for January 10 (Galatians vi. 9):—"Let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

CHINA INLAND MISSION. — Realising the importance and power of prayer to God, the directors of the China Inland Mission have, ever since it was started, set apart the last day of the year to be observed by workers at home and in China as a day of fasting and prayer. Again, on Monday last, a number of friends met in the afternoon and evening at the office of the Mission, 2, Pyrland-road, Mildmay, N., to supplicate the Divine blessing on all the labours of the past, and a continuance of God's guidance and favour on the work and all in any way connected with it, especially during the year which has now been entered upon. It was felt to be indeed a hallowed season, and a source of much inspiration to those present.

A Terrible Crime under English Rule in India.

(From "The Bombay Guardian," Dec. 10.)

ONE of those great crimes which stir the heart of humanity has just occurred at Patna, within a day's journey of Calcutta. The chief offender is a European magistrate. The victim is a young native Christian girl.

On November 1 last, Miss Abraham, of Patna, a noble lady connected with the Zenana Mission, wrote to Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, Bombay, that "two widows at Patna, aged respectively twenty-six and fourteen, who were both living in the house of a man named Radakissen, having heard the truth, and wishing to leave a life of sin, and embrace the faith of Christ, came to me a fortnight ago in the evening, without help from anyone in my house, and have remained under my roof since, learning both to read and understand the truth very rapidly."

Miss Abraham then stated that Radakissen, the immoral man from whose house the young widows had fled, was attempting to force the youngest, aged fourteen, back again into his possession, and that her mother (for pecuniary reasons, as will be seen hereafter) was supporting him. The child-widow had addressed the magistrate thus: "I beseech the Sahib log [literally, 'the great folks'] not to let me be returned to my mother. She left me in Radakissen's house, and will again, if she can, place me where I must live in sin."

Miss Abraham concluded by asking Mr. Dyer: "Is there any law bearing upon this point—Can a mother force her child to lead an immoral life?" And to show the urgency of her request for information, she added this copy of a summons which she had received from Mr. C. C. Quinn, the Magistrate at Patna:—

MAGISTRATE'S COURT.

To Miss Abraham.

Whereas complaints have been made before me by Radakissen and Musammat Mahtabo, the husband and mother of one Musammat Luchmin, that you have unlawfully abducted the said Musammat Luchmin, a girl under 14 years of age,

I hereby direct you, under Sec. 551 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to produce the said girl Musammat Luchmin, before me on the 6th November, 1888, in order that she may be made over to the charge of her husband or mother who have been directed to be present on that date.

Patna being about a thousand miles from Bombay, there was only sufficient time left to advise Miss Abraham by telegraph. A message was therefore sent to her of which the following is the substance:—

"Sect. 551 Code Criminal Procedure only refers to cases where girl is detained for unlawful, that is, immoral purposes. You are not detaining the child-widow for an unlawful purpose, and must not give her up. Magistrate's order is illegal. Under Section 372 Indian Penal Code, the mother is liable to ten years' imprisonment."

A chivalrous Englishman, Mr. Henry D. Thompson, Solicitor, of Patna, undertook to plead the poor girl's cause gratuitously before the Court. The unjust judge, however, seemed unwilling even to listen to his contemplated victim's case. Mr. Thompson only succeeded in obtaining a postponement, and in thus delaying the brutal sentence.

How unlawful the proposed action of the magistrate Quinn was will be shown by a few additional particulars.

The girl Luchmin was married when very young, according to Hindu custom, to a boy named Durbarry Lall, who died two years after marriage. That boy was her first and only husband. After his death, Luchmin's mother tried to pass her off as an unmarried girl, and to effect her marriage with the man Radakissen, but the fraud was discovered, and all the parties concerned belonging to the same (Khetri) caste, the caste rules stopped the proceedings. The mother of Luchmin ultimately sold her to Radakissen for immoral purposes, and she was placed with another of his mistresses. So much for the legality of the Magistrate Quinn's peremptory order to Miss Abraham to deliver this Christian girl up to her immoral "husband."

Section 372 of the Indian Penal Code is expressly designed to prevent the trafficking in young girls for immoral purposes. The section says:—

"Whoever sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of any minor under the age of sixteen years, with intent that such minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be employed or used for any such purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to a fine."

In ordering Miss Abraham, therefore, to deliver Luchmin to her criminal mother and "husband," the magistrate thereby made himself an accomplice in the violation of the above section.

Further, Luchmin claimed that she was several months over fourteen years of age, and therefore possessed the legal as well as the moral right to have the custody of her own person against those who would make a prey of her, and traffic in her virtue. Her affirmation as to her age is supported by independent testimony, and not least by the repeated statements of her mother, made before she had any object in falsifying her daughter's age. But, as will be shown, Quinn appeared determined to damn the girl, as far as he could do so, irrespective of evidence.

When the case again came into Court, Mr. Thompson, on behalf of Luchmin, asked for more time in order to procure important evidence. This was only consented to on condition that the girl should be removed from the care of Miss Abraham, and placed in the custody of a third party, a Mohammedan. The girl's protest against this disposal of her was not heeded.

IMPORTANT AND URGENT.

The telegraph having brought this news to Mr. Dyer, revealing the determined bias of the magistrate against according justice to Luchmin, Mr. Dyer asked his colleague, Mr. Maurice Gregory, of Bombay, formerly acting editor of The Sentinel, London, immediately to proceed to Patna, and consult with Mr. Thompson and Miss Abraham as to what further could be done to save the girl. He travelled by the mail train. Starting on Thursday evening (November 15), he reached Patna on Saturday afternoon. He found (1) a consensus of opinion that there was no prospect of a fair trial for the girl at Patna, and (2) that there were threats by Radakissen's party of obtaining possession of Luchmin by force, the carrying out of which it would be difficult to prevent. Some of the partisans of Radakissen were saying that they only wanted Luchmin for a single hour, and that Miss Abraham could have her for ever afterwards. This latter remark was not assuring, considering that pending the decision of a similar case, a Christian girl had had liquid poured into her eyes, after which she was returned to her friends of the Zenana Mission almost totally blind.

Mr. Gregory therefore proceeded at once to Calcutta, and after some difficulty occasioned by the apathetic attitude of two legal officials, the Solicitor to the Government and the Government Prosecutor, who did not want to be troubled with such a matter, succeeded in bringing Luchmin's case before the High Court on Nov. 22 in the form of an application for the removal of the trial from Patna to Calcutta. The judges on the bench were Mr. Romesh Chunder Mitter, and Mr. Macpherson. Mr. W. Garth (son of the late Lord Chief Justice of Calcutta) generously appeared to plead Luchmin's cause without fee. His appeal to the judges was one of great force, and was not delivered without deep emotion. But the application was refused.

With a just horror of what might happen to her, Luchmin, in her petition to the High Court in support of this application, said that she was "willing to go to prison indefinitely" rather than be handed over to her mother or Radakissen. The judges had the power under Section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to transfer the case (indeed that Section was specially designed to assist such applications), but they refused to exercise it.

When the case came on for hearing at Patna on November 23, Mr. Thompson succeeded in obtaining further delay until December 2, and again until December 6.

A TERRIBLE SCENE IN COURT.

For a counterpart of the scene which took place in Quinn's Court at Patna (it cannot be called a court of justice, nor even of law), it is necessary to go back to the days of negro slavery in the Southern States of America, when brutalised white fathers sometimes sold their own daughters at the auction block to the highest bidder, the flaxen-haired child with Saxon features being torn, amid maddening cries of shame and despair, out of the loving arms of the slave-mother, but a shade darker in complexion than her child.

For five weeks the child-widow Luchmin had waited with anxious heart to know her fate—to learn whether it was possible, under the rule of a Christian Government, for a Christian girl to be legally sold into a life of infamy, a life of slavery to lust, a servitude infinitely more horrible than slavery to labour. The momentous day had arrived. Coming events cast their shadows before; and is it any wonder that the frame of the doomed child trembled as she placed her foot upon the threshold of the Court? Quinn was asked to hear further evidence on Luchmin's behalf, but refused. Then the Court was cleared while the unjust judge prepared himself for his fell deed. The time of waiting for the verdict seemed hours. At last the verdict came—an order to deliver the victim to the custody of Radakissen and the immoral mother who had sold her, and who had herself been living in adultery with the girl's uncle.

On the order being given, the girl, noticing the great commotion, looked confusedly from side to side, and clung to Miss Abraham. The next moment Radakissen's arms were round her waist. She screamed again and again, and continued crying, "I will not go; I will not go." Quinn, who was looking complacently on, ordered a policeman (or more than one) to help force the girl from Miss Abraham. Mr. Thompson said: "I beg of you to give us half an hour to appeal to the judge" [of a higher Court then sitting]. Quinn said: "Certainly not."

A gentleman who was present writes:—"The girl then clung fiercely to the magistrate's table, but was torn from her hold by Radakissen, while she sent up yell after yell, the magistrate looking on. The tennis players at the club some distance off ran to the side from which the piteous screams were coming. The scene was terrible, and I hope I may never be a witness of a similar one. The girl had three hours before presented a petition to the magistrate, appealing to him to help her, saying that she was a Christian girl, and was ready to answer any questions he might put to her on her knowledge of her faith, to test her."

UNSUCCESSFUL ATTEMPT TO APPEAL.

When Luchmin was overpowered, and her struggles had ceased, Miss Abraham drove in haste to the court of the Sessions Judge at Patna, to lodge an appeal which had been prepared in the morning in anticipation of the illegal and brutal decision which had now taken place. On her arrival a case was going on; when it ended it was 4.30 p.m. The judge then refused to hear Miss Abraham's appeal, saying the time for the Court to rise was five o'clock, and she might come the next morning at 11. Mr. Masters, solicitor, represented to him the importance and urgency of the matter Miss Abraham had come about, but the judge said "his work for to-day was done."

With what feelings Miss Abraham returned home may be gathered from the following extract from a letter written by her that evening:—

"I am almost heart-broken about my child, but Sunda [the other widow, aged 26, who left Radakissen's house with Luchmin] has been God's instrument for cheering me this day. I went to her room to try and say a few words of comfort to her, and completely broke down in trying to pray, when this babe in Christ took up my petition and pleaded most fervently for present need and for the strengthening of her own faith. It was indeed good to see this fruit of the Spirit in this, Sunda's first trial of faith."

At eleven o'clock that night Mr. Dyer received at Bombay a telegram from Miss Abraham, containing particulars of the demoniacal deed that had been perpetrated at a British Court at Patna, the sacrifice of a Christian maiden by an official acting in the name of a Christian Queen.

What was to be done? It was impossible that any manly man could acquiesce in such a decision.

THE VICTIM AND LORD DUFFERIN.

The clock was striking the midnight hour as Mr. Maurice Gregory left Mr. Dyer's house to despatch the following "urgent" * message to Lord Dufferin, who was still in power as Viceroy:—

"Quinn, Collector at Patna, has illegally and by force consigned to a life of infamy a girl named Luchmin, whom he holds to be under fourteen years of age. I appeal to you to immediately interfere to save the child from further outrage. She is a Christian. I am prepared to take charge of her. 'Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.'—Alfred S. Dyer, Editor, Bombay Guardian, Bombay."

At half-past nine o'clock the following morning (Friday, Dec. 7), Mr. Dyer sent another urgent message to Lord Dufferin, as follows:—

"Thompson, Solicitor, Patna, telegraphs that the Christian girl about whom I telegraphed to you last night was torn yesterday, amidst her struggles and screams, from the arms of Miss Abraham, Zenana Mission, Patna, and given to the immoral man to whom her immoral mother had sold her, by order of European Magistrate Quinn. England expects you to save that girl."

No acknowledgment having been received from Lord Dufferin at 2 p.m., the substance of the foregoing messages was at that hour telegraphed to Lord Cross, Secretary of State for India; to several members of Parliament on both sides of the House of Commons, and to a number of newspaper editors, as mentioned in our issue of last Saturday.

At 4.50 p.m. Mr. Dyer received a message from Calcutta, thus:—

From P. S. G. G.

"I have at his Excellency's direction sent your two telegrams for official disposal."

"P. S. G. G.," it is presumed, means "Private Secretary to Governor-General." An indirect answer to such telegrams as were sent may be permissible. The shame of this telegraphic reply is that although Lord Dufferin has daughters of his own, who may one day—such are sometimes the vicissitudes of life—be in the clutches of human vultures, there is not here one word to indicate interest or sympathy, or the exercise of any personal influence, or the order of any immediate action, to save the perishing child Luchmin. It is not, therefore, remarkable that at 7 p.m. Mr. Dyer sent another "urgent" telegram to Lord Dufferin as follows:—

"If you do not personally interpose, of course you will be held responsible for the ruin of the girl Luchmin at Patna. Remember the Lord's words—'Inasmuch as ye did it NOT to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me?'"

Any woman has a right to intervene on behalf of a women, and a double right on behalf of a young girl. At 7 p.m., also, Miss Richardson, Lady Superintendent of the Reformatory Hospital and Rescue Home, Tardeo, Bombay, telegraphed to Lady Dufferin—

"Implore his Excellency to instantly interfere to save Christian child at Patna from further outrage."

A little later the same evening, a further urgent telegram went to Lord Dufferin from another quarter—

"Have just heard details of horrible outrage at Patna. Strongly urge your immediate interference to save the girl.—H. C. Stuntz, Minister Grant-road Church, Bombay; Hon. Secretary, Gospel Purity Council for India."

Mr. Stuntz received answer the next day:—

"From P. S. Viceroy.

"Your telegram of 7th to Viceroy. Some telegrams previously received on this subject have been forwarded to Bengal Government, within whose jurisdiction this matter lies."

Miss Richardson was replied to a day later:—

"From M. S. V.

"Your telegram to her Excellency. Am desired to inform you that official inquiries are at present being made with regard to the matter."

There was still no sign of personal interest or immediate action by the head of the Government of India—nothing but a hollow attempt to shirk responsibility, and to place it on the shoulders of others. When the hand of an assassin is uplifted to strike a dagger into his victim's heart, it is not sufficient for the man who might stay the murderer's hand, to ask somebody else, if he should think proper, to make an official inquiry.

APPEAL TO LORD LANSDOWNE.

Lord Lansdowne assumed Viceregal power on Monday morning, the 10th inst. The Rev. H. C. Stuntz, hon. secretary of the Gospel Purity Council for India, therefore telegraphed to him on that day—

"I telegraphed to Lord Dufferin on Friday urging his instant personal interference to save a Christian girl who had been illegally consigned to life of infamy by Quinn, European Magistrate at Patna. No satisfactory answer has been received. You are earnestly requested to intervene to save the girl from ruin by this official's decision. Quinn ought to be immediately suspended."

THE CASE IN PARLIAMENT.

Meanwhile a telegram had been received by Mr. Dyer from London saying that Professor Stuart would bring the matter before the House of Commons on Monday, the 10th.

In answer to Professor Stuart's question, Sir John Gorst, Under-Secretary of State for India, is reported by telegraph to have read a report from Quinn on his own doings, and to have stated that "the affair was apparently a dispute between certain missionaries and the natural guardians for the possession of a child." The Under-Secretary "desired the House of Commons to remember that Indian magistrates were bound to administer the law, and that the Queen's Government were under the most solemn obligation to respect the religion and the social customs of the Hindus."

The readers of the foregoing narrative will not need to have the wicked absurdity of Sir John Gorst's reply pointed out to them. Quinn has not been upholding the law, but breaking it. The case is not one of Hinduism versus Christianity, but of the natural and legal rights of an Indian girl to be protected from moral and physical ruin.

Immediately Sir John Gorst's statement in Parliament was published in India on Wednesday morning, December 12, Mr. Dyer telegraphed to Lord Cross, and to a number of members of Parliament and newspaper editors and others:—

"Gorst's statement in Parliament on magisterial outrage upon girl at Patna is untrue. Am sending full particulars by mail."

WHAT WE DEMAND.

What, now, do we ask of the Government? First—That Quinn's illegal and brutal verdict shall be at once declared void. Second—That Quinn shall be immediately suspended, and then dismissed from the public service. Third—That Luchmin shall be compensated, as far as money can compensate her, if she is still alive, at Quinn's expense. Fourth—That the Government shall prosecute Radakissen and Luchmin's mother under the Indian Penal Code. Fifth—That the age at which a girl can legally consent to her moral ruin shall be raised by Indian law to eighteen years.

Corrupted officials, high and low, may regard Luchmin as only a poor Indian girl, but she stands before the world to-day as the representative of the cause of womanhood. God has his purposes in the afflictions of his children. The sufferings of this Christian child-widow will be the means of saving countless multitudes of her countrywomen from a living burial. Nothing but the concession of the demands in the previous paragraph can stop the agitation which in the providence of God has now begun

BRISTOL PUBLIC-HOUSE MISSION. — Mr. Stephen T. Crocker, evangelist, has closed a very interesting mission at the People's Bethel, Callow-hill-street, St. Paul's. Many came direct from the public-house to the services, being drawn by the singing in the open air. A number passed through the inquiry-room professing conversion. Friends sympathising with this work may get all information from the hon. treasurer, Dr. Elliott, 88 Pembroke-road, Clifton.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Dr. Norman Kerr thinks that 60 per cent. of the cases of erysipelas are due to alcohol.

At Rev. Charles Garrett's mission, Liverpool, 912 persons have signed the pledge during the year.

Aberdeen Town Council spent £43 on a recent inspection of the water works. One-third of the amount went for strong drink!

Mr. G. F. Cook, the Gospel temperance missioner, has held a ten days' mission at Brighouse, which has been throughout a splendid success.

Mr. John Abbey, Secretary Agricultural Department C.E.T.S., has been transferred to Norwich where he will in addition act as secretary for the diocese.

The Butchers' Gospel Temperance Society, Meat Market, Moore-street, Glasgow, is doing a good work among the slaughter-house men, and the drivers of dead meat.

FOREIGN.

Mr. Glover has arranged to labour another three years in New Zealand.

A half-hour's temperance lesson is now compulsory in the Auckland district of New Zealand.

President-elect Harrison, of the United States, is understood to favour prohibitory measures for the liquor traffic.

A correspondent states that Amsterdam, Leyden, the Hague, and Rotterdam have only one total abstaining minister of the Gospel each.

At Tamatave, the capital of Madagascar, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, the round-the-world missionary, recently addressed an audience of fifteen hundred natives. The Tamatave paper thanks God for the arrival of Mrs. Leavitt.

To enter the wedge of prohibition by securing the passage of the four-mile law, which vetoes the existence of saloons within four miles of a school building unless the written consent of a majority of both men and women in the locality be first obtained thereto, will be the special work of the Alabama W.C.T.U. for the next year.

The Government College at Sapporo, a Japanese town on the island of Yezo, shows phenomenal zeal in philanthropic enterprises. Through its influence a Christian Church has been organised, a fine church building erected without the aid of a foreign mission, and a total abstinence society formed, which has grown in a few months to have five hundred members, and now publishes a monthly paper.

Temperance reform is progressing in Belgium. Societies have done much to make an impression upon the prevailing drunkenness; now legislation is being vigorously brought to bear, an Act having recently been passed for repressing public intoxication and otherwise reducing the sale of alcoholic drinks. According to a Parliamentary report, drunkenness has taken fast hold of a considerable portion of the working population.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE McALL MISSION.—On Christmas Day a new hall—40, Rue des Arpents—was opened in connection with this Mission at Rouen.

JEWS IN PARIS.—The committee of the French Society for the Evangelisation of Israel has resolved, if possible, to establish a monthly service for Jews in Paris, the various pastors to co-operate in the movement.

AUSTRIA.—The cause of the thirty thousand poor children of Vienna is being vigorously taken up. During the present winter more than forty thousand florins have been subscribed to a fund for providing them with free dinners. The Emperor's name appears on the list of subscribers.

M. DE PRESSENSE has visited several of the cities of France on a campaign for awakening the public conscience to a sense of the dire effects of the spread of immoral literature. We learn from Le Christianisme that the eminent senator has powerfully exposed and condemned the criminal "naturalism" of modern French fiction. He not only speaks of the duty of the Government as to enforcing the laws against obscene literary productions, but urges upon citizens the importance of organising a determined crusade against this fearful evil.

THE KING OF SIAM, a young man of thirty, a friend of the arts and sciences, has had the misfortune to lose his wife in a tragic manner. He has sent his brother to procure a New Testament from the missionaries. The King, he says, has lost faith in his religion; Buddhism offers him no consolation whatever. Now, Buddhism is the State religion of the kingdom of Siam, and, by embracing Christianity, the King would risk his crown and his head. But the fact of a heathen sovereign seeking in the Gospel such hopes as his own religion does not afford, is certainly significant.—Le Témoin de la Vérité.

MALAYSIA.—Mr. John Haffenden, the British and Foreign Bible Society's agent at Singapore, appeals again earnestly for missionaries to Malaysia. While people at home are discussing the proper ways of sending out men, "they leave the Malays to starve" spiritually. There are hopeful signs of blessing, in the meantime, on the work which the Bible Society has been carrying on with vigour for a few years past among the Malays, to whom no Protestant missionaries go. The placing of Pahang under British protection, with a Resident at the court of the Sultan, will by degrees remove obstacles to the circulation of the Scriptures where native coolies sometimes refused to carry any packages containing copies of "the Gospel of Jesus the Messiah."

* For the information of readers in Great Britain, America, and Australia, it may be explained that there are three classes of telegrams in India—viz., "urgent," "ordinary," and "deferred,"—which have precedence in that order, and are paid for accordingly.

Personalia.

Sir Harry Verney lies seriously ill at Claydon, of congestion of the lungs. In view of his great age—eighty-seven—and the unfavourable time of the year, his illness causes no small anxiety to his friends.

Rev. E. Clarke, of the Spezia Mission, is now lying very ill; his life, we understand, has been in peril, but the crisis has passed into hopeful symptoms. He had returned lately from a tour of Italian evangelisation.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness sails to-morrow (Saturday) in the ss. Gallia for America, where he goes particularly to confer with the Board of the American Baptist Missionary Union in Boston, with relation to the new mission to the Balolo nation on the Upper Congo.

Mrs. Allan, an American lady, is fitting up a new house for herself, in which provision is made for the accommodation of ten or twelve guests, to be selected from the sewing girls of New York during the summer months. She expects to entertain several sets of them in succession. Will English ladies resident in the country take the hint?

Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, of the Figueras Mission, is suffering, we regret to say, from fever and throat complaint. Some time since he caught cold after wading through a swollen stream to attend a meeting at Vilabertran. A severe attack of rheumatic fever resulted, and since then he has been subject to attacks such as that from which he is now suffering. Prayer is earnestly asked for the pastor's recovery.

Mr. Wm. Mair, Glasgow, lately business manager of The Christian Leader, and now agent in Scotland for The British Weekly, was presented on Saturday last with a testimonial on behalf of a number of friends. Among those who spoke were the Provost and ex-Provost of Pollokshields, ex-Bailie Selkirk, Rev. James Wells, &c., all of whom bore cordial testimony to Mr. Mair's energy and probity as a business man. Mr. Mair is an elder in the congregation of which Mr. Wells is pastor.

The Bishop of Moosonee (says the Church Worker) exercises jurdisdiction over an area as large as Europe, extending all round the Hudson's Bay territory, and reaching up to the North Pole. The distances are enormous, and the shortest way to the northern part of the diocese is to come to England first, and then go out in the yearly ship which enters Hudson's Bay. The bishop has everything to do for himself, and is a good printer, bootmaker, carpenter, bricklayer, &c. He has been a worker in that far-away locality for nearly forty years.

Mr. John Mackintosh, who has been engaged to write the "Scotland" volume in "The Story of the Nations" series, states that he was sent when a lad of ten years to work on a farm, and afterwards apprenticed to a shoemaker, at which trade he spent fourteen years. He then opened a small stationery shop in Aberdeen, and there, during the intervals of attending to customers, he wrote upon the counter his famous "History of Civilisation in Scotland." Rising at 4 a.m., Mr. Mackintosh has found time to educate himself, and is now engaged in educating others.

Seldom has a nobler part been played (says The Bombay Guardian) by a daily newspaper editor anywhere than by the editor of The Ceylon Observer, Colombo, during the agitation against the licensing of sin in Ceylon. He has spoken in that paper with the voice of a preacher and prophet. All honour to the editor of a commercial paper who, on a great and momentous occasion, in the face of cynicism, ridicule, and all the forces of worldliness, boldly rebukes sin, and champions the cause of righteousness. The world would be a brighter place if there were more men with the courage of the editor of The Ceylon Observer.

THE LORD'S DAY.—The Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association has issued a New Year's address which states that the Post Office authorities have failed to carry out the recommendations of the Select Committee on Sunday Postal Labour, large numbers of postmen continue to work on every day in the year. The directors of the London Road Car Company have departed from their righteous rule of running their cars on week-days only. The Association has, during the year issued 625,000 publications, and engaged in many efforts to preserve the Sunday as a day of rest.

Among the Churches.

SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Major Rapkin is now conducting a series of meetings on behalf of Slum Work at Newcastle, Monkwearmouth, Chester-le-Street, Durham, &c.

METHODIST.

Everywhere, says The Methodist Times, signs are appearing that present-day Methodism is determined to carry on perpetual war with irreligion, and the circuits that are not active—if, indeed, any such remain—will soon be shamed into activity by the zeal of their neighbours.

BAPTIST.

The statistics of the Baptist denomination for 1888 show that that body is increasing greatly in England and Wales. The number of communicants is stated to be 209,558 in England and 75,891 in Wales, with 1,755 ministers, of whom no fewer than 1267 are total abstainers. The Sunday-school scholars number 452,167, with 45,977 teachers. In Ireland there are now twenty places of worship in connection with the denomination, some of which are very largely attended.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. Pedr Williams, now pastor of the Lower Clapton Congregational Church, has had an exceptionally successful ministry of four years' duration in the Tabernacle, Bristol. Within a few months of his settlement the tabernacle was filled at every service, and the roll of membership rose from two hundred to four hundred.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Donald Fraser delivered an address at a meeting held in his church at Marylebone lately, to bid farewell to Miss Helen Leckie, a member of the congregation, who is about to proceed to Singapore to aid in the Presbyterian Mission to the Chinese.

Arrangements have been made to hold a Conference of Sunday-school teachers in St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church (Dr. Monro Gibson's) on Thursday, February 7. Rev. S. R. Macphail, of Liverpool, will deliver an address on, "What are Sunday-school teachers aiming at?"

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Frank Dymond, of Chesham, has been liberated for Gospel service in Canada, by his Monthly Meeting.

Cheering accounts of wide-open doors come from Alaska. The prospect there is good and hopeful.

Want of financial support chiefly appears to have necessitated the removal of Friends' Mission from Mexico city to a smaller city, Matehuala. Such a removal is sad, and very disappointing. The presence of other Protestant churches made it easier to leave the converts there.

The "Annual Monitor" for 1888 is a very instructive and interesting little volume. In addition to the record of all the names of Friends in the British Isles who have died, there are twenty-five memorials; some of which are very touching and beautiful. The average age for the year about fifty-eight years.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Mr. Philip Philips has been giving successful musical entertainments in Belfast during the past week, and intends to visit some of the other cities and towns in Ireland.

The Dublin branch of the Bible and Corportage Society, an undenominational association has been reorganised with the view of carrying on the work of the Society in the province of Leinster.

A successful united temperance demonstration, under the auspices of the Methodist Temperance Association, has been held at Dublin. The annual temperance sermons have also just been preached in most of the Irish Methodist churches.

A pleasing instance of Christian union recently took place in Banbridge, Ireland. The two Presbyterian and Baptist Sabbath-schools joined the Methodist school, and assembled in the Methodist Church to listen to an address from Rev. R. C. Johnson, Conference evangelist.

Rev. John Fordyce, Belfast, editor of The Irish Congregational Magazine, has accepted a call to a wider sphere of usefulness in Australia. Belfast will lose much in the removal of Mr. Fordyce, whose Christian character and ministerial and philanthropic labours have been highly esteemed.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The Paisley Lodging-house Mission is in a flourishing condition, notwithstanding much opposition.

A new mission church, to be conducted on Gospel temperance principles, has been opened at Plantation, Glasgow.

A week of special evangelistic meetings has been brought to a successful close at the Established Church, Haywood, N.B. We believe good has been done.

The Mansfield-street E.U. Church, Govan, under their new pastor, Rev. C. E. Crosthwaite, are coming prominently to the front. The Sabbath evening meetings are crowded.

Good meetings are being held at Bolton-street Mission, South Side, Glasgow, and many have to bless God for the opening of the little mission-hall in one of the worst streets in the South Side.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

At Sehull, co. Cork, Rev. John Triphook, rector, and an earnest evangelical.—At Mullaglass, near Newry, Mr. Wm. Whiteside, an earnest Methodist class-leader and local preacher.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

THE DIVINE PROGRAMME OF THE WORLD'S HISTORY.
"We do not hesitate to pronounce this to be, in our opinion, the best of Mr. Guinness's books. Mr. and Mrs. Guinness have this advantage over Newton and Keith, who so admirably use the same weapon, in that modern discovery in ethnology and archæology has furnished the former with immensely increased confirmations of Scripture, which were not available till our time. This work indicates a thorough mastery of these."—Rock.
"In their new book, 'The Divine Programme of the World's History,' Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness place Bible students under another great debt of obligation to them. If it be true that 'prophecy is history written in advance,' and that the history of the world is none other than the history of man's redemption, what intelligent Christian can fail to be interested in a work in which prophecy is lucidly exhibited as a whole? The evidential value of this book is great, and we hope it will be widely read."—Christian.

REFEREES.

ROBERT BARCLAY, ESQ., of MESSRS. BARCLAY, BEVAN & Co.'s BANK, 54, Lombard Street, London.
SAMUEL GURNEY SHEPPARD, ESQ., 57, Old Broad Street, London. MR. R. C. MORGAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

AFTER labouring for over 30 years among the poor of the East of London, starting and sustaining, with my own money and that of a few personal friends, several religious and philanthropic agencies, their claims have now become so onerous, that I am compelled either to leave the work undone or—for the first time in my life—to make an appeal to the public for help.

This Hall was opened in 1872. In addition to the usual religious Services every night, Open-air Preaching, Temperance Meetings, Sunday-School Missionary Visitation, &c., still carried on, we had for several years a Medical Mission. The Secretary leaving us nearly £300 in debt, we had to pay the money and stop the work. This was most distressing, not only because one-half of our work (to preach the Gospel and heal the sick) was left undone, but because we could by the healing process get access to a class who neither heard nor cared to hear that there was "balm in Gilead" and a Physician there. Thus we lost a great hold upon the very class it is the object and intention of our work to reach. We now, however, intend to again carry on the Medical work, and my son, who is a doctor in the neighbourhood, and who has since, in a limited way, been supplying the poor with medicine and advice gratuitously, is anxious to extend the sphere of operations, and co-operate with me in this important part of my life's work.

To re-organise our old Medical Mission, where patients can be seen and supplied with medicines without charge, and, if necessary, will be visited at their own homes by a qualified medical man. They will in all cases have to present a ticket entitling them to advice and medicine. These tickets can be had in two ways. A certain number will be given away to deserving cases who apply to the Institution itself, or they may be bought in sheets by anyone desirous of giving them away themselves. The sheets contain 50 and 25 tickets respectively, and may be had for a guinea. The sheet containing 50 tickets, allows the possessor to attend at the Institution and receive medicine 50 times; and the sheet containing 25 entitles the holder to 25 visits, including medicine at their own homes, provided they live within the radius of a mile. To make this Institution a success, funds are of course urgently needed. Surely this is a work, the good of which is unquestionable. There is no question of sects involved. The only necessities are poverty and illness, things which are no disgrace and which ought to be relieved. Who will help us in this great and glorious work?

All communications to be addressed to Mr. G. HAMILTON, 59, Mile End Road, London, E.

P.S.—All kinds of left off wearing apparel will be most thankfully received.

No. 989.] FRIDAY, JANUARY 11, 1889.

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER.

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.

[ONE PENNY. POST FREE, 1½d.

The undermentioned Books are published by MORGAN & SCOTT.

THERE is no book of Scripture in which there are more of the very words of God than in LEVITICUS. He is everywhere the Speaker in it. There are, accordingly, no fewer than twenty of the twenty-seven chapters of which it consists that begin with the words "AND THE LORD SPAKE." The book has, on this account, peculiar claims to perusal and appreciation; and it has ever been found to amply reward the thoughtful study of its pages.

THE Book of Leviticus consists of two parts: the first giving directions as to the way of approaching God; the second as to the way of walking before Him unto all pleasing. It has thus instructions for men of opposite characters and experiences: for those who need to draw near for the mercy of God unto life eternal; and for those on whom it is enjoined to "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called."—From "The Gospel in Leviticus." By Rev. Dr. Fleming. Cl. 2/6.

* * * *

"I, IF I BE LIFTED UP from the earth, will draw all men unto MYSELF." This text is an epitome of the Gospel: Christ is the beginning, the middle, and the end. Through Christ and from Christ the drawing Spirit proceeds: to Christ and through Christ the Spirit draws.

John holds up JESUS to public view; but he studiously conceals himself. The disciple whom Jesus loved stands out of sight in this Gospel—that Jesus, like the sun, may fill the whole sphere of vision. There is a lesson here for us: beware of self-display; lift up Christ, take care not to stand in any one's light; take care not to come between any soul and Christ. "I will draw unto Myself."

It is a good sign when one is drawn to the company of the godly; it is a good sign when one is drawn to the study of the Bible; it is a good sign when one is drawn to hear the preaching of the Word of God—for then he is in the way. But it is best of all when one is drawn unto Christ Himself; for then he has reached the end—the sum and substance—of all Gospel ordinances.—From "Christ Lifted Up." By Rev. R. Gilchrist. Cl. 2/6.

"MY BELOVED!"—"My heart is inditing a good matter: I speak of the things which I have made touching" the beauty of my beloved Jesus. Would that I had an angel's tongue and an archangel's eloquence, that I might speak of this sweet and precious theme in such a way that all its loveliness might be expressed for those who love the Saviour, and especially for the daughters of Jerusalem, who may be saying "What is thy Beloved more than another beloved?"

But, although I may not have the gift of an angel's tongue, nor the grace of an archangel's eloquence, in my personal experience of redeeming love I have something better than both; and trust that I may be able, in some measure, to make my Jesus known to others as He is revealed in me. And that this may be so, dearest Saviour, may thy grace be poured into my lips, and thy light into my mind; and "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer."—From "All about Jesus." By Alex. Dickson. Cl. 2/6.

* * * *

WARFARE.—"After ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions," says the Word of God, in Heb. x. 32. Life involves warfare. Life is made manifest in warfare, and is developed and strengthened by warfare. This is the law of God in nature, and the law of God in grace. So, my brother, the trumpet of the Gospel gives no uncertain sound. We are called to warfare. In the spiritual world, as in the natural, foes are permitted to exist; that we, as God's children, in fighting and overcoming them, may grow in grace and strength, and make manifest the beauty and the power of that life which has been imparted to us, to the praise and glory of our God.

Let us ever bear in mind that this warfare comes "after we are illuminated"; comes because we are God's children, not to make us God's children. We are working out the salvation we have received; making manifest the life that God has put within us: working "with fear and trembling," indeed, in view of our terrible foes, and our constant need of Divine help; and in view of the fact that "it is God which worketh in us, both to will and to do of his good pleasure." But we are not working for, but from, salvation. Illuminated, we stand as lights in this dark earth to shine for the glory of God; waymarks, against which the world will rage, just as the waves of the ocean foam and toss themselves against the beacons on the coast, that have invaded their domain to save the mariner from the ruin they would inflict.—From "Life, Warfare, and Victory." By Major Whittle. Cl. 2/6.

* * * *

THE BIBLE.—Upon opening this book, and hastily turning over its pages, we are first struck with the fact that it is made up of sixty-six different tracts, or lesser books. We next discover that these books were written at different times, covering a period of more than fifteen hundred years; and that they were, of course, the composition, humanly speaking, of many different writers—among whom were educated and uneducated men, statesmen and peasants, kings and herdmen, profound philosophers and simple-minded fishermen; prophets, apostles, kings, and priests; just men, and their helpers, as Paul and Luke and Silas. We also find that these books were written in different countries, in different languages, under different circumstances; and were addressed to different peoples—Jews and Gentiles, bond and free, Greeks and barbarians.

We also notice the great variety of its contents. Histories—of the creation; of races, nations, and individuals; divine institutions and ordinances; laws for life toward God and man; revelations of the mind of God and the judgment of Heaven touching all things here below; the opening of the world to come, revealing the destiny of men, both of the just and the unjust; prophecies, and the historic record of their fulfilments: the whole culminating in the New Testament Scriptures, which set forth Jesus Christ, God manifest in the flesh, crucified, buried, raised again from the dead, having purged our sins, and sitting on the right hand of the Majesty on high (Heb. i. 3); the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven giving demonstration and power to the preached Gospel (Acts i.), whereby guilty sinners are converted to God and added to the Church (Acts ii. 47), and, finally, through death and resurrection united with Christ in his eternal glory (Rev. xx., xxi.)—From "In the Volume of the Book." By Dr. G. F. Pentecost. Cl. 2/6.

The Christian.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

THERE are yet some other things to be dwelt upon as to money, especially concerning its being contributed for the Lord's work. Again unwelcome truths must be unsparingly pressed home. There is constantly much said, and well said, on the ordinary lines of giving, which we need not here touch. Our concern now is with some root defects.

We often hear of the CHURCH'S SIN IN WITHHOLDING. This is a grievous evil. It was recently stated in Scotland by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, that American Christians possess many millions of accumulated capital. The combined wealth of English Christians is very probably not less. All the missionary societies are in much need of funds for sustaining their present forces, to say nothing of enlarging their operations and sending out the many who are ready to go. Not only are some treasuries empty, but large deficits are accruing. Anxiety and perplexity are felt by mission leaders. Yet this incalculable store of treasure is in the hands of the professed people of God, and year by year it is prodigiously increased—"treasure heaped together for the last days." This "withholding more than is meet" is a crying iniquity, and tends to spiritual poverty.

But there is a far deeper evil than this, an evil which is both its explanation and its cause—THE CHURCH'S SIN IN ACCUMULATING. How comes the Church to be so rich? It is a startling query. Let every soul heed it. When this is answered the explanation of her tight-drawn purse-strings will appear. Is it in the paths of obedience and conformity to her Lord's word and example she has amassed these riches? Is it a mark of her Lord's favour? Or is it the price of her shame, "the reward of iniquity," her hire of adulterous dalliance with the world? Again, we must get into the white light of God's Word.

THE PRIMAL COMMANDS OF THE LORD JESUS IN HIS LEGISLATION FOR THE SUBJECTS OF HIS KINGDOM ARE UNMISTAKABLE. To those who possess not, He says: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." He added the evident truth that if their treasure was on earth their hearts would also be there. Then, foreseeing how this would be glossed over by the many who would "make the best of both worlds," He adds at once: "The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness! No man can serve two masters....Ye cannot serve God and mammon." He then goes on to speak to them faith-establishing words as to daily needs.

To those who had earthly treasure; He said: "Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Many times and under varying circumstances these same basis commands were reiterated. The Epistles re-echo them in such words as, "having food and raiment let us be therewith content."

What will ye do, ye rich, ye accumulators of fuel for the flames, with these plain commands of your Lord? Will ye explain them away? Vain and foolish and misguided men! Thereby ye plainly declare that your eye is not single. Your grieved Master expostulatingly says, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Ye have in this matter withdrawn yourselves beyond the sacred circle wherein He commands; and, therefore, He sorrowfully says to you: "Thou sayest, I am rich...and knowest not that thou art poor...I counsel thee to buy of Me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich....Be zealous...repent." How suggestive of the light having become darkness is that "I counsel"! How sad a sight! A rich church, and Jesus standing without and knocking! "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

IN THE PATHWAY OF HOLY POVERTY JESUS HIMSELF WALKED. He must needs get from a by-stander the penny with which to confute his adversaries. The fish must bring the coin for the poll-tax. HIS FOOTSTEPS AND PORTION SUFFICED FOR HIS IMMEDIATE FOLLOWERS. "Silver and gold have I none," they could say, and could add, "but such as I have give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk." As a result of the stir and testimony which this produced, five thousand men believed. Behold the reverse with us. Ours is the great world-power, the power of gold. But as it came in, the power to heal, and save, and rescue men from demons, vanished; for this mysterious gift from heaven, like a delicate and powerful perfume, agreeth not well with the coarse odours thrown out from the censer of the gold-worship of this age.

At Pentecost the eye was single, and the whole body full of light, and the multitude yielded to the sweet, strong constraint of the Spirit, and parted with their lands and possessions. How good a thing it was that they did so, and secured treasure in heaven; for shortly after they lost whatever else they in the meantime had gained, and persecution scattered them abroad. "They took joyfully the spoiling of their goods," as the Apostle tells these same Jewish Christians. If any sadness tinged this strange joy it might have been that these also had not been laid up on high. Perilous times are ahead of us. Happy is he whose treasure is where it cannot be consumed.

WHO OF THE DISCIPLES DO WE READ OF AS POSSESSING OR ACCUMULATING MONEY? Who in the Gospels? Judas only. Who in the Acts? Ananias and Sapphira only. Prudence suggested that they retain it, as we moderns do. What do the Epistles record of money lovers? "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have been seduced from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things." What picture does the Apocalypse disclose? A rich and self-satisfied church (Laodicea) with the Lord outside.

There is AN AWFUL PICTURE IN JAMES of rich men gathering treasure, and keeping back the hire from the poor by fraud; living in pleasure on the earth, and nourishing their hearts, while the cries of the poor enter into the ears of the Lord of Hosts. Let this suggest to the Church her responsibility with respect to the great social and political problem of the day—the condition of the starving millions—before which statesmen and philanthropists stand perplexed: "Cruel cheapness"; "The sweating system"; "The unemployed"; these are familiar phrases now. "Sell that ye have, and give alms" stands for ever unrepealed. Who can say but that, if the enormous sums unrighteously hoarded up by the professed people of God were circulating to-day among the poor, the dangerous and unbalanced condition of society might not be regulated to the point of safety? As in the human body the congestion of some organs is far more serious than of others, so may it not be that this congestion of riches in the Church is peculiarly fatal, it being a section of the social fabric? Heathen or Mohammedan countries do not exhibit a parallel to the state of things, in this regard, in so-called Christian countries.

The question is now answered: Why does not the Church give what the Lord's work seems to require? The same spirit of disobedience and worldly conformity that led her to accumulate, in violation of the genius of her calling and its holy unearthliness, leads her to retain her wealth, and give but sparingly, and, too often, grudgingly. Thus she is quite consistent with herself.

There are two GATHERINGS OF MONEY mentioned in the New Testament. One was the price of the possessions of the Pentecostal believers sold in obedience to Christ's command, "Sell that ye have," and laid at the Apostles' feet. What an opportunity was this to secure a fund to enable them to fulfil the great commission, which was still ringing in their ears, and for which the Holy Ghost had just been given! What an opportunity for founding schools in all the surrounding nations, where children could be educated, that, as they grew up, they might read the Scriptures and become converted! Theological seminaries mighl have been endowed. Hospitals and medical work might be provided for against the time when the then full stream of healing power should run dry! But no, the money was only used for the daily distribution to those who had need. There is no mention here of money for the Lord's work.

But we read of another gathering of funds. This time it is from among the Gentiles. It is made throughout the churches. Is not this to enable the Apostles to enlarge missionary operations? No, this also was for the poor—the Jewish saints who had suffered from famine. The Holy Ghost was taking care of his own missionary operations, thrusting forth whom He would, and Himself prompting such to supply their simple needs as He wished should have the honour. Ah! that was the golden age of missions. The heralds consulted not with flesh and blood. They knew neither committee nor comity. There was no danger of the Holy Spirit overcrowding one province or neglecting another. Beacon fires were lighted in every city. Spiritual weapons wielded by spiritual men in spiritual power were mighty to the pulling down of strongholds. They and their Divine Master were not in need of the patronage of the great. These power-filled heralds could not have wrought on lines marked out by human wisdom.

THE GIVING OF MONEY IN THE NEW TESTAMENT CHIEFLY TERMINATES ON THE POOR. Such was the only allusion we have to Christ's giving, when the disciples supposed He had spoken to Judas of giving something to the poor. In all the instances where Christ commands his followers to sell what they had, it was for this same lowly purpose. Zacchæus's giving was to the poor. The collections we have mentioned had the same object. The exception to this is only, I think, where churches are instructed to care for their pastors. We have an allusion of Paul to the Philippians having sent to his necessity. Doubtless believers did sustain those who went forth, but chiefly in the way of showing them hospitality. They had little need of money, as we shall see when studying the rules the Lord laid down for them. But our point now is that the financial question was far in the background, where it belongs, carefully guarded from coming into prominence, by Him who knew where the danger to his work lay: "Lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so their minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."

There are TWO INSTANCES OF COMMENDATION OF GIVING in the New Testament. One is by the Lord Jesus, when He beheld the widow cast into the Temple treasury all her living. The other is the case of the Philippians and other Macedonians who gave out of their deep poverty, both to the collection for the poor Jewish saints and for Paul's personal need.

Can any question remain as to WHAT THE TRUE PROSPERITY OF MISSION WORK REQUIRES? Is it to give? It may be. But the plethora of wealth in the Church requires far more radical and summary dealing than stirring appeals and persuasive exhortations to contribute. "Every plant that my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." The primal command to sell and give to the poor must be revived. Unload, rather than give, is the appropriate word. Cast overboard the heavy cargo that is sinking the leaking vessel, and then with more effectiveness can bread and water be sent to the many other ships that are flying the signal of distress. Cease accumulating, and remand money to its place as a servant, taking its golden sceptre from its hard grasp, and then, on the first day of each week, as the Lord has prospered, lay by in store, and thus giving, even if from deep poverty, will truly forward God's true work far more than tons of yellow gold from the "princes of this world," who never have known and never can know our lowly Lord, and to whom He will yet thunder forth the piercing word, "Thy money perish with thee."

There is yet ANOTHER WORD FOR THOSE WHO ARE POSSESSED OF A HOLY AMBITION TO BE "PERFECT," for as I write I keep in mind the faithful remnant upon whom all depends. It is a word spoken to one who, not unlike them, could plead conformity to much of God's revealed will, and one of whom the lofty testimony is borne, "Then Jesus, beholding him, loved him." The command to him is the command to them: "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come follow Me." Will you also turn away sorrowful? "The disciple is not above his Master, but every one that is PERFECT shall be as his Master."

We will next enter on the methods of mission work.

A MISSIONARY.

THE LORD'S GUESTS.

BY REV. W. H. KING.

THERE is a beautiful truth running through Scripture which, partly because of the form in which it is expressed, does not commonly receive the attention which a truth so impressive demands. When giving instruction to the people, through Moses, in regard to the promised land they were about to possess, the Lord said, "The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with Me." That is to say, ye are my guests. While ye eat the fruit of the land, ye are sitting at my table; ye are guests partaking of my bounty, guarded and cared for by my power. In Ps. xxxix., which is a plaintive prayer offered by David in one of his many times of trouble, he says, "Hear my prayer, O Lord, and give ear unto my cry; hold not thy peace at my tears: for I am a stranger with Thee." I am thy guest, and therefore have a claim upon thy sympathy and thy help.

The scrupulous carefulness of the eastern people, in regard to the rights and claims of hospitality, would give a meaning and force to this thought which are not always perceived by the modern reader. And yet, when the meaning of the words, "a stranger with Thee," is fairly grasped, it is easy for all to see how striking and beautiful is the truth they contain. When we receive a "stranger" under our roof, we charge ourselves to promote his comfort. We bid him freely use what belongs to us, and make himself at home. We welcome his coming, and speed his going, and willingly make ourselves his servants during his stay. Because he is our guest, we feel that he has a claim upon our sympathy and help. That is the plea which David urges in his prayer, for the help of God. "Hear my prayer, O Lord, for I am a stranger with Thee"—I am thy guest.

The same truth is uttered in a very beautiful way in Ps. xxiii. Here David has drawn a double picture: the Divine Shepherd caring for his sheep, and the Divine Host caring for his guest. "Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." Here the tone is radiant and glad. David is celebrating God's goodness to him. He is sitting at a banquet which the Lord has prepared. The spread table, the anointed head, the brimming cup, are God's gracious provision to promote the joy of his guests. He has been called into the banqueting hall, where the banner over him is love. No wonder he says, "I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

It is interesting to notice how an Old Testament truth broadens and clears when brought into the brighter light of New Testament teaching. We take this truth that God's servants are his guests, "strangers with Him," and hold it in the light of the Gospel, and we find that the word "stranger" must be struck out altogether. The believer is, indeed, a guest in God's house, not as a passing stranger, but as a child at home. "Ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." The doctrine of Divine sonship completes and crowns the truth about the Lord's guests. Believers are in the household, sitting at the Father's table, and sharing in the great provision made by the Father's love. Not, indeed, understanding the full glory of the great house of God, but children in the nursery of the royal palace, where troublesome lessons have to be learned, and wise discipline has to be endured, until the time when the heir shall be fitted to enter into his inheritance, and shall be called into the glory and joy of the great banqueting hall, which is heaven. Meanwhile, believing hearts may well rejoice in the glad confidence that not heaven only, but earth also, is our "Father's house," with many mansions, in which there is for each a table spread and a place prepared.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

"LOOKING for that blessed hope, and the manifestation of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." That is our hope. There is a prayer-union of Christians asking Him to come quickly. Can we do anything towards the realisation of his promised appearing? Peter argues—"Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy behaviour and godliness, looking for and hasting the coming of the day of God?" and then he exhorts us to "be diligent that we may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless" (2 Pet. iii.). As Peter says that we may hasten his coming, so also John in like manner seems to make the marriage supper of the Lamb dependent on the bride having made herself ready (Rev. xix. 7). Are Peter's words, "in peace, without spot and blameless," equivalent to those of John, "His bride hath made herself ready"? and are both of these Apostles thinking of God's ideal Church, depicted as the body and the bride of Christ (Eph. iv. v.)? Is it possible that "the times and the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power," are related not only chronologically and physically to the course of this world, but morally and spiritually to the oneness of the body of Christ; to the holy behaviour and godliness of its members; to the readiness of the bride for her marriage with the Lamb?

The priestly and pathetic prayer of Jesus, when his hour was come, made the world's belief in Him as the Sent One of the Father to depend on the manifested oneness of his people (John xvii.). And Paul declares that the revelation of the mystery—wherein the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile was broken down by Him who is our Peace, to make in Himself of the twain one new man, so making peace, and that He might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby—was "to the intent that NOW unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be made known, through the Church, the manifold wisdom of God" (Eph. iii., iv.). Has the oneness of the Church anything to do with the bride making herself ready? Has she surrendered herself to this design of God who created all things, so that to the heavenly powers may be made known now, through her, his manifold wisdom?

Is it possible that our enthusiasm for the coming of our Lord may in any degree have originated from or been strengthened by the conviction that this dispensation has been a failure? and have we given up all hope of the fulfilment of what was evidently designed of God in this dispensation of the Spirit and of the Church?

Jesus said, "Ye are my witnesses," but before they could go forth as such they must be of one accord in the place of prayer; and not until they were of one accord could the promised Spirit be given, by whose power alone their witness could be effective.

We claim to be his witnesses; but we have lost the one accord and forsaken the united prayer, and the Spirit is not upon us in Pentecostal power.

We must be right before we can do right. The powers in heaven were not to be taught the manifold wisdom of God by means of a Church divided into sections and subdivided into individualities, but through a Church whose unity as in Eph. iv. was to be conserved and perpetuated by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part.

It seems as though there were the signs of an awakening to the sinfulness of disunion as well as to the weakness which necessarily accompanies it. Dr. Harris, a man of God, who lived before his time, wrote his valuable essay on Christian Union about half a century ago. It is an exhaustive treatise, if such a subject could be exhausted. Some of his thoughts are being repeated now in tracts and articles in serials on both sides of the Atlantic, by men who probably never saw his book, but are being taught by the same Spirit.

This is the "Week of Universal Prayer." Christians of all denominations in all lands are being convened by the Evangelical Alliance to give thanks and make confession to God; to pray for the demonstration of the Spirit and power in the Church; for families and schools; for home missions and social reforms; for missions to Israel, Moslems, and heathen; and for the outpouring of the Spirit upon the nations. These are great and important subjects, on which all true Christians are agreed. They are of infinitely more moment in the estimation of God and men than any of the questions which divide us into sects. Will they bring God's people together in real unitedness of heart? and if so, will that harmony last beyond the week? If not (and it has not in any large measure hitherto), does it not become the imperative duty of every member of Christ's body, the Church, to seek out the hindrance in himself, and by the grace of God to put it away? M.

THE HOLLOWAY EVANGELISTIC AND OPEN-AIR MISSION, of which Mr. H. Putterill is superintendent, is doing a good work. During the year, for which the report has just been issued, 165 meetings were held at the various outdoor stations, while in the mission-hall, near the railway arch, Holloway-road, services were held regularly, and general Christian effort vigorously advanced. Lodging-houses are visited, and the destitute are cared for. Mr. Putterill's address is 28, Wray-crescent, Tollington-park, N.

THE HOMELESS POOR.—The asylum of this charity, now in the seventieth year of its existence, is in Banner-street, St. Luke's, London, E.C., and it affords accommodation for about 550 men, women, and children. During the colder months of the year nightly shelter and bread are given to destitute applicants. From December 6 to April 23, last winter, 47,291 nights' lodgings were given, and 104,395 rations of bread distributed. The last report states that on Christmas Day the inmates, nearly 500 in number, "were regaled with a substantial dinner of roast beef and plum pudding, to which was added a pint of stout to each person, which, as usual in former years, was kindly supplied by Messrs. Whitbread & Co." It is much to be regretted that the committee of the charity did not respectfully decline the offer of the brewers. Without doubt, many of the guests at the feast owed their poverty and destitution to the use of strong drink. For that reason, if for no other, their friends ought to have carried compassion a little further, and to have so arranged as to not "lead into temptation." The office of the committee is 6, St. Benet's-place, Gracechurch-street, E.C.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. W. Williams, Upton Chapel, Lambeth.

☞ We have received many letters regretting the discontinuance of our Notes on the International Sunday-school Lesson. We are glad to find that they were so much appreciated, and we have determined to resume them in our next number.

The paper by Pastor Archibald G. Brown, from which we made extracts in our last issue, will shortly be published at this office under the title of "The Devil's Mission of Amusement." Those who have ordered copies of the pamphlet will be supplied as soon as it is ready.

The Daily News a few days ago stated that, in case of a European war, the six Great Powers and the Balkan States would be able to bring into the field no fewer than 10,480,000 men, with a reserve of 8,335,000 more, and also 9,195,000 men for defensive purposes in case of invasion. These startling figures mean that more than twenty-eight millions of men are to a certain extent "ready for war," and that some hasty word or rash act might set them at work destroying each other. How necessary it is that every Christian should, day and night, pray for peace, not merely "in our time," but in all time, and should aid in disseminating information in regard to the horrors and sinfulness, as well as of the cost of war.

In the "articles of association" of a large brewery company now seeking subscriptions from the public for their capital, full provision has been made to enable the directors to provide schools, reading-rooms, &c., and to arrange for pensions and allowances for the widows and children of those who have been in their employment. There is, however, an absence (we regret to notice) of all consideration shown for those who have become widows and orphans through frequenting its 370 freehold and leasehold public-houses, to say nothing of the daily misery caused to thousands of families who have been ruined to enable the firm to show an average net annual profit of over £200,000.

The Royal Geographical Society honoured itself in doing honour last Monday evening to the intrepid young missionary pioneer, Frederick Stanley Arnot. In the presence of a brilliant and representative assembly, including savants, statesmen, and a large sprinkling of well-known Christian workers, Mr. Arnot read a most interesting paper, describing his experiences as a traveller across the African Continent. The occasion did not lend itself to any detailed references to his missionary labours, but enough was said by those who subsequently addressed the meeting, to show that in this devoted young brother we have a worthy successor of Livingstone. As Mr. R. N. Cust remarked, the British nation may well be proud of him. Next week we purpose giving a lengthened notice of one of Mr. Arnot's missionary addresses, with some of the remarks made at the Geographical Society's meeting, and a map of his route.

Dr. Salmon's new volume on "The Infallibility of the Church" has, of course, been favoured with bitter attacks in the Romish press. The book will be useful to all who wish to make themselves at home on questions affecting the doctrines of the Romish Church. (Murray, 12s.)

An unassuming and successful effort to relieve distress in the East-end of London is described by Miss Trench in the current number of Longman's Magazine. We commend her paper to the perusal of our readers, as it not only gives some idea of the nature and extent of the destitution, but shows with what humble means and in what simple ways it is possible to cope with a portion of it. Trucks are daily sent out laden with simple but savoury food, which is supplied to working men at a very cheap rate, and to the unemployed at a still more nominal figure. It is surprising how much can be done in the way of relief at little cost.

Thanks to the noble labours of John Howard and his successors, the present state of our prisons furnishes an agreeable contrast to the picture which they presented at the beginning of the eighteenth century, when they were dens of disease, drunkenness, and vice. It still remains a blot upon our prison system, however, that in many gaols and police-courts no adequate provision is made for the separation of hardened criminals and first offenders. The demoralising effect produced by such compulsory association is admitted to be a fruitful source of crime. A grave responsibility rests upon prison authorities who have not yet removed this stumbling-block in the way of reclaiming those who have made a first, and mayhap but a slight, step downwards.

There could be no more mischievous mistake than to try to exorcise the spirit of unbelief by the spirit of superstition. Blackwood's Magazine for this month has a very discriminating paper in proof of these things. Mr. Cowley Brown gives the facts learnt by a visit to the grotto of "Our Lady of Lourdes," as it is termed. Trains full of pilgrims from all parts are filled to overflowing, and these come almost every day. A vast church has been built over the shrine, which has cost close upon two millions of French money. The Roman Catholic clergy, as a whole, though some deplore it, give encouragement to the fanatical transactions. And all this because a morbid and imaginative peasant child swooned and had a dream. It is easier to ask than to estimate the effect of this upon sceptical Frenchmen. We would fain hope, with the writer of the article, that such superstition knocks a nail in its own coffin; but these miserable travesties of religion are a potent weapon in bringing true Christianity into discredit.

We lately referred to the prohibitory limitations which surround Roman Catholics in regard to Bible-reading. In its issue of December 29 The Catholic Household devotes two columns to the subject. Despite the explanations, we must ask to be excused if we still remain unconvinced. The writer says, as to the statement that permission is necessary: "We readily grant that, as far as the letter of the law goes, THE CHRISTIAN is correct enough." After admitting that the Church promulgated the rule in the Index, because there are things in the Bible difficult to be understood, and others "evidently not meant for the young to read," The Household insists upon it that the permission is not necessary in this country. Further on the following appears:

> THE CHRISTIAN may naturally turn upon us and say, Why is the rule we have referred to existing if it is not literally enforced? For this reason: there is no doubt at all that ever since the days of the Apostles "many have wrested the Scriptures to their own destruction"; and by this rule the bishops have the power, if they see fit, to require each one of their flock to obtain special permission to read the Bible, and we can quite imagine certain circumstances arising under which this permission, in writing or otherwise, would be urgently required for the salvation of souls. In such a case the bishops, by the rule in question, would have the power of insisting that special permission should be obtained, and those who disobeyed them would then be guilty of grievous sin, and, until they submitted to the commands of their lawful spiritual superiors, "absolution" would certainly be denied them.

We do not wish to prolong this controversy, but we are bound to say that we see little hope of an agreement with our Romish contemporary. The foregoing paragraph appears to us to reassert in the plainest manner all that The Catholic Household has been trying to explain away. We unhesitatingly join issue, and say that, if the Scriptures have been wrested by many in the past to their own destruction, it has been done by the so-called priests or bishops, and not by the people. We contend for a free and open Bible for all who choose to read it. So long as the Roman Catholic hierarchy hedge about this liberty with any sort of limitation or barrier, we shall not cease to oppose such a system, as being utterly at variance with the first principles of Christianity.

The following appeared in nearly all the German editions of the translation of the Bible which was made during the reign of Queen Mary by those illustrious exiles, John Knox, Miles Coverdale, Anthony Gilby, Christopher Goodman, and others:—

"ON THE INCOMPARABLE TRANSLATION OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES."

Here is the spring where waters flow
To quench our heat of sin;
Here is the tree where truth doth grow
To lead our hearts therein.

Here is the Judge that stints the strife
Where men's devices fail,
Here is the bread that feeds the life
That death cannot assail.

The tidings of salvation dear
Come to our ears from hence;
The fortress of our faith is here
And shield of our defence.

Then be not like the hog that hath
A pearl at his desire;
But takes more pleasure in the trough,
And wallowing in the mire.

Read not this book in any case,
But with a single eye;
Read not, but first desire God's grace
To understand thereby.

Pray still in faith with this respect—
To fructify therein;
That knowledge may bring this effect
To mortify thy sin.

Then happy thou, in all thy life,
Whatso to thee befalls,
Yea, doubly happy shalt thou be,
When God by death thee calls.

Judging from the Pope's New Year's address to the cardinals, he is still indisposed to drop the question of the temporal power. He appears to think that the Papacy should enjoy some special rights and privileges in Italy, where, he says, "it was established by Providence three centuries ago." There is little fear that united Italy will allow herself to become the special appanage of the Vatican. When the annals of the Papal States are called to mind, it is difficult to repress a smile at Leo XIII.'s assertion that "to vindicate the rights of the Sovereign Pontiff is in reality to advance the prosperity of Italy." To claim for the Papacy that it is "the greatest moral power in the world" is to ask men to forget all that has happened during the last thousand years. Only a slight acquaintance with history is needed to show the blighting and demoralising effects of Papal rule.

The following editorial remarks in The Daily News of Monday embody, we think, the voices of sense and wisdom. They are written with respect to the curious, and as yet unexplained, suggestion, of Mr. Gladstone as to arbitration between the Pope and the Italian Government:—

> The Pope is in law neither more nor less than an ordinary Italian citizen. He is not the "prisoner of the Vatican," being perfectly free to come and go as he pleases. That he is also the spiritual head of the largest Christian Church has nothing to do with the matter. Italians have conquered their freedom from sacerdotal authority, and they mean to keep what they have got. The cause of international arbitration is a great, we had almost said a sacred one. It is, therefore, the more important not to connect it with utterly impracticable projects. The Italian Government and Parliament would no more submit their undoubted jurisdiction over the national capital to the decision of foreigners than we should ourselves. Some zealous Catholics argue that the Vicar of Christ cannot be left at the mercy of sa .ngle Power. But the Pope has the remedy in his own hands. If he does not like Italy, he can go somewhere else. The world is all before him, where to choose, nor would he be compelled to live always in the same country. A free, united, and independent Italy has no desire to hamper his movements, but a fixed determination never again to recognise his temporal claims.

An Archdeacon, in Harper's Magazine, writes of the American pulpit as being less courageous than the English, and more accustomed to denounce worldliness than to define it. It is to be hoped this is not true, for the pulpit in this country is not strong in the direction of definiteness and plain speaking. The writer pleads for sermons less academical and dealing more with every-day realities; aiming less to convince man's reason, and more to touch his moral nature. He warns against argumentative sermons which chase what the people regard as theological butterflies. He declares that the "model" sermons supplied to preachers are written by men out of touch with the people, and are totally unfitted to interest or influence plain business men.

The writer of the article approaches the very heart of the matter when he pleads that students for the ministry, whose piety is often immature, need an influence at college which shall conspicuously guide, stimulate, and instruct their own spiritual life. Ministerial learning is important; but, if the pulpit is to be an instrument to lift the age out of its materialism and irreligion, spiritual truths, which have to do with personal experience, must be taught to young candidates for the ministry.

In the same magazine there is a very suggestive paper on Irish manufactures. The large factory conducted under temperance auspices by the Richardsons in Armagh has around it everything conducive to the intellectual, social, and material interests of the workers, while its 20,000 spindles, and corresponding looms, turn out linens and damasks which have won a world-wide reputation. In the town surrounding it there is no public-house, no policeman, and no pauper. There are three denominational churches, also schools, library, and savings bank. Is it too much to hope that heads of manufacturing firms everywhere may come to realise how much they may do by such care for their employés? Few things would go so far in quieting and curing that social discontent which is the mother of revolution.

As the time is close at hand for the County Council elections, we would express the hope that Christian electors will sit loose to mere party ties, and support only those candidates who will manfully strive to remedy the pressing social evils of the day. Men of high principle, full of an earnest, God-fearing spirit, who will dare to denounce wrong whenever and wherever found, are now more than ever needed, alike in Parliament, in the council-chamber, and on the magisterial bench.

STEWARDSHIP—RESPONSIBILITY.

A CORRESPONDENT draws attention to an example of practical devotion and recognition of "Stewardship" and personal responsibility mentioned in the missionary organ of the Moravian Church for December. Referring to a deficit of £3400, Brother F. Ellis says: Three years ago, when they were facing a similar state of things, the late Brother Eugene Reichel wrote a timely article in The Herrnhut:—

"As a member of our missionary church, I feel that I have my share of responsibility for our renewed mission debt. Therefore I gratefully welcome the practical proposal that again we should not so much look at the great sum to be raised ere we can be abreast of the current expenses of our evangelistic and pastoral work in far lands of the earth, but that we should divide that total by the number of members, and each one of us look his or her share in the face. In this connection I should like to relate what came under my own observation in 1877, when we had a deficiency of nearly £6000.

"I visited a member of our Unity, a shoemaker by trade, and the father of a numerous family. 'I have been looking at our balance-sheet,' he said. 'We have fallen behind our duty to the work of the Lord in our hands once more, and I have been reckoning so: Our church numbers 30,000 members, young and old, in its three home provinces, and our deficiency is 120,000 shillings. Divide these hundred and twenty thousand shillings by the thirty thousand members, and you find four shillings falls to the share of each. Well, there is my wife and myself and our five children—that makes seven. Consequently $4 \times 7 = 28$; I have therefore 28s. to pay as my share.' And at once he took out his purse and laid £1 8s. on the table.

"A year later the deficiency amounted to more than £4500. And what had our shoemaker to say to that? Did he complain, 'What I gave last year was all very well for once, but I cannot dive so deep into my pocket every year.' No; without wasting a word, he just reckoned up again to find his share. 'Ninety thousand shillings divided by the thirty thousand members gives three shillings a head. And here am I and my wife and all our five children alive and well, thank God. Consequently $3 \times 7 = 21$; yes, 21s. is our share.' And he laid £1 1s. on the table.

"One feature which particularly struck me was that our brother did not make his giving dependent on what others might or might not do. He did not say, 'If they will give their share, I will give mine.' He concerned himself with his own share, and his conviction of duty found immediate expression in action."

MR. DENHAM SMITH.—The recent fogs and trying weather have caused Mr. Denham Smith much uneasiness, and led to the return of symptoms which in the past have been followed by increased prostration.

Personalia.

Lady Lansdowne has accepted the office of President of the Marchioness of Dufferin's fund in aid of the women of India, and has been presented with an address of welcome from the native ladies.

Rev. John McNeill.—Just as we go to machine we get the information by telegram that at the meeting on Tuesday of the Edinburgh Presbytery, Rev. John McNeill accepted the call to Regent-square Church, London.

Mrs. Josephine Butler is still very unwell, and her husband, Canon Butler, whose health received a severe shock two years ago, when he caught cold attending the funeral of Mrs. Butler's brother at Bilston, has had another relapse.

Dr. Barnardo will not be present at Stepney Causeway on Tuesday, the 15th inst., having to fulfil an engagement that day at Brighton. According to a recent arrangement, Tuesday is his regular day for receiving visitors to the Stepney Homes.

Miss Abraham, who has taken such a strong personal interest in the case of Lachmi, the Hindu Christian widow referred to in our last issue, is a missionary in connection with the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, not the Church Missionary Society Zenana Mission.

Cardinal Lavigerie's lectures on slavery have attracted immense audiences in Rome. He says his chief hope in helping forward the anti-slavery crusade in Italy lies in the women. As woman is the worst sufferer from slavery, so, when women are plainly told of the system of kidnapping, from them will come the main strength of the movement for its suppression.

Mrs. Booth, says The Methodist Times, exhibits great Christian resignation, but the disease from which she is suffering makes steady progress. There is reason to hope that, by a judicious use of the hours of freedom from pain, she may be able to dictate (she has lost the use of her right hand) her reminiscences and recollections of the rise and progress of the Salvation Army.

Alderman Charles Wathen, Mayor of Bristol, upon whom the Queen has conferred the honour of Knighthood, is a prominent Baptist layman. He was financially one of the pioneers of the Congo Mission, and he has, says The Baptist, ever been a ready helper of all good works amongst the body to which he belongs. One of the Mission stations on the Congo is named after him.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.—Very unwelcome news was communicated to the congregation at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, on Sunday last. It was stated, in letters read from Mentone, that on the previous Sunday afternoon Mr. Spurgeon had slipped down a marble staircase, bruising a knee, and knocking out a couple of loose teeth. By the latest accounts the injury received is more serious than was at first supposed, Mr. Spurgeon's knee being badly hurt, besides a severe shock to his system. At the close of the evening service, on Sunday, conducted by Rev. M. G. Pearse, a special meeting was held, at which earnest prayer was offered for the beloved pastor's recovery, in which we and all our readers fervently unite.

Canon Isaac Taylor's attack on missions is the subject of a brief but powerful article in the January issue of Regions Beyond, by Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness. Quite agreeing with the Canon in maintaining that "the work would be better done if the missionaries were perfectly faultless, unselfish, devoted, heroic saints," Mrs. Guinness tersely says: "But an incumbent of the Established Church, in the enjoyment of a remarkably good living, with a very small charge, who dwells at ease in England during its pleasant summer, and enjoys himself in Southern lands during its winter, and who does not even subscribe the conventional guinea a year to the C.M.S., is hardly the man to hold up a high standard to his fellows!"

CIVITA VECCHIA.—A Mission for Seamen has been established at this Italian port, in connection with the Sailors' Rest Society. It is on temperance and unsectarian lines. A reading-room and Bethel will be kept open, local friends co-operating with Mr. S. Burrowes, of Naples, who will pay periodical visits as superintending missionary. Rev. J. Wall, of Rome, is president of the undertaking, the operations of which will, it is hoped, be attended with much blessing. Mr. Burrowes's address is 15, Flavia Goija, Naples.

XII.—TIMELY AND NEEDED HELP.

HEBREWS iv. 11.

NEED! Time of Need! Every hour we live is a time of need, and we are safest and happiest when we feel our needs most keenly. If you say that you are rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing, you are in the greatest destitution; but when you know yourself to be wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked, then the travelling merchantman is already standing on your doorstep, knocking (Rev. iii. 17—20). It is when the supply runs short, that Cana's King makes the vessels brim with wine.

Have you been convinced of your need? If not, it is quite likely that you will live and die without a glimpse of the rich provision which God has made to meet it. Of what use is it to talk to those already satiated, of rich provisions and sumptuous viands? But when the soul, by the straits of its necessity, has been brought to the verge of desperation—when we cry with the lepers of old, "If we say we will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there; and if we sit still here, we shall die here," then we are on the verge of discovering the rich provision that awaits us (2 Kings vii. 8), all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies (Eph. i. 3), and all things that pertain to life and godliness (2 Pet. i. 3). There are two causes, therefore, why many Christians are living such impoverished lives; they have never realised their own infinite need, and they have never availed themselves of those infinite resources which hang within their reach, like fruit from the stooping boughs of an orchard in autumn.

Our needs are twofold; we need mercy.—This is our fundamental need. Mercy when we are at our worst, yes, and at our best; mercy when the pruning knife cuts deep, yes, and when we are covered with foliage, flower, or fruit; mercy when we are broken and sore vexed, yes, and when we stand on the paved sapphire work upon the mountain summit to talk with God. The greatest saint among us can no more exist without the mercy of God than the ephemeral insects of a summer's noon can live without the sun.

We need grace to help.—Help to walk through the valleys, and to walk on the high places, where the chamois can hardly stand. Help to suffer, to be still, to wait, to overcome, to make green one tiny spot of garden ground in God's great tillage. Help to live and to die.

Each of these is met at the throne.—Come, let us go to it. It is not the great white throne of judgment, but the rainbow-girt throne of grace. "No," you cry, "never. I am a man of unclean lips and heart; I dare not face Him before whom angels veil their faces; the fire of his awful purity will leap out on me, shrivelling and consuming. I exceedingly fear and quake, or, if I muster courage enough to go once, I shall never be able to go as often as I need, or to ask for the common and trivial gifts required in daily living." Hush, soul; thou mayest approach as often and as boldly as thou wilt, for we have a great High Priest, who is passed through the heavens, and one who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities.

A PRIEST.—Deep down in the heart of men there is a strong and instinctive demand for a priest, to be daysman and mediator, to lay one hand on man, and the other on God; and to go between both. Wit and sarcasm may launch their epithets on this primordial craving, but they might as well try to extinguish by the same methods the cravings of the body for food, of the understanding for truth, of the heart for love. And no religion is destined to meet the deepest yearnings of the race, which does not have glowing at the heart the provision of a priest to stand before the throne of grace; as, of old, the priest stood before the mercy-seat, which was its literal prefigurement under the dispensation of the Levitical law.

A curious proof of this human craving for a priest is given in the Book of Judges.—On the ridge of the hills of Ephraim, stood the ancestral home of a wealthy family, containing within its precincts a private sanctuary, where, though there were teraphim, ephod, and vestments, yet there was no priest. Nothing, however, could compensate for that fatal lack. And Micah said to a Levite, who happened to pass by: "Dwell with me, and be unto me a father, and a priest." And when he, nothing loath, had willingly consented, Micah comforted himself by saying, "Now I know that the Lord will do me good, seeing I have a Levite for my priest." But the same feelings that actuated him were shared by a portion of the tribe of Dan, on their way to colonise a remote part of the country. They, too, must have a priest, and so, while 600 armed warriors stood around the gate, five men stole through the court, broke into the little chapel, carried off its images and other apparatus for worship, bribed the priest, by the offer of higher wage, to accompany them; and, long before the theft was discovered, the whole party had resumed their journey, and were far upon their way.

All families of mankind have followed the same general programme.—Wherever they have built homes for themselves, they have erected the wigwam, the pagoda, the Parthenon, the obelisk-guarded temple, the Gothic minster, fashioned after the model of the forest-glade, a leafy oracle petrified to stone, and they have chosen one of themselves, set apart from ordinary work, and sanctified by special rites to minister, treading its floors, and pleading at its altars, interceding for them in times of famine, pestilence, and plague; blessing their arms as they went forth to fight, and receiving their spoils of victory; making propitiation for sin, and assuring of forgiveness.

This craving was most carefully met in that venerable religion in which these Hebrew Christians had been reared.—The sons of Aaron were the priests of Israel. They wore a special dress, ate special food, lived in special towns, whilst every care was taken to accentuate their separation to transact the spiritual concerns of the nation. For sixteen centuries this system had prevailed, rallying around it the deepest and sacredest emotions, and, like ivy, entwining itself around the oak of the national life. And, as we have seen, it was no small privation for these new converts to wrench themselves from such a system, and accept a religion in which there was no visible temple, ceremonial, or priest.

But here we learn that Jesus Christ is the perfect answer to these instinctive cravings which blindly pointed to Him in all ages of human and Hebrew history. This is the aim of these opening chapters, and by two lines of proof we have been led to the same conclusion. Before us stand two mighty columns; the one is in chaps. i. and ii. of this Epistle; the other is in iii. and iv. They have a common base from which they spring—the Sonship of Christ. The first column is called, Christ better than Angels, and this is the scroll around its capital, that Jesus, as man's representative, has entered into the glories promised in the eighth Psalm. The second column is called, Christ better than Moses, with this scroll around its capital, that Jesus, as our representative, has entered into the Rest of God. And each of them helps to support a common chapiter, the Priesthood of Christ. The first two chapters end with a description of the merciful and faithful High Priest, who makes reconciliation for the sins of the people (ii. 17, 18). The next two chapters close with the words on which we are dwelling now, about the Great High Priest (iv. 14). In the mouth of two witnesses every word is established. We need no human priests. Their work is done, their office is superseded, their functions are at an end. To arrogate any priestly functions of sacrifice, of absolution, or of imparting sacramental grace, is to intrude sacrilegiously on ground which is sacred to the Son of God; and, however royal such are in mien, or intellect, they must be withstood, as Azariah withstood Uzziah, saying, "It appertaineth not unto thee to burn incense unto the Lord, but to Jesus, our Great High Priest; go out of his office, for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honour from the Lord God."

A HIGH PRIEST.—A Priest of priests, able to sacrifice, not only for the people, but for all the Priests of his house; and alone responsible for the rites of the great day of Atonement, when every other priest was banished from the precincts of the Temple, whilst the high priest, clad in simple white, made an atonement for the sins of himself, his family, and his people.

We have been made priests unto God, but our priestly work consists in the offering of the incense of prayer and praise, and the gifts of surrendered lives. We have nothing to do with atonement for sin, which is urgently required by us, not only for our sins as ordinary members of the congegation, but for those which, consciously or unconsciously, we commit in the exercise of our priestly office. Our penitential tears need to be sprinkled by his blood; our holiest hours need to be accepted through his merits; our noblest service would condemn us, save for his atoning sacrifice.

A GREAT HIGH PRIEST.—All other high priests were inferior to Him. He is as much superior to the high priests as any one of them was to the priests of his time. But this does not exhaust his greatness. He does not belong to their line at all, but to an older, more venerable, and grander one; of which that mysterious personage was the founder, to whom Abraham, the father of Israel, gave tithes and homage. "Called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec." Nay, further, his greatness is that of the Son of God, the fellow and equal of Deity. He is as great as his infinite nature and the Divine appointment and his ideal of ministry could make Him.

PASSED THROUGH THE HEAVENS.—Between the holy place, where the priests daily performed the service of the sanctuary, and the inner shrine, forbidden to all save to the high priest once each year, there hung a veil of blue. And of what was that blue veil the emblem, save of those heavenly curtains, the work of God's fingers, which hang between our mortal vision and the marvels of his presence-chamber? Once a year the high priest carried the blood of propitiation through the blue veil of separation, and sprinkled it upon the mercy-seat; and in this significant and solemn act he typified the entrance of our blessed Lord into the immediate presence of God, bearing the marks and emblems of his atoning death, and taking up his position there as our Mediator and Intercessor, in whom we are represented, and for whose sake we are accepted and beloved.

TOUCHED WITH THE FEELING OF OUR INFIRMITIES.—He hates the sin, but loves the sinner. His hatred to the one is measured by his cross; his love to the other is infinite as his nature. And his love is not a dreamy ecstasy, but practical, because all the machinery of temptation was brought into operation against Him. It would take too long to enumerate the points at which the great adversary of souls assails us, but there is not a sense, a faculty, a power, which may not be the avenue of his attack. Through eye-gate, ear-gate, and thought-gate his squadrons seek to pour. And, marvellous though it be to say it, yet our High Priest was tempted in all these points, though there was no faltering in his holy resolution, no vacillation or shadow of turning, no desire to yield. "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in Me."

All his experiences are vividly present to Him still; and whenever we go to Him, pleading for mercy or help, He instantly knows just how much and where we need it, and immediately his intercessions obtain for us, and his hands bestow, the exact proportion of either we may require. "He is touched." That sympathetic heart is the metropolis to which each afferent nerve carries an immediate thrill from the meanest and remotest members of his body, bringing at once in return the very help and grace which are required. Oh, to live in touch with Christ, always touching Him, as of old the woman touched his garment's hem, and receiving responses, quick as the lightning flash, and full of the healing, saving virtue of God (Luke v. 28).

ZULUS IN NATAL.—Rev. James Scott, Impolweni, in a communication to The Missionary Review of the World, says:—"A very unexpected and interesting work has been begun among the Zulus in Natal. Three years ago God's Spirit worked in a marvellous way amongst these people. The commencement of this has been attributed to different human agencies; the Boers themselves say the chief agent was the reading and meditating upon God's holy Word. After varied experiences, one and another amongst them began to feel that they were new creatures in Christ Jesus; although they had been members and office-bearers of the Church, yet they now for the first time felt Christ a living power within them. No sooner did one speak to his neighbour of the change which had come upon him or her than the reply came, 'Such also is my experience'; and soon whole families were rejoicing together and praying for their neighbours and kinsfolk."

OPIUM IN CHINA.—Let the Christian world continue in prayer that God may touch the conscience of all concerned. Parties to the great sin are not only opium merchants, but the Indian officials who, in Bengal, by subsidies, assist planters of the poppy, and who buy the whole opium crop and prepare it in Government workshops expressly for the Chinese market. In this sin Christian England also shares; for "under the specious name of the home charges of the Indian Government, England is annually exacting a tribute of fourteen millions sterling from India. And England's sin, and England's punishment, unless she repents, more or less involve all Christendom. Our sharing of responsibility and the Chinese feeling were vividly impressed on the writer once when preaching on the street in Shashing. Hell was mentioned, and a fine-looking elderly man exclaimed, with equal courage and severity: "Yes, there is such a place. Since you foreigners came, China has become a hell!"—Missionary Review

THE latest addition to the "Expositor's Bible" series is not an exhaustive exposition. The student who consults it for help in expounding some of the most important texts in the Pastoral Epistles may be disappointed. The author has dealt only with selected portions—important, no doubt; and perhaps in treating these he has dealt generally with the whole. His exposition is in many respects interesting and valuable. It displays an extensive acquaintance with early Christian literature; makes many valuable allusions to questions of the day; except upon the subject of Inspiration, shows but little sympathy with the higher criticism; and has much that is soundly evangelical in tone.

But the more carefully we read it, the more are we compelled to qualify our commendation. Its evangelicalism appears to us to be neither strong nor spiritual, and is accompanied by so much High Church teaching as to make it almost valueless. The author's treatment of 1 Tim. iii. 1—10 is not an exposition, but a defence of his own particular theory of the Christian ministry. In this defence he mentions as one thing "practically certain," that "the question as to the origin of the Christian ministry has no practical bearing upon the lives of Christians"! (p. 106). The italics are his own, but the note of exclamation is ours; for in our judgment the question has a most important bearing upon practical godliness. But we understand his reason for this assumption when we read that, whatever the method prevailing in New Testament times, "our duty towards the constitution consisting of bishops, priests, and deacons, which existed unchallenged from the close of the second century to the close of the Middle Ages, and which has existed down to the present day in all the three great branches of the Catholic Church—Roman, Oriental, and Anglican, is in no way affected" (p. 107). This appears to us like begging the question. The words we have italicised will indicate the author's attitude towards the Papacy; it is a branch of the "Catholic Church."

On the same page there occur the following words, alluding to what had become the practice in the second century: "God's providence (!) ordained that the universal form of Church government should be the episcopal form, and should continue such." If such a system of argument were allowed, every deadly error of the Romish system could be charged upon the providence of God. The argument is as foolish as it is dangerous. Pursuing the same subject, the author says—page 112—"we find that each local church is constitutionally governed by one chief officer...who universally receives the title of bishop." If this were all that he means by episcopacy, the Congregationalist or Presbyterian would have no reason for complaint; but such an episcopal system gives no support to that "constitution of bishops, priests, and deacons" which the author seeks to defend.

Equally unsafe is the author's teaching on the laver of regeneration" (Titus iii. 4—7). On page 288 he says, "It is by means of the baptismal washing that the regeneration takes place." "The laver or bath of regeneration is the instrument or means by which God saves us." Again, on page 289, "Baptism destroys the old corrupt element in man's nature by washing it away, and saves the regenerated soul by bringing it into a new life." These statements are, of course, consistent with High Church teaching, but they seem to us to be dangerous and unscriptural to the last degree.

One of the most objectionable elements in the book is its bold defence of prayers for the dead. The frail ground on which the author would support this practice is the reference to Onesiphorus in 2 Tim. i. 16—18. The conclusion he reaches is "that the death of a person does not extinguish our right or our duty to pray for him" (p. 326). We emphasise the word "duty." This is pressed more strongly on p. 328: "May we not pray for the dead to aid them in their progress? And if, with St. Paul's prayer for Onesiphorus before us, we are convinced that we may pray for them, does it not become our bounden duty to do so?" We are interested in noting in what way such a pernicious conclusion is reached from such a harmless text. The method of argument is ingenious, if nothing else. From the fact that the Apostle salutes "the house of Onesiphorus," and not Onesiphorus himself, the author concludes that Onesiphorus was dead. The author does not absolutely assert it, but he claims that "the balance of probability" is in favour of such a view (p. 324). The next step in the argument is the statement that in the first clause of ver. 18 we have "a prayer that the Judge at the last day will remember those good deeds of Onesiphorus, which the Apostle has been unable to repay, and will place them to his account" (p. 325). These two things—a probability, and a somewhat doubtful explanation of the Apostle's prayer—are all the proof which the author can adduce on behalf of this extraordinary practice. He admits that "Scripture elsewhere is almost entirely silent on the subject"; yet this "probable" explanation of one solitary text is deemed sufficient ground for urging the duty of prayers for the dead! But what if the author's "probability" should prove to be a mistake, as (he admits) the great mass of Protestant commentators believe, where is the duty then? Neither reason, nor tradition, nor both combined, will suffice to warrant a practice fraught with such mischievous consequences.

These are serious complaints to urge against a book in many respects able and helpful. Indeed it is doubtful whether such pernicious teaching may not be more effective for evil because of the evangelical truth with which it is accompanied. As an issue of the "Expositor's Bible" series we must confess ourselves greatly disappointed with the work. Are the editor and publishers exercising sufficient caution? Doubtful and dangerous exposition is worse than no exposition at all. To aid in circulating such books among undiscriminating readers of the Scripture is a serious responsibility.

THE MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN have received an anonymous donation of £875, to defray one-fourth of the cost of constructing the cruising hospital ship Alice Fisher.

DELIVERANCE.—DEAR SIR,—Those of your readers who have been remembering us in prayer will be glad to hear that the trial took place on December 18, when, in spite of a most violent attack by the Public Prosecutor, the jury acquitted us, thank God. So wonderfully did the Lord interpose in behalf of his servants, that the very man who was most active against us, and ordered our arrest, was, to our amazement, busy on the morning of the trial, trying to dispose people favourably towards us. "Praise the Lord, for He is good, for his mercy endureth for ever."

Yours in Christ, H. MAXWELL WRIGHT.

THE MISSIONARY FAILURE.—Rev. H. Rice, Madras Missionary, has written a reply to Canon Taylor's attack, which is published as a small pamphlet by Messrs. R. & R. Clark, Edinburgh. In closing he says:—"We have had as much success as we have any right to expect, and more than we have deserved. We have no right to complain that the progress of missions has been slow, but must take to ourselves the blame, and ask ourselves why it has not been faster. Surely it is on account of the diluted character of much of our Christianity, the inconsistent lives of many of its professed followers, and the apathy and indifference of the Church at large. If our consecration only matched our opportunity, we should soon be within measurable distance of a regenerated world."

Medical Mission Story.

G—— was one of the first cases we were called to see on the opening of our Mildmay Hospital for another year's work in Bethnal Green. It was against his will that we went. One of the ladies who visit in the district urged us to call on him. We had some difficulty in finding the court where he lived. It was a court within a court, from the corner of which a staircase led up to his solitary room. There sat G——, propped up in bed, covered with a miscellaneous collection of clouts, which served for bedclothes. His grate was fireless, and his room and person dirty in the extreme. There was a look of despair, and yet of determination, in his face. He was between 60 and 70 years old, he told us, and "about as far from the one as the other." His right hand had been amputated in '37 (the year of the Queen's coronation, which he well remembers), before the days of chloroform; and his left heel had been "cut," as he put it, in one of the London hospitals, leaving him somewhat crippled.

We removed the linseed poultice from his left hand, and a shocking state of matters was revealed. It all arose, he said, from a crush to the tip of the middle finger which he had received some three weeks previously. The wound festered, and the matter travelled up into the palm, and then up the arm almost to the elbow, so that hand and arm alike were swollen much beyond their natural size. We urged him to come into hospital at once, and have it seen to, but he stoutly refused, and asked to be left alone to die. Many influences were brought to bear on him all that Saturday to induce him to come in, but he refused. He was willing to have our dressings put on his hand, however, but would not allow any "cutting."

By the evening the ladies who help to carry out our treatment in the district had dressed his hand three times, put him between clean sheets, given him blanket and clean pillow-case, brightened up his grate with a fire, and by other little attentions, got into his favour. Next day the dressings were continued, and by the Monday he gave us permission to make a much-needed incision. On the Tuesday evening he consented to have chloroform, and allowed us to do what we thought necessary. One of the ladies sat up with him all that night, to see that all went well. From that day he steadily improved; the matter gradually left the arm, the hand, and at last the fingers. Several small incisions had to be made from time to time before this result was obtained, so that he used often to say, "The best part of a doctor is his back."

He always saw the witty side of a thing. One day, for example, he had a good laugh as he told us of the determined way in which little twelve-year-old Sally (who was his devoted nurse throughout his long illness) drove the darning needle into his hand, when he asked her to do that little surgical operation for him. And at the daily dressings he would be sure to have a joke out of something. We asked him one day what he was going to have for dinner. "Last night's supper warmed up" was his way of hinting that he had none in prospect. Many of his dinners after this came out of a special fund.

He was very ingenious, too. When his left hand was well he had made a table, some shelves, and a wooden fender. He had also put together a pair of boots, much to the surprise of a neighbouring shoemaker, who couldn't see how it was possible to pull the stitches tight with one hand, till G—— enlightened him. His ingenuity stood him in good stead one night, when, waking very early and feeling very hungry, he remembered some biscuits that he had in a box on one of the shelves. Though he was very shaky on his legs, he managed to scramble out of bed and knock the box down with his right stump. Some of the biscuits fell on the table, and these he picked up with his teeth.

The minister of his parish took an interest in him, and one day sent him some "baccy." Sally used to fill his pipe, light it, and put it in his mouth, where it would remain till she came home from school to remove it, or till we visited him, when he would apologise for smoking in our presence, and then ask to have it removed. G—— was evidently much touched by this thoughtful act on the part of the minister, and it was no doubt one of the many things which led him to say, as he often did, "I had heard talk of such people as you. I had read of them in books, but didn't believe there were any of them, as I had never come across them."

Among the first indications that God's Spirit was at work in him was his frequent repetition of a couplet which he had learned in childhood:

> Not more than others I deserve,
> Yet God has given me more.

But with this there was a good deal of self-righteousness, and it was a long time before he came out one day with the confession that he had been a wicked man. He prided himself upon his honesty. His occupation was that of a hawker of fruit and vegetables; and he told us that, at one house where he used to call, before he met with the injury, he sometimes found the servant blowing up the butcher, because the meat was short weight. But that when he came on the scene, she used to say to the butcher, "Here comes the greengrocer, I never have to weigh after him."

His favourite chapter was that about the Prodigal Son, which would move him to tears, whenever it was read. One day he pointed to the roof of the neighbouring parish church, which he could see through his window, as he sat up in bed. It was the cross on the roof that attracted his attention, and helped to keep constantly before his mind what he had no doubt been hearing that morning. About this time he made the promise that if ever he got up from that sick-bed, the first Sunday he was able to get out, he would go to that church in the morning, and to our meeting in the evening. He lived to do both, and has been a regular attendant at church and mission-hall ever since. He had not crossed the threshold of a place of worship since 1843, when he went to church to be married!

The minister already referred to, who knew something of him before his illness, remarked on the change in him, and told us that he had been a sceptic and scoffer at religion, as well as a drinker. His life now bears witness to his being a believer and an abstainer. He asked us about the drink one day during his convalescence. He had not had any during his illness, and he asked if we thought a little would hurt him now. We need hardly say what our answer was. He told us, only the other day, that we little knew the struggle it had been to keep his promise to have no more to do with it, especially as one or two of his best customers are publicans. He gets out of it by saying "the doctor has forbidden it." He would rather lose their custom now than drink. The people in the street where he lives call him "the seven days' wonder"; they don't believe he will hold out.

He has gone back to his work now, and is obliged to hire a boy to pull the barrow. His hand, though much improved, is still stiff. There is just sufficient movement in the fingers to enable him to handle money; but he can't fasten a single button himself. This difficulty he has overcome by ingenious contrivances, which are really quite a study.

A sovereign was given by a few friends, to set him up in stock. He laid it out with great care, and went out for the first time about a fortnight ago, and has turned over his stock more than once since, earning sufficient to cover all expenses except rent. The accumulation of his rent was a great source of anxiety to him during his illness; but some friends helped him in that too.

He is brimful of gratitude for all that has been done for him. He stopped us in the street only last week, to ask if he might be allowed to leave at the hospital on Saturday a bunch of "the best celery in London, for the ladies' Sunday tea," and told us that during the week he had come across something about us people in "the Book" (a Bible) which had been given him. While fingering over the pages, with none to guide his hand but God's Spirit, his eye caught those verses in Deuteronomy (xv. 7—11; xxiv. 19—21) which speak of the relation which should exist between God's people and the poor; verses which we have much need to remember at the present day. He gave us the chapters and the verses from memory, and one or two of the sentences which had stuck to him.

His whole case affords an illustration of the power of consecrated lives in the hands of God's Spirit. For it was by the lives, rather than by the words, of those who came around him in his sickness that G—— was first impressed with the reality of the religion of Christ.

A HOME FOR THE HOMELESS.

DEAR SIR,—We have about 70,000 English soldiers in India, and these men are practically homeless. The Government, of course, provides them suitable barracks; but they are strangers to that quiet, social intercourse and those holy influences which we associate with the word "home." Amongst other efforts to bless and save our fellow-countrymen we have just opened a Soldiers' Home in Bangalore, where there is stationed the largest garrison in South India. In this Home the men can have refreshments without strong drink, and abundant recreations without the opportunity to gamble. There is also a good library, and rooms for reading and prayer.

On January 26 I hope to sail for India to resume my work in Bangalore, but before leaving England I must, if possible, raise at least £100 towards the completion of our scheme. The Home is entirely unsectarian, and is visited by men of all creeds and classes. The total cost has amounted to £500.—Yours sincerely, A. BURNET, Wesleyan Chaplain.

JOHN WESLEY.—Rev. W. Peek Smith, the moving spirit in the recent "Charles Wesley Centennial" observance, proposes that the centennial of John Wesley's death, March 2, 1791, shall be celebrated by dedicating a great Memorial Church in New York, free to the masses, and trusts that someone with the same fire that the Wesleys had shall be the preacher.

BATH PUBLIC-HOUSE MISSION.—A lady interested in this Mission gave a tea to the dustmen and scavengers of the city in the Railway Mission Hall, Monmouth-street. A goodly number of them partook of her thoughtful kindness, and listened with marked attention to the Gospel addresses given afterwards. Miss Skinner, 5, St. James's-square, Bath, the secretary of this Mission, will be glad to give any information.

EAST AFRICAN MISSIONS.—A meeting in aid of the Gleaners' Union of the Church Missionary Society was held recently at the residence of Miss Filder, in Rome. Mr. J. W. Probyn gave an account of the Frere Town settlement, for rescued slaves, warmly commending the action of the English East African Company, in paying down the sum of £3000 for the ransom of runaway slaves who were claimed by their Mohammedan masters, after having joined the Christian community at Rabai. Bishop Cheetham spoke of the work in West Africa as being full of encouragement to those who have at heart the cause of Christ in the Eastern part of the Continent. Miss Grace Filder, secretary of the Rome branch of the Gleaners' Union, received the names of fresh members.

For the Young.

VEMBA AND NKOIYO.

SOME of the young readers of THE CHRISTIAN will no doubt remember Vemba and Nkoiyo, two black boys from the Lower Congo River, who came to England six years ago, and spent fifteen months in our country. Both of these dear lads had learned of the Saviour's love from the missionaries, and during their stay in England we were often rejoiced to see by their words and actions that they had given their hearts to the Lord Jesus, and were trying to please Him in their daily lives. Their chief desire seemed to be that the Gospel should be preached to their countrymen, and on more than one occasion I remember Vemba pleading in broken English and with tears in his eyes for "teachers" to be sent to his people.

Since they returned to their own country we have had news of them from time to time, and are deeply thankful to know that they are still showing themselves faithful soldiers of Christ, and are shining for Jesus in the midst of the darkness of heathenism. Vemba belongs to the royal family of his tribe, and when the present king dies will take his place and title. He is now living at the mission station at Palabala, and helps in the school work there; while his knowledge of English enables him to be of use to the missionaries who are studying the Congo language.

Among his own people Vemba is looked upon as quite an orator. He has a natural gift for speaking, and preaches the Gospel of God's love very clearly to his fellow-countrymen. Both the boys learned to read and write English when they were with us. They write to us sometimes, and still remember with affection their friends in England. A few months ago, Vemba sent us an elephant's tusk, and with it came the following account of his hunting the wild animals, which I give in his own words:—"At Banza Manteka a man came and told us that the elephants were in his town, and had eaten all the plantains. The people were very sorry, and asked us to shoot them. So three of us went out into the woods where the elephants were. They ran up and down the woods, and one of them came very near us, so we shot and wounded him, and he ran away to the other woods. We went after him into the other wood, and we saw another one and shot at him. When the first one heard the firing he came after us with tremendous noise. We had to run fast, but he was rather afraid himself and did not come very far... When we got to the top of the hill and looked down, the valley was full of elephants, so I shot one which had very large tusks. He fell down on the ground, but those that came after him lifted him up and helped him away."

In Nkoiyo's last letter from Palabala, he says:—"I and two others went to preach about two day's journey from Palabala, and on the way we spoke the word of God to everyone we met. The first night we came to a town and lodged there. After our supper we talked to the people. One young man after he heard us speak said he wanted to be 'Muntu a Nzambi' (a man of God), and to live at the mission station to be near the people of God. So we spoke to him very earnestly about his soul, and now he is at Palabala. The next day we started to go to Vunda, and we went through a way where the people of Vunda keep some of their false secrets called 'Nkitá.' When the chief heard that the white man's people were coming that way, he came out with a lot of men and guns to see what we wanted. We said to him 'We do not want to do anything to your Nkitá, but to tell you about the true God.' They were very angry and almost ready to shoot us, but we did not fear them, but went on and passed on the left side, leaving the Nkitá on the right side. When we reached the town nearly all the people came out to see us.

"So we did not wait, but began to preach, and told them that God who made them did not want them to worship 'Nkitá.' After we had done speaking the chief was sorry he had behaved so badly to us, and gave us a clean house to sleep in. The next morning we spoke to the people again, and when we went away the king gave us a goat and a bunch of plantains. Then we returned through another large town, doing the same work all along."

Since writing the above Nkoiyo has been taken to a college for coloured people in America by one of the missionaries. There he is studying medicine, and when he goes back to Africa we trust that he will be better fitted to follow in the footsteps of our Saviour, who "went about doing good" to the bodies and souls of men. He has been there about fourteen months, and the last news from him is contained in the following letter:—

"Dear Miss F.,—I want to write and thank you very much for your letter. I should have written before, but we are always busy studying. I find arithmetic harder than anything else. We begin work at 10.30 every day, and recite until 3.30. To-morrow will be Sunday, and I have been looking over the lesson, Joshua iii. I enjoy the Sunday-school very much. Some people here think that I shall never go back to my country. They tell me America is better. But they are mistaken. I know God sent me here that I may work for Him better afterwards. When they say this to me I always tell them that I must go away back to my own people to tell them about Jesus who is our Saviour. Letters are a long time coming from the Congo; for two months I have not had any. I am quite well, and trusting in Jesus.—Your friend, NKOIYO STEPHEN."

RABBITS.

A mistake is often made by supposing that rabbits, kept in confinement, do not require water. At times it appears that they suffer fearfully from want of it, and even devour their young for the sake of the moisture; and that others distend themselves with green food, for the same object. The Band of Mercy (a valuable little periodical, inculcating humanity to animals, published monthly at the low price of one halfpenny, by S. W. Partridge, 9, Paternoster-row), in giving instruction as to feeding rabbits, adds, "Always keep an earthenware vessel full of clean spring water. Some people have an idea that rabbits do not require drink, but this is wrong, as they always enjoy a small quantity of water." And The Animal World (issued by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, also published by S. W. Partridge, monthly, price twopence), informs us that water must never be neglected on any account when a rabbit has young; the want of it will drive the poor creature to madness, and to kill them. They require water always.

THE Y.M.C.A. MISSIONARY.

ON Tuesday afternoon, December 18, there were gathered in one of the state-rooms of the ss. Gaelic, lying at the wharf of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in San Francisco, California, a small company of seven men; they sang two verses of the hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," and then had two prayers, the whole repeating at the close the Lord's Prayer. These were a band of earnest Christian young men, met together to say "Good-bye" and "God bless you" to Mr. Luther D. Wishard, who for twelve years has been the very efficient college secretary of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States.

Mr. Wishard was just leaving for a five years' work among the young men of Japan, China, India, Ceylon, and Syria. He goes out as the pioneer in the work, to strengthen the associations already established and to organise new ones. A great and grand field lies open in the Orient for this work of young men for young men, and no one is better able to view the field and do pioneer work than is Mr. Wishard. The prayers of hundreds of Christian young men will follow him and his devoted wife in their journeys.

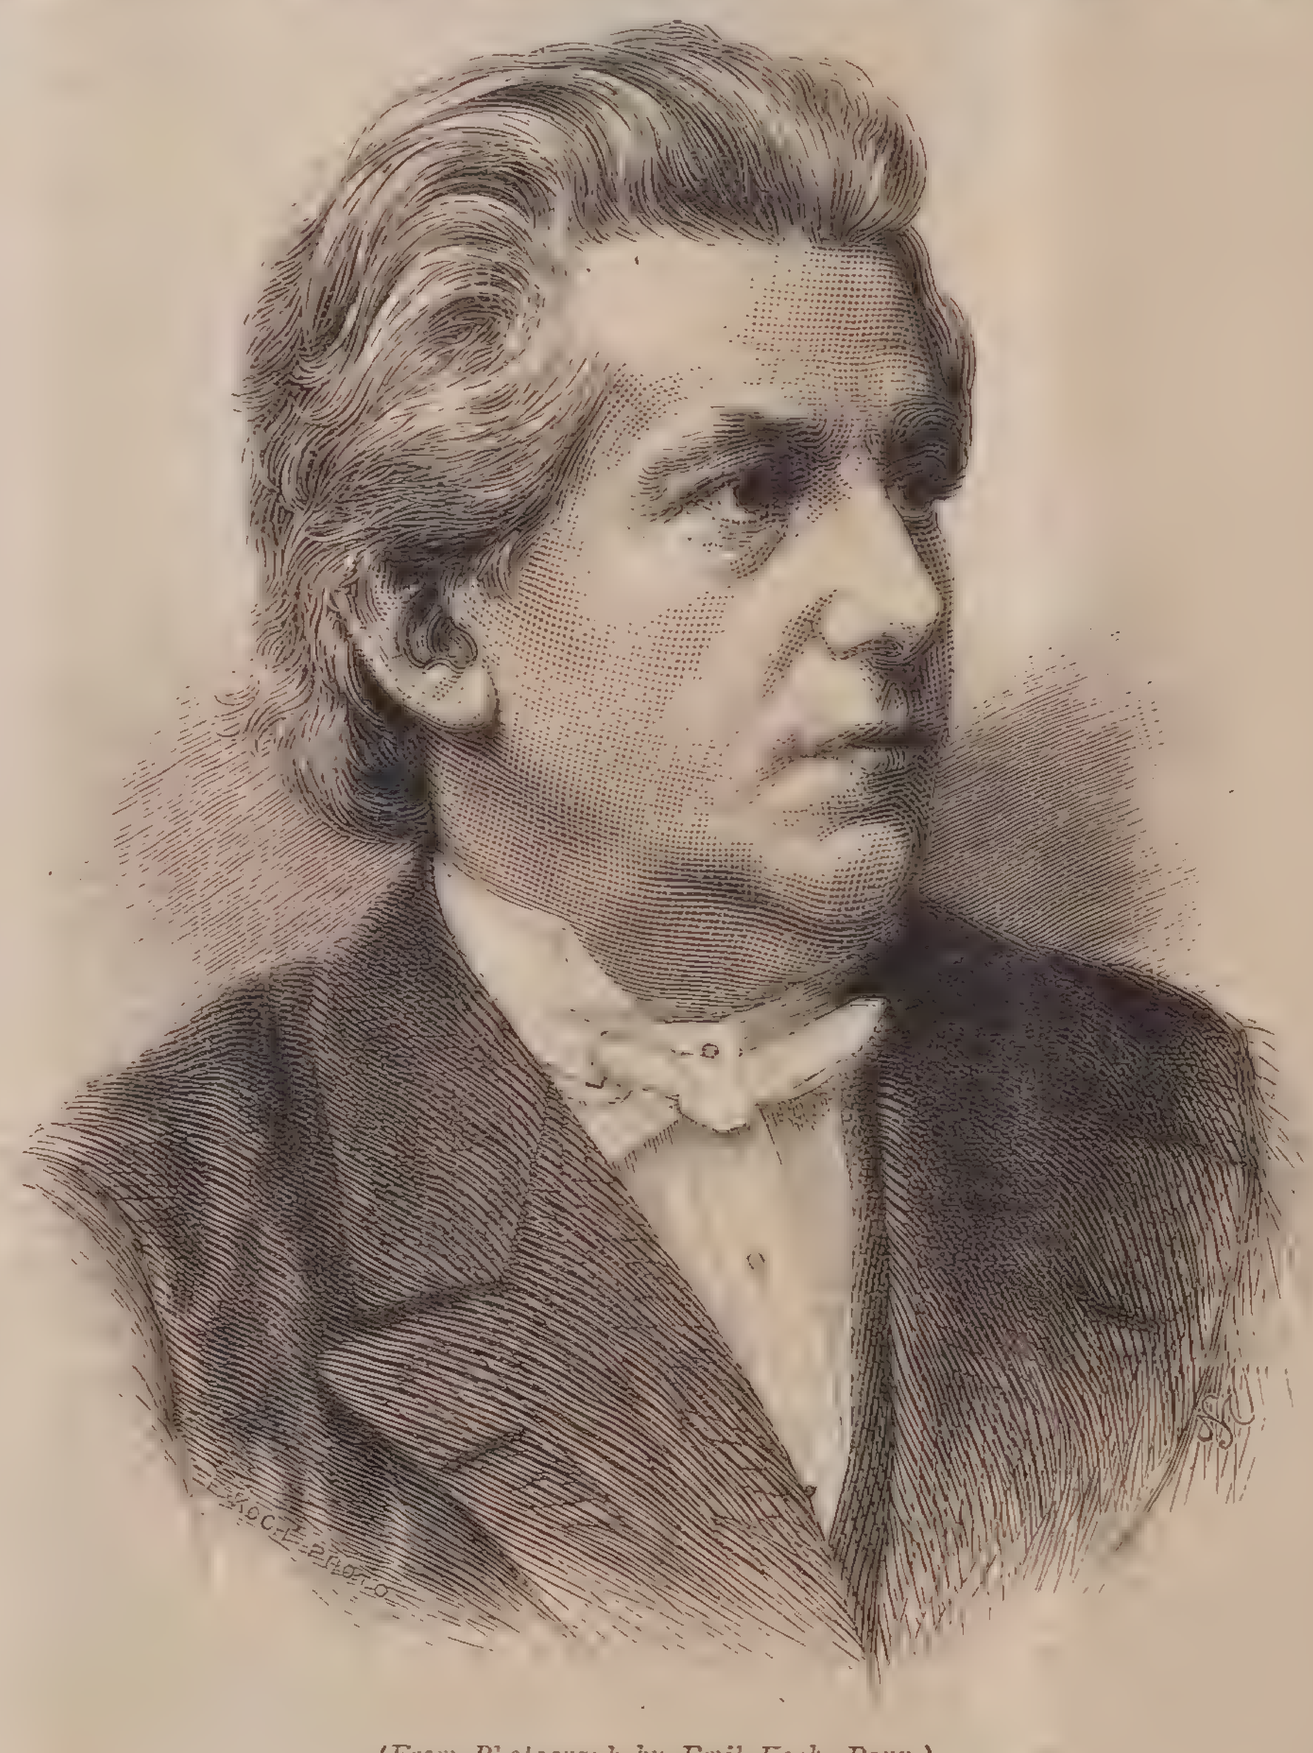
VIVISECTION.—Mr. B. Bryan, secretary of the Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection, has written to the Chancellor of the Exchequer strongly protesting against Sir Henry Roscoe's proposal that the British Government should contribute towards the Pasteur Institute.

NEW BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.—Much aggressive Christian work is done by this organisation, by which a mission is conducted in the Victoria Hall, and with which is incorporated the Shore Mission. The sixteenth annual report evinces an earnest desire on the part of the committee to help the various churches, while doing all possible to lovingly proclaim the Gospel. The hon. secretary and treasurer is Mr. T. A. Leigh, Lyndhurst, New Brighton.

THE SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH in railway waiting-rooms, workhouses, hospitals, prisons, and other institutions, has issued its thirtieth annual report. During last year many thousands of Scripture rolls, hand-books, and leaflets were circulated, and they are now bearing their silent testimony in all quarters of the globe. Printed in various languages, these publications present the Gospel in epitome to the eye of many who otherwise would never have it brought under their notice. We rejoice to find that the work is being heartily supported by the Christian public in general. The depôt is 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne; secretary, Mr. F. Woodhouse.

PROFESSOR THEODORE CHRISTLIEB,

Bonn University, Prussia.



IN the person of Professor CHRISTLIEB, the well-known thoroughness of German culture and the plain directness of English preaching are found happily combined, and in association with a spiritual fervour which is much to be desired in theologians everywhere. The career of this useful man very fairly exhibits his many sterling qualities.

Born at Birkenfeld, Würtemberg, on March 7, 1833, the subject of our sketch has led a life of remarkable activity from his youth up. His father was pastor at Birkenfeld, and subsequently Dean of the church of Würtemberg at Ludwigsburg. Early influences were accordingly salutary, and under them Theodore gave promise of spiritual as well as intellectual distinction. At the age of eighteen he entered upon University life, studying at Tübingen from 1851 to 1855. After discharging for a short period the duties of private tutor in a nobleman's family at Montpellier, South of France, he spent two years as assistant pastor in Würtemberg, proceeding in the meantime to his degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

In 1858 Dr. Christlieb came to London, where he remained until 1865 as pastor of the German congregation in Islington. When he assumed the charge, the church was still in its infancy, and assembled in a lower room of the Islington Chapel, Upper-street. Under his faithful ministry and powerful preaching, the numbers so increased that an independent building soon became a necessity, and the German Church, Fowler-road, near Cross-street, was accordingly erected. The congregation is a United one, comprehending members of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches. The present pastor is Rev. T. Kübler. As many Germans have removed to other parts of the Metropolis, the chapel is no longer central. In Dr. Christlieb's days, however, the congregation was a flourishing one. The sermons were a great attraction; there was, moreover, earnest work among the children, also a German Y.M.C.A., which has since developed into the vigorous organisation having its home in 28, Finsbury-square. Periodical lectures in German on the evidences of Christianity were a feature of Dr. Christlieb's ministry, as they were also undoubtedly a preparation for, and a prophecy of, the great service which he has since rendered to the Church in the department of Christian apologetics. While at Islington our learned and hard-working friend evinced a great interest in the revival movement progressing in Ireland, and contributed many articles to German theological papers on the awakening which was then passing over Great Britain.

Leaving England, to the regret of many friends, he returned to the Fatherland, and officiated for about three years as town pastor at Friedrichshafen, on the Lake of Constance. To this he was called by the King of Würtemberg, who resides there during the summer. From 1868 until the present time, Dr. Christlieb has filled the chair of Professor of Theology at Bonn, in Prussia, being at the same time University preacher. In 1870, he received the degree of D.D. from the University of Berlin, and nine years later was enrolled a Knight of the Red Eagle. These are indications of the esteem in which he is held by those who have had the best opportunities of seeing and judging of his work.

In Christian apologetics, as already intimated, Dr. Christlieb has rendered an important service to the Church of his generation. During the past ten years his work, "Modern Doubt and Christian Belief," has been exercising a powerful influence in England and America, several editions having been called for. It is made up of lectures addressed to earnest seekers after truth, and has for nearly twenty years been before the public of Germany. In the original it has had a wide circulation. A paper read in 1873 at the Evangelical Alliance Conference, New York, on "The Best Methods of Counteracting Modern Infidelity," was published in English, German, French, Dutch, Swedish, Danish, Italian, and Greek. A year later, Dr. Christlieb received, in acknowledgment of his work on "Modern Doubt," the George Wood Gold Medal, from the Tract Society of New York.

(From Photograph by Emil Koch, Bonn.)

It is, however, in connection with mission work that Dr. Christlieb has of late years been more prominently before the Christian public. From 1874 till now he has been co-editor of the monthly Allgemeine Missions-Zeitschrift, and much of his time and thought have been devoted to urging upon the Church her duty to the heathen abroad, and the unevangelised masses at home. At the Evangelical Alliance Conference, in 1879, at Basel, he read a paper, which was afterwards enlarged into a book, and went though several editions in several languages. It was known to English readers by the title, "Protestant Foreign Missions: their Present State," and contained a vast amount of information condensed into a small compass. The work did much to awaken and stimulate Christians in England and America to an increased interest in missionary effort, and, as it came out shortly after a book from the same pen, entitled "The Indo-British Opium Trade and its Effects," it caused the name of Dr. Christlieb to be enshrined in the hearts of large numbers who felt strongly on the subject of sending the Gospel to the heathen.

In 1884, in conjunction with some friends, and with the valued assistance of Rev. E. Schrenk, the well-known evangelist, Dr. Christlieb founded the German Evangelisation Society, in connection with which a training school for evangelists was, two years later, opened at Bonn. This valuable institution is called the Johanneum. The building has an interesting history, having previously been the scene of the varied labours of Dr. Wm. Graham, of the Irish Presbyterian Church. The English population of Bonn having greatly decreased, and Dr. Graham being unable to continue the work, which was intended to reach Jews as well as Germans and English, the Presbyterians sold the place to the Evangelisation Society, and it is very gratifying to know that many of the agencies which were so near to Dr. Graham's heart—including the Bible and prayer-meetings — are to-day carried on in the same spirit in which they were begun, and with much blessing to many. Young men of from twenty-three to thirty years of age are received into the Johanneum, and trained in theology, with a view to fitting them to do the work of evangelists. The course extends over three years, and the students are very carefully selected—men whose hearts God has touched, and who wish to devote their lives to preaching the Gospel. Nine students are at present being instructed, under two professors; a tenth is soon expected, and then the institution will be full. Each year some of the oldest leave for work in the large towns. A high spiritual tone pervades the Johanneum.

Those who best know the state of religious life in Germany will most accurately estimate the value of this evangelical movement and its agencies. The enemies of evangelical truth are in earnest, and have many well-educated and able spokesmen who oppose the Gospel message, and do their best to disseminate rationalistic ideas. The evangelists sometimes have to meet these men, and, in order that they may hold their own against them, they require some training. Dr. Christlieb well knows what training is needed, and he sees that the institution fully supplies it. His homiletical lectures are practical and stimulating in a high degree. He makes a practice of hearing the students preach, and then points out faults in matter and manner. All these services to this valuable institution are rendered gratuitously and with pleasure, and that by one whose time is of the greatest value, and who has daily professorial duties to the largest theological class in Germany. Dr. Christlieb's Sunday evening "at homes" are well known. Students and others, Germans and foreigners, are always welcome, and instruction is imparted in many ways.

The Evangelisation Society was at the first somewhat misunderstood by the clergy of Germany. It is pleasing to learn that much of the prejudice which once existed has now been outlived, and that the pastors are heartily recognising the new movement. Dr. Christlieb has been permitted to advocate its claims at the largest religious gatherings in the empire, and many poor pastors have given handsomely towards the development of the work. Lately, in Berlin, he had an opportunity of explaining the principles of the Society before a meeting at which the present Empress was in attendance. Since then he has had the pleasure of receiving from the Emperor a substantial expression of his interest in the work. The movement in Germany in favour of a revival of evangelical religion is deep and widespread, and it extends from the throne to the poorest class. There is a distinct recoil from rationalism, and, as this finds expression, the Evangelisation Society enjoys the support of more and firmer friends.

Additional rooms are now being added to the Johanneum, in order that more students may be received. The results, so far, have been so encouraging that it is much to be regretted that debt should embarrass the work. There is, however, a liability of £2000 on the property. To raise such a sum in Germany will be very difficult; it is gratifying to be able to say that already many friends in Great Britain and America have rendered kindly and welcome assistance. In a communication to us recently, Dr. Christlieb said: "Help is wanted. Do recommend our growing evangelistic work to the sympathy of your readers." This request we cordially comply with, for the cause is one that cannot but commend itself to all who sincerely desire the spread of the Gospel.

It were needless to mention in detail the many works not already noticed which have within the past thirty years appeared in Germany from his pen. They are as varied in character as they are high in object, including Christian biography, doctrine, and practice. He wrote the article on the "History of Christian Preaching," in the Supplement to Herzog's well-known Encyclopædia. It is a work perfectly unique in modern literature, giving an account of preaching from the earliest times to the present day, in all countries. The names of all the most celebrated preachers are brought in, with quotations from their sermons, and much besides in the way of comparison, criticism, and generalisation. Several of Dr. Christlieb's addresses and sermons have also been printed, and not a few of them translated into other languages and published. A book on Medical Missions is now in the press, also an essay on the training of evangelists, both of which will have many sympathising readers in Great Britain.

While residing in London, in 1861, Dr. Christlieb married Miss Weitbrecht, daughter of the late well-known lady of that name, widow of Rev. F. F. Weitbrecht, of the Church Missionary Society. He has three sons and three daughters; one of the former is already a pastor, and the eldest of the latter is wife of Dr. Sutton, C.M.S. medical missionary, at Baghdad.

We trust many more years of usefulness are before this good and able man, who numbers several English scholars among his warm friends. All these latter proclaim his great usefulness; probably no Englishman knows more of his seminary work than Professor Evans, of New College, London, who speaks alike highly of the man and hopefully of his important enterprise. With the blessing of God, the Johanneum will yet be the heart-centre from which new life will stream forth through the German Empire and beyond.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION, by means of its fine boats and gallant crews, did grand work last year, resulting in the rescue of 617 persons from what threatened, in a great majority of the cases, to be certain death by drowning. In addition to this, the life-boats helped a number of vessels into safe waters, and thus prevented much loss and distress as well as sacrifice of life. The office of the Institution is 14, John-street, Adelphi, London; secretary, Mr. Charles Dibdin.

SACERDOTALISM.—Our contemporary, THE CHRISTIAN, in its review of the year (from the pen of Rev. William Guest, F.G.S.), makes some able remarks on the religion of Ritualists, which, it contends, is calculated to deprive the laity of their rights, and to set up on the ruins of their spiritual liberties a sacerdotal system, which will give power to the priest. Our contemporary is right, for clericalism invariably flourishes where there is religious indolence among the laity, and no sooner do the clerical party get into real power than they become intolerant, and thus the way is prepared for scepticism. The great bulk of the laity will not submit to the yoke of clerical bigotry, and their rebellion against it drives them off into infidelity, too many of them confusing Christianity with the narrow-minded dogmas of some Christian teachers. —Rock.

THINK ON THE GOOD.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—PHIL. iv. 8.

IF there be any virtue in thy friend,
A budding flower upon a guilty breast,
Fix on that flower thine eye, and it will lend
A beauty to the tattered, sin-stained vest.

If in the sky that is above thee spread, [flood,
Dark with the storm-clouds of a threatening
There is one rift of blue, lift up thy head,
And thank the Giver for this gleam of good.

There are sweet fruits in every fading hedge;
So gather not the browning leaves alone.
There is a snowdrop 'mid the frost, a pledge
Of sunny days when winter's gloom is gone.

Oh, wherefore do we always see the shade,
And stand upon life's darkened, blackest side,
Forgetful of the sunbeams that have made
The very shadows that the sunshine hide.

Look from thy failing and a failing world
Up to the perfect Christ! No spot is there!
Unstained perfection thou shalt there behold;
Consider Him! for He is wholly fair.

REFORMATORY & REFUGE UNION.

FOR twenty years or so this Union has not only been doing much good by means of its agencies for the protection of the young and raising the fallen, but it has been a welcome and strong rallying point for workers among women, children, criminals, and other weak and distressed classes standing in need of a helping hand and a sympathising heart. There are between six and seven hundred preventive and reformatory institutions affiliated to the Union, the work of which will, it is hoped, be greatly blessed during the year upon which we have just entered.

On Wednesday evening, last week, the annual New Year prayer-meeting was held, when a number of friends assembled at the offices, 32, Charing Cross, S.W., and earnest petition was made for Divine guidance and continued blessing. The chair was occupied by Mr. W. E. Hubbard, and a very helpful address was delivered by Mr. J. H. Tritton. A spirit of thankfulness for past mercies pervaded the proceedings, and also of confidence of success in the future with the good hand of God upon the work. Mr. A. J. S. Maddison is secretary of the Union.

SAILORS' NEW YEAR'S FESTIVAL.—About two hundred seamen, including some of foreign nationality, were entertained to tea by the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, at the Sailors' Reading-rooms in Ratcliff Highway, on Tuesday, Jan. 1. A meeting was afterwards held in the adjoining Seamen's Chapel, to which many others came who had not been invited to tea. The building was consequently crammed to overflowing, and many had to be turned away for want of room. The men were addressed by Messrs. M. H. Hodder, W. H. Seagram, G. J. Hill, Mrs. Hill, Miss Messer, and others. Several seamen also bore testimony to the blessedness of leading sober and Christian lives, and urged others to begin the new year by looking to Jesus. In the course of the proceedings there was a distribution of presents, each parcel consisting of a woollen comforter, a pair of mittens, and a bound book to serve, perhaps, when far away, as a reminder of what some declared to be the best New Year's night they had ever spent. As it was evident that numbers had been deeply impressed, an after-meeting was held, to which many remained, and the workers were kept busy till nearly eleven o'clock dealing with anxious souls. Thirty-nine seamen signed the temperance pledge, and several were enabled to see their need of the Saviour, and to put their trust in Him. New Year's festivals for seamen and fishermen were held at several of the Society's Bethels and Rests on the coasts, and were also attended with much blessing.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

THE BOOK OF GENESIS.

THIS venerable book is unrivalled among the religious records of our race. The Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zendavesta of the Persians, are very ancient, but consist of hymns and philosophic speculations, or addresses to the elements of nature; and do not profess to be what this book is, a narrative of man's religious history for more than 4000 years, written with devout belief in the one God, and in a style of grave, archaic, artless simplicity. In Luther's judgment, there was nothing more beautiful or more useful than Genesis. It is the befitting portico to the temple of Truth. The seed-plot of the Bible, because there is nothing in all the subsequent revelation of which the rudiment or germ may not be discovered here. To master Genesis is to hold the key of Scripture.

As to its name, the Jews called it by its first word—Bereshith (in the beginning). The Greeks called it Genesis (origination). We may well regard it as the Book of Beginnings, because we may here discover the source of many streams, some turbid, some crystal, which are flowing through the world. (1) The origin of heaven and earth, (2) of the human family, (3) of marriage and the home, (4) of sin and death, (5) of sacrifice, (6) of nations and tongues, (7) of the Hebrew race, (8) of the rite of circumcision, and the covenant which it sealed, (9) of the heavenly priesthood.

Amongst the Jews, its authorship was always ascribed to Moses—a belief authenticated by Christ (Luke xxiv. 27). He probably wrote it after the name Jehovah had been revealed to him, since he often uses the term. But he also almost certainly interwove into his story many hallowed narratives of the past, which had been orally transmitted from father to son in the patriarchal tents, which he had learnt in boyhood from his mother, and in which the Almighty was designated as God, Elohim, the Strong. This is the explanation of the difference between the Jehovistic and the Elohistic portions which are clearly marked in the Hebrew, and to some extent in our own version. The first are due to the direct penmanship of Moses, the second to the incorporation of holy tradition, each beneath the Divine inspiration and teaching of the Holy Ghost.

We must not forget the design of this book: to prepare for the story of God's dealings with the Hebrew people, of whom the Saviour of the world was to come. All is made to converge and taper to that fact. Much that would have been interesting, but not relevant, is dropped out of view, or mentioned in the slightest manner. Attention is focussed on the Hebrew people, and those incidents which needed to be explained as a preparation for the understanding of all that was to follow. They mistake, therefore, who come to this book for treatises on geology, ethnology, or archæology; though, when all the truth is known, nothing in any of these branches of knowledge will have been discovered inconsistent with the general broad outlines of this book.

The divisions of this book are clearly marked by the recurring phrase, these are the generations: of the heavens and earth, ii. 4; of Adam, v. 1; of Noah, vi. 9; of Noah's sons, x. 1; of Shem, xi. 10; of Terah, xi. 27; of Ishmael, xxv. 12; of Isaac, xxv. 19; of Esau, xxxvi. 1—8; of Jacob, xxxvii. 2; and at each division our attention is fixed on a narrowing area, until from the creation of the heavens and the earth it is left with one sad object of contemplation—an enslaved race, and "a coffin in Egypt."

THURSDAY, JAN. 17.—GEN. i.

This chapter presents a sublime contrast to the legends of creation passing elsewhere as current coin. It bears on its brow the stamp of Divine inspiration and truth. No attempt is made to prove the existence, or describe the origin, of God. These are assumed as being universally confessed (Rom. i. 20). Without introduction we are brought face to face with Him who, before the mountains were brought forth, or the earth was formed, from everlasting to everlasting, is God. Is not this a suitable inscription to put on the forefront of every new enterprise or epoch of time: "In the beginning, God"?

There is no trace of the plurality of gods taught in other religions, and so inveterately held by the Jews themselves; alone, among its rivals, this book recognises the one only living God, though in the plural of the Hebrew word, and in the resolve, "Let us make man," there are traces of the blessed Trinity, and of the presence of the Son, through whom, as the organ of creation, all things were made (Col. i. 16). Let us pause and worship.

With pen of unerring truth, the Spirit of Inspiration writes God's name on all things, excluding atheism, for God created; polytheism, for One God created; the eternity of matter, for all things began in God, and the word create clearly implies to make out of nothing (Heb. xi. 2); and pantheism, for God, the Builder of all, must be distinct from the work of his hands.

The objects of ancient idolatry are specially mentioned in the catalogue of creation, sun and stars, sea-monsters and cattle, as well as creeping things, as if to rebut foolish and ignorant superstition. Creation's progress is described as the eve and dawn of successive days, which are supposed by some to represent vast periods of time. The word day is so used ii. 4; and many scientific men have expressed their belief that the general outlines are in complete accord with the discoveries of recent science.

It is a sublime series. The heaving chaos and brooding Spirit; light shining out of darkness (2 Cor. iv. 6); mists rolled up, and the clear expanse of air separating the clouds from the earth; the waters poured into their beds (Ps. civ. 7, 8, 9); earth carpeted with green and covered with vegetation; the light-bearers of day and night. So the palace stood complete. Then the ocean of air peopled with birds, and of water with fish; and finally cattle and creeping things, and forest beasts. Thus the royal retinue was prepared. Lastly, man, the king, moulded of red earth as to his body, made in the image of God as to soul and spirit; appointed to subdue and rule (Ps. viii.). That royalty has been lost, the crown rolled in the dust, but it is restored in Christ (Heb. ii. 9), and we, through faith, being identified with Him, shall get all back and more, for this is the purpose of God (Rom. viii. 29).

FRIDAY, JAN. 18.—GEN. ii.

This chapter brims with interest.

(1) The rest of God: not the rest of indolence or inaction, but of complacency with a finished work. "Behold it was very good." Christ also rested on the seventh day, lying in the tomb, because his work was done and redemption finished; "He ceased from his works, as God did from his." And, if we believe, we too may share that rest (Heb. iv. 9—11), rest of soul in his work for us, of heart in his love to us, of will in his rule over us. And where God rests, He sanctifies. Wouldest thou be a saint, then see to it that God rests within!

(2) The story of Paradise, which has long since vanished from the earth, though its memories, like threads of light, are interwoven in the legends of all peoples. When men point to the vice and misery of our great cities, as a slur on the character of God, point them back to Eden, with its pleasant and wholesome trees, or forward to the City of Gold: these are God's thoughts and ideals. His enemy has wrought the devastation we see around. Man's history begins in a pleasant garden and ends in a holy city; but what an agony between!

(3) We hear the murmurs of the waters of the river, of which there is frequent mention afterwards, which flowed in the desert, made glad the city of God, issued from under the threshold of the house, bringing life wherever it came, and proceeds from the throne of God and of the Lamb.

(4) Here also is the tree of life, one of heaven's exotics, which could not flourish in our cold clime, and has been taken back to bloom in a perpetual summer (Rev. xxii. 2).

(5) The forming of woman out of man, which reveals the intimate connection between the two in God's thought, and foreshadows the sacred union between Christ and the Church, which owes her being to his sleep in the tomb. Eve was made, "not from Adam's head, to top him, nor from his feet, to be trampled on by him, but from his side, to be equal, under his arm to be protected, and near to his heart to be beloved." God made the first home.

SATURDAY, JAN. 19.—GEN. iii.

The frequent subsequent references to the story of the Fall forbid us to treat it as a parable or myth (2 Cor. xi. 3; 1 Tim. ii. 11). Why should not the devil possess serpents as well as men?

The temptation followed the same stages as those which are familiar to us—the question about God's dealings; the suggestion that good is to be had outside the fence of his prohibition; the denial that any evil consequences will follow the act of disobedience, and the sly allusion to the advantages that would accrue.

And Eve's sin came about as ours do. She listened to the tempter, instead of saying instantly, Get thee behind me; she exaggerated the limits of the prohibition ("neither shall ye touch it"); she looked, and dwelt longingly on the pleasantness and desirableness of the fruit, till desire mastered the protests of conscience, and she took and shared the forbidden spoils.

And instantly the effects followed, which follow with ourselves. Their eyes were opened, and they saw; temptation blinds us, satiety opens our eyes to see what we have done. And as they hid themselves from one another, so they concealed themselves from God; sin ever breeds fear, which hath torment. Finally, each mistrusted and accused the other, for sin is the great separator of man from God, and man from man.

In the penal clauses blessing is marvellously blended with penalty. The ground is cursed, but it is for man's sake, and arduous toil has often made men, taxing inventiveness, and rousing dormant energy, to master difficulty. The woman was to suffer multiplied pain, but pain has been prolific in the discipline of human souls; what a noble progeny is hers. And though the great enemy of man might do his worst, yet the woman's Seed should bruise his head. On the cross of Calvary, and in the grave of Joseph, these words were literally fulfilled.

What pity also was there in God's search for his erring ones, his institution of sacrifice, and his clothing of their nakedness with the victims' skins. And though the flaming sword forbids our return to Paradise Lost, the cherubim point to Paradise Regained for us by the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven (Rom. v. and 1 Cor. xv. 22—45).

EVANGELICAL MILITARY CHURCH, ROME.—The work makes steady progress, under the evident blessing of the Lord. Signor Capellini labours indefatigably; but at this moment finds himself without means for carrying on the work. Besides having to provide monthly for all the expenses of the meetings and classes in Rome, he is anxious now to visit the outlying churches and regiments in various towns. He therefore asks sympathising friends not to forget one of the most important missions in Italy. The Signor's address is 14, Via Pozzo de le Cornacchie, Rome. The hon. secretary in England is Miss Anna Stoddart, 36, Dennington Park, West Hampstead.

Evangelisation in Germany.

ADDRESS BY DR. H. P. ZIEMANN,
At the Noon Prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street.

NEXT to the privilege of speaking for Christ to those who have not heard the Gospel, I think a worker likes nothing better than to meet with those who are praying for his work. I know there are many here whose hearts are deeply interested in Germany; and you will rejoice to hear some good tidings of what the Lord is doing there.

I have read in English papers accounts of the "Land of Luther," giving the impression that infidelity and spiritual deadness were its predominant features. However true this may have been in the past, thank God, it is no longer so! All over Germany a marked change for the better has come. I do not mean to say that all the people are turning to God, that there are everywhere revivals. There is still much that is sad and depressing; nevertheless, God's Spirit is working, and new forces are moulding the nation.

For the last few years I have been constantly travelling about in Germany, mixing with all classes of the people, and I have been often surprised and delighted to meet unexpectedly with believers of true and deep piety, shining characters. Of late the number of such is rapidly increasing. From the upper as well as from the lower classes, many are turning to God, and bear witness to what the Lord Jesus has done for them. A desire for growth in the knowledge of God seems to prevail; meetings for prayer, for study of the Word, conferences for the deepening of spiritual life, are to be found in many places where such things were unknown a few years ago. It has been my privilege to witness

TOUCHING EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIAN UNITY.

From these centres a vast increase of Christian activity and enterprise has sprung up. Never before were agencies so numerous, so vigorous; never before were so many devoted servants of Christ at work. I could name five gentlemen of high rank and station who, during the last two years, have forsaken all for Christ, have taken up his cross, and now serve Him with a holy passion. What splendid triumphs of the cross such lives present; how quickening to the zeal of others. I must not forget to mention Court Chaplain Stöcker, the head of the City Mission in Berlin, who was the first to try all kinds of organisations in the solution of the problem, How to reach the masses. Not everyone can subscribe to all he says and does, but all must admire his untiring zeal, his boldness, his enthusiasm for the cause of Christ, and rejoice that he has been used as a mighty instrument in pioneer work, which has changed public opinion amongst the masses with regard to Christianity.

Perhaps the most encouraging aspect is the willingness of the people to come and listen to the Gospel. During the year 1888 I had the privilege of holding 513 meetings; sometimes three in one day, mostly in large towns, meetings which were in themselves an inspiration. Many evenings I had the joy of standing before 2000 to 3000 men; on several occasions even more. What a privilege! How solemn, how glorious, to gaze into this sea of uplifted faces, and be the bearer of a message of eternal life. Coming one evening from such a crowded meeting, a greyheaded pastor kissed me and said, with tears, "Glory be to God, that the name of Jesus Christ has been sounded in this town before these thousands of men!"

ENCOURAGING RESULTS.

And the results? I could tell many; deeply interesting cases, real romances of life, such as only God's Holy Spirit can work out! I have seen the power of the simple Gospel story renew hearts and transform characters; I have seen the selfish heart touched and filled with gratitude to God and love to man! In one place a lady, weary to death of the aimless round of a fashionable life, came from mere curiosity to hear what this new religion is. God met her there. She soon opened her elegant drawing-room for the preaching of the Gospel to her own friends, and she is now the soul of rescue work in that town. A scientific gentleman came to me with his doubts; he wanted answers to deep problems. I pointed him to the fact that not science but God's Holy Spirit is the teacher of truth. I urged him to ask for the Holy Spirit, and I know he is now a man of childlike trust in the Lord Jesus Christ. But I will not give statistics; results will be known and seen on that happy day, when all the sowers "shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them."

EVANGELISTIC PASTORS.

Another most encouraging aspect is the increasing number of pastors who, with warm sympathy, welcome evangelistic work. In conversing lately with Mr. Schrenk—a man used in Germany as none else—we calculated that it would take us several years to respond to all the invitations which we two have in hand from pastors of different towns. It was not always thus. I remember the time when to be welcomed was a very exceptional, joyful event; now I have friends and brothers all over the country, and have formed loving links, which I trust will never be severed.

COUNTERACTIVE INFLUENCES.

In closing, let me turn to the other side, and point out the influences which counteract this blessed movement. There is first Papal Rome, with her blasphemous superstition and her intriguing designs. One can only wonder in amazement how a statesman like Prince Bismarck could have been led to give her in Germany a standing with privileges and power such as she never had before since the Reformation. There is Socialism, with its horrible creed: "No heaven, no hell, no God!" One cannot shut one's eyes to the fact that these pernicious doctrines have struck their roots far and wide among the working population. They manifest a scoffing indifference or bitter hostility towards religion; but in mixing with them, as I have tried to do, it appeared to me that this bitter spirit is much more caused by the life of professing Christians, which stumbles them, than by the principles of Christianity, of which they are ignorant. The selfishness, the heartlessness, the indifference, with which wealthy professing Christians ignore the bitter cry of the struggling poor, have done their part to bring about this hostile estrangement. In Germany, as everywhere else, only the manifestation of a Christlike compassion will reach the masses.

DOUBT-INSTILLERS.

Lastly, and perhaps the most dangerous of all, is that theological school which trains pastors to set human reason above Divine revelation; men who use their position in the pulpit to instil doubts into the minds of earnest seekers; messengers without a message, building up a school of so-called "advanced" thinkers on the foundation of a rejected Atonement and a mutilated Bible. Thank God, the Church of Christ in Germany is awake to these enemies and is roused to new energy of life and spirit. There has hardly been of late a pastoral conference in which those dangers have not been discussed, and the battle-cry raised. More and more it is recognised, that not clergymen only or men fully equipped by a long course of training, are to take part in this battle, "Unto every man his work!" Surely it is the hand of God, which in this crisis has given to Germany an Emperor and an Empress who show themselves so ready to advance the cause of truth. I have travelled lately in those parts where the Empress spent her youth. Everyone spoke with admiration of the beauty and simplicity of her Christian character. What a blessing for a nation to have a ruler who rules in the fear of God. What rôle Germany may have to play as a nation God alone knows, but we see out of her midst numbers gathered to swell the multitudes which no man can number. Now is the struggle, soon will be the victory, when the song shall sound: "Hallelujah! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!"

TO OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.

THE annual letter to the members of the Open-Air Mission is by Rev. Dr. Culross, President of the Baptist College, Bristol. It is a very telling utterance from the motto of the Mission for 1889, "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season." We give one or two extracts:—

In order to preach you must have a tremendous conviction that God has spoken. Hesitance here is fatal. You must be a man into whose very heart God's word has entered. You must personally grasp, for your own soul's sake, the truth that you proclaim to others. If you hold it loosely, if you are not very sure about it, if you are at the mercy of "every wind of doctrine," your preaching can well be spared.

The word "preach" deserves consideration. There is a way of presenting the true Gospel in which the preacher seems to say, "Take it or leave it just as you please." There is a threatening way, as if one held out a gift in one hand, and a loaded revolver in the other to compel acceptance. There is a way of eloquence, by which the hearer is delighted and spell-bound, while yet he misses the truth itself; as, in the case of a written document, weighty to momentousness in its matter, the attention of the reader may be taken up with the wonderful flourishes of penmanship, while the meaning is never once thought of. True preaching is a simpler and a greater thing. You are a herald—a public crier—with a message which you did not yourself make. Without self-consciousness, let the God-given message ring out in the hearing of all who will listen—rich and poor, rude and cultured, scornful and reverent, the lowest of the low and the men whose stainless honour is their pride: and leave God to prove it in his own way. It is his power unto salvation. Do not covet "a fine audience"; take the audience that God sends, and despair of none...."Be instant in season," when all is favourable; but also "out of season," when it clashes with your convenience. Do not wait idly for "chances," nor merely seize opportunities, but make them.

To carry out this charge practically, two things are absolutely necessary. First, deep, patient, systematic study of Scripture. If you evade or shrink from this, you lack one of the essentials. You may have what is fashionably called "success," you may gather crowds to listen, you may create a sensation, you may win praise for men; but you are false to Jesus Christ. Second, there must be a surrender, a fearless "abandonment" of ourselves, void of self-consciousness, to the Holy Spirit. Apart from this, no reasoning, no eloquence, no persuasiveness, no zeal or human urgency, will avail. With this, who can set a limit to the marvels that the weakest may accomplish?

A SUCCESSOR TO BALAAM.—At the re-opening of the Elliott Home, Townsend-street, Dublin, Rev. H. Fishe said the papers had placarded Mrs. Smyly on the walls, and decried her all over the city. Their Roman Catholic friends believed they could stifle out that Home altogether; but, instead of hindering the work, those articles had done it good. A friend of his lately said that he saw the Home so much abused in The Freeman's Journal and other papers, that it must be a good work, and a Roman Catholic gentleman in Sligo gave £1, because it was so much abused in The Irish Catholic. The work had been abundantly blessed in consequence of the persecution by The Irish Catholic, which gave them an excellent advertisement, and God had been graciously pleased to turn the sword against their enemies.—Rock.

London Waifdom.

LONDON has lately been trying to take stock of its social progress. Rev. Mr. McCree asked the question, "Is London growing better?" (which, by the way, he himself answered with a breezy "Yes"), and straightway everybody fell to telling his experiences. Dr. Barnardo on Thursday last supplied his contribution to the discussion, and, as usual, it was a practical one. Surely even the possibility of such a meeting as he assembled at the Edinburgh Castle on the evening named is of vital bearing in regard to our social progress, the occasion was the Street Boys' Supper, which for fourteen years has been an annual institution in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Over 2000 children, 200 of them being girls, and none of them over sixteen years of age, crowded the Castle hall with an unfashionable punctuality. Surely it means something that at two nights' notice tickets could be placed in the hands of such a crowd of destitute waifs within the metropolitan area; and that expresses only half the truth, for a crowd of ticketless ones outside the gates surged and bickered all the evening through on the faintest chance of further admissions! Dr. Barnardo's helpers had made, we were told, a careful selection in the lowest localities of the neediest youngsters. All but a few of the guests were either lodging-house "dossers," occupants of "furnished rooms," or genuine waifs of the streets; their appearance, indeed, betokened that they had emerged "from the depths," for this one night of brightness and warmth and human interest. The clothing and boots of the assembled urchins appeared to be invariably ragged. A frowsy muffler was universal. Many guests, both boys and girls, were barefoot, and it was with an involuntary shiver that one marked the threadbare rags which did duty as winter clothing in so many instances. As one mentally contrasted West-end luxury with this accumulation of poverty, the old reproach of St. Jerome to his countrymen recurred to one's mind, "Our walls and our ceilings are resplendent with gold, and Christ is dying at our gates, naked and starving."

Seldom, if ever, indeed, in the history of this unique feast to the hungry have want and misery so obviously set their seal upon the guests. The average age, too, was younger than usual, and the pitiful aspect of the crowd was intensified by the presence of so many puny and childlike frames among the guests. Not a few were only about eight or nine years of age.

The ordinary course of the supper in past years was followed. Arranged in orderly numbered rows by active stewards, whose services were in constant requisition, the little fellows were served with an abundant meal of tea, with cake and bread and butter, music being meanwhile supplied by the Boys' Band of the Stepney Home, and the Little Handbell Ringers. A band of lads from the Labour House, smartly attired in white jerseys, acted as waiters. The guests ate ravenously, with boisterous outbursts of animal spirits at frequent intervals. They sang grace admirably, however, and their behaviour was perfectly reverent during the short prayer which Dr. Barnardo subsequently offered. When the relics of the prolonged feast were cleared away, Rev. Walter J. Mayers greatly delighted the boys by singing a couple of solos, and they took up the chorus of one with enthusiastic vigour.

Dr. Barnardo, however, did not long delay in proceeding to what he confessed was, from his point of view, the business of the evening. The object of the gathering, he explained, was not so much the supplying of the boon of a hearty meal, to be followed, as we afterwards found, by a silver sixpence to each waif, but to offer the permanent benefits of the Homes to those who fulfilled the fundamental condition of elegibility of being absolutely destitute. A few brief words of greeting and of kindness led to a direct offer to volunteers. There was no lack of eager responses, and Dr. Barnardo and his helpers at once engaged themselves in passing the stories of the candidates through the preliminary sifting dictated by prudence. Many strangely pathetic histories came to light—histories which, if their force was fully realised, would inflame easy-going Christianity to a pitch of zeal and fervour which would make a clean sweep of many social abuses. The contrast between the existence of squalor from which these young people had come, and the well-ordered life of the Homes which they were invited to enter, must appear almost immeasurable to the privileged entrants. At 11 p.m. we left Dr. Barnardo busily employed in answering Mr. McCree's question by attacking social evils in detail, and pulling London's pariahs one by one over the borderline back again into decency and respectability, and within the sound of the Christian church bells.

During the evening's proceedings, it appeared that the record of the Homes during the year just closed is more than usually crowded and interesting. The inmates of the thirty-eight branches have, during its course, increased from 2300 to no fewer than 3000. 1797 admissions, in all, took place during the year, and 1207 had been sent out in various ways, including 488 emigrated to Canada, and 316 placed in situations in the United Kingdom. Skilled agents of the Homes have been engaged nightly throughout the autumn and winter in scouring the lowest streets and slums, and many waif wanderers have thereby been admitted. Three emigration centres are now in full operation in Canada, for younger boys, for girls, and for older lads respectively, the last named being the Industrial Farm in Manitoba, now being developed by the energies of youths sent forth from the Labour House. As indicating the large field of operation in which the Homes are now engaged, it was also mentioned that no fewer than 7120 applications for admission were made to them throughout the twelve months.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONS.

A MEETING to bid farewell to Mr. Edwin C. Aspinall, of the Y.M.C.A., on his return as superintendent of the mission stations in Tierra del Fuego, under the auspices of the South American Missionary Society, was held in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening last week. Mr. George Williams presided.

Mr. H. B. Katunushwünjiz. a young Fuegian convert who has accompanied Mr. Aspinall in his visit to England, warmly thanked the English people for what they have already done for his people. He is anxious that all his people may be told about Jesus. Before the missionaries went there, white men could not visit his land; but this has now been changed.

Rev. R. J. Simpson, clerical secretary of the South American Missionary Society, said that Society employs several clerical and lay agents, but there is large scope for many more, and if young men volunteered for work their applications would be given prayerful consideration. Mr. Williams then exhorted the Christian young men present to seriously think of this matter.

Mr. Aspinall gave an extremely interesting account of the progress of the Mission in past years, and unfolded his plans as to future work. His object has been to obtain the consent of the committee to open a mission station amongst a tribe hitherto entirely neglected. He asked for prayer that this effort might be crowned with success. Mr. Hind Smith and Mr. W. H. Seagram also spoke.

GOOD-BYE—GOD BE WITH YOU.

TO A MISSIONARY FRIEND LEAVING ENGLAND.

THERE'S a word we speak at parting—
Half a word and half a sigh,
While the tears, uncalled, are starting—
Saddest of sad words, "Good-bye!"

Has it more of meaning in it
Than as symbol of a pain,
Pain compact in one short minute,
Grief that dies to live again?

Coin at every mart and haven
Passing marred from hand to hand,
Yet it bears a legend graven
For the eyes that understand.

Marred, misshapen, thus I found it,
All fair chasing worn away,
Yet I read this legend round it:
"God be with my friend to-day."

Word of all sad words the saddest,
Thus we break and change thy spell,
Thought of all glad thoughts the gladdest
Art thou now—"Emmanuel!"

So doth many a seeming sorrow,
Looming o'er the soul's dim sea,
Speak a presage for the morrow
That we read imperfectly.

For full oft that shadowy presage,
Smote athwart with heavenly light,
Lifts aloft a Father's message,
"I am with my child to-night."

Then, though there be ears that hear not,
'Mid the echoes of the end,
Let us bravely say and fear not,
"God be with us both, my friend."

LADS IN NORTH LONDON.

IN your issue of December 23, 1886, you noticed a work going on among schoolboys, which had taken its rise from Rev. E. Payson Hammond's mission at the Mildmay Conference Hall in September, 1885. This work, under name of "The Young Christians' Union," is still progressing favourably. It has entered upon its fourth year with great promise. Two sections have been instituted, one for those who are properly schoolboys, the other for those who have graduated into business life. These sections meet every week. The meetings are of a diversified character. The sole object of the Union is to win lads to Christ, and having won them, to supply opportunities for mutual help in the spiritual life. Hitherto the work seems to have confined itself to what would be termed the better class of lads and youths, though all comers are welcome.

The third annual report, and also a reprint of the first and second annual reports combined, can be obtained of the hon. secretary, Mr. F. Neal, Norfolk House, Queen Elizabeth's-avenue, Stoke Newington, N., who will supply information, or render help in establishing similar work elsewhere. Friends inquiring about the work will find it of a really unique character, and may acquire acceptable hints as to dealing with Christian schoolboys and business youths.

LITTLEHAMPTON HOME OF REST.—This Convalescent Home and Rest for Christians, "The Hillyers," Norfolk-road, Littlehampton, was blessed to many weary toilers during last year. About 150 persons, labouring in various spheres, availed themselves of the advantages of the Home, and enjoyed the retirement of the seaside town. It is hoped soon to double the accommodation of the institution, and to provide a quarter especially for children. That will make it possible to lodge and board forty visitors instead of eighteen. Applications should be made to Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant Friends-road, East Croydon.

The Old Theology & the New.

IN The Expositor for the current month, the venerable Professor Franz Delitzsch, of Leipzig, has an article entitled, "The Deep Gulf between the Old Theology and the New." It is "a last confession of faith," and is as truly valuable in matter as it is deeply interesting in manner. He opens by saying that the more his earthly life declines, the more he feels compelled to concentrate his strength and time on practical aims. Privileged to live contemporaneous with a bright period of re-awakening in Christian faith and life, he has, he says, with a few others, been reserved to witness the rending of the structure of half a century, and to see that which seemed likely to endure being undermined and overthrown. Between the old and new theology lies a deep gulf.

Showing what the gulf really is, the writer points out that, Scripturally considered, nature and grace stand in fundamental juxtaposition. "Man's nature was originally good, but is now, through his wilful alienation from God, become sinful, fallen into the service of sin. But it is God's merciful will to free man from the self-corruption of his nature. He has appointed Christ, the Son of God and man, to mediate in the restoration of our communion with God; and grace is the name of God's action for us and to us, the purpose of which is to free us from the consciousness of guilt, and from the ban of sin-service. The work of God's grace in Christ, aiming as it does at our deliverance, at the breaking of our bonds, at our salvation, is a supernatural work; and he who submits himself to this can in his own experience distinguish the supernatural workings of grace from the workings of his natural powers and impulses. Nature and grace are as rootedly, as essentially antithetical as world and God. But it is a fundamental characteristic of the new theology that it so softens down the sharpness of these antitheses as to make the distinction vanish. Whether it admits the fact or not, the case actually stands thus: it alters the essence of grace, and makes everything nature. This is the deep gulf which parts the old from the new theology, and makes intercourse impossible.

Proceeding, Dr. Delitzsch maintains with much power that grace works into the natural life of man a new supernatural life, which differs from the former as essentially as the world of glory differs from the present world of birth and decay. It is incompetent for the new theology to question the reality of this, seeing that it starts from preconceptions which render it incapable of experiences such as those of a Paul or a Luther. Further, there is no Biblical conception which, as treated by the new theology, does not lose in depth, and in fulness of contents. "The new birth, which is accomplished within the realm of Divine grace by way of repentance and faith, together with the workings of grace by which it is brought to pass and maintained, does not receive its due. Even as the closest living union with God and the risen Saviour is rejected as mystical, this process of conversion is considered pietistic. Though I differed on many points with the late Ferdinand Walther, together with whom I passed through the throes and raptures of the new spiritual birth, on one point we remained ever agreed—that the condition of the true Christian is a supernatural one, seeing that it has its root in the new birth which he has experienced. This condition is wanting in the new theology."

How deep the gulf appears when account is taken of the fact that in identifying grace with nature, the new theology denies the reality of miracles. "The restricting of God to the course of nature has for its result that we must deny to all prayer, alike of entreaty and intercession, any effect on external events mediated by response to prayer. As if there were not accredited answers to prayer, like the intercession of Luther for Melanchthon and Myconius! And as if each faithful petitioner could not, from his own experience, substantiate the Psalmist's words (lxvi. 3): 'Thou hearest prayer, therefore cometh all flesh to Thee!' All flesh — for everywhere in the world of men where prayer is offered, this is done in the certainty that prayer has effect on God, and could call forth active help in return."

Dr. Delitzsch goes on to show that faith in the Easter message is affected by this position. He who on principle rejects miracles, must also reject the historical nature of the resurrection of Christ. An accommodation to the antagonism of the new theology is impossible. The fundamental question remains: "Is there a supernatural realm of grace, and within it a miraculous interference of God in the world of nature—an interference displaying itself most centrally and decisively in the raising of the Redeemer from the dead? To this fundamental question, however we may seek to evade it, the answer can only be yes or no. The deep gulf remains; it will remain to the end of time."

After some allusions to the assumptions of science, the writer says in conclusion: "In the Muldenthal I was, as a young man, a witness of soul-struggles and spiritual victories, which rendered distasteful to me for ever the overestimation of science. And the faith which I professed in my first sermons, which I could maintain in Niederfrohna and Lunzenau, remains mine to-day, undiminished in strength, and immeasurably higher than all earthly knowledge. Even if in many Biblical questions I have to oppose the traditional opinion, certainly my opposition remains on this side of the gulf, on the side of the theology of the cross, of grace, of miracles, in harmony with the good confession of our Lutheran Church. By this banner let us stand; folding ourselves in it, let us die."

MISSIONARY PRAYER UNION.

WE have already chronicled the formation of this Union. In a paper issued from the office, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C., the following hints are given to intending members:—

"It is suggested that, in order to promote definiteness in intercession, the following order should be observed:—

"The Lord's Day.—For missionaries, Native Churches, and Christian workers in all lands, and for a greater manifestation of the unity of the Body of Christ.

"Monday.—For the Greek and Roman Catholic Churches throughout the world.

"Tuesday.—For Persia, India, China, Japan, and all other Asiatic countries.

"Wednesday.—For the Heathen in Africa, Madagascar, New Guinea, and the islands of the sea.

"Thursday.—For the Heathen in North and South America.

"Friday.—For Mohammedans, whether in Europe, Asia, or Africa.

"Saturday.—For the Jewish race in Palestine and the lands of their dispersion.

"Where practicable, it was urged that the same hour should be observed, so that the wave of prayer might follow the dawn of light round the world. The early morning hour of prayer is therefore suggested, and thus may be realised the ancient prediction, 'For Him shall prayer be made continually.'

"It is intended to hold a meeting in connection with the Foreign Missionary Prayer Union on the first Monday of each month, at three p.m., at 186, Aldersgate-street, for prayer, praise, and mutual help. It is hoped this meeting will become a rallying point for missionaries, and all Christians interested in the extension of the kingdom of God, as well as for members of the Prayer Union. It is suggested that similar meetings should be held in other localities wherever practicable."

A NIGHT SHELTER FOR DESTITUTE MEN in South London has been opened in Star-yard, Borough. Revs. Burman Cassin and G. W. McCree have identified themselves with this effort, as also have several gentlemen of local influence.

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.

THIS excellent institution at Inverness, available for orphans in all parts of Northern Scotland, has made considerable progress during the past year. The additional building, entitled the Victoria Home, opened last summer, has proved of great benefit in giving enlarged accommodation. According to the recently issued report there are 35 children in the Orphanage, who are being lovingly cared for and trained for future usefulness. The good fruits of the institution are beginning to be reaped, as five of the elder boys are now at work in the town, and are thus, to some extent, providing for their own maintenance.

There is a balance yet to be made up on the building account. At the opening of the new Home Mr. Campbell White generously offered to contribute the last £100 of the amount; we trust that he may soon be called on to make good his promise. We are glad to know that Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, of the Monthly Tract Society (181, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.), himself lately a citizen of Inverness, will be the medium of conveying to the institution any gifts of Southern friends; he will also forward copies of the report.

INDUSTRIAL HOMES, FOREST HILL.—During the last fifteen years these Homes have sprung up from the earnest voluntary effort of their founder, Mr. A. C. H. Chaplin, assisted by a zealous voluntary staff. The last report shows that forty boys and twenty-four girls are maintained, and the annual cost per child is about £20. The lads are engaged in bootmaking under a master, and the girls learn washing and other domestic work, fitting both to maintain themselves in after life. The inmates are drawn from the waifs and strays of the East-end of London and other parts. We regret to hear that the Homes are in need of funds. The Hon. Secretary at the Homes will thankfully receive the communications of friends.

MR. D. L. MOODY'S COLONY.—While Mr. Moody is labouring on the Pacific coast, his great educational interests at Mount Hermon and Northfield are flourishing, the schools being crowded. The girls' school at Northfield has just had another big windfall in the gift of funds to establish a hospital, and a force of men and teams are drawing stone for the foundations, which will be put in as soon as spring opens, and plans are being made for the building, which, like the other seminary buildings, will be constructed of stone and brick, and will cost when finished between 30,000 and 40,000 dollars. Mr. Moody has always been opposed to having his name attached to any of the building, but in this case he has been circumvented in a certain sense, as a woman gave several thousand dollars as a starter on condition that the building be called "The Betsy Moody Hospital," being named after the stirring evangelist's noble mother, who still, at eighty-three years of age, is living in the old homestead, near which the hospital is to be erected.

THE BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY held their usual New Year's prayer-meeting at the Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn. On Tuesday morning last week, Rev. T. M. Morris, of Ipswich, presided, and delivered an address. Prayer was offered by Revs. Dr. Borrett White, of the Religious Tract Society; R. Wardlaw Thompson, London Missionary Society; R. Lang, Church Missionary Society; Evan Thomas, of Hackney; Mr. B. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission; and Mr. J. P. Bacon. Among representatives of other societies present were: Rev. W. M. Paull, British and Foreign Bible Society; Rev. Marmaduke Osborn, Wesleyan Missionary Society; and Captain Poulden, South American Missionary Society. Sympathetic letters and telegrams were received from the secretaries of the London City Mission, who were attending their own prayer-meeting at the same time; from Rev. B. Latrobe, of the Moravian Mission; Rev. J. Sharp, of the Bible Society; Drs. Angus, Booth, and Underhill, and others. Mr. A. H. Baynes, the secretary, announced the receipt of a cheque of £1000 as a New Year's offering towards the funds of the Society from one of its old and attached friends, and a further cheque of £100 from another friend.

WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER.

STEINWAY HALL.

THE West-end meetings, convened by the Council of the Evangelical Alliance, were held each morning throughout the week in Steinway Hall, Lower Seymour-street, Portman-square. On Monday the chair was occupied by Sir JOHN COODE, who, in opening the proceedings, read Ps. ciii. 1—5, and Hosea xiv. 1, 2. An address was delivered by Rev. Dr. STOUGHTON. The subject of petition was "Thanksgiving and Confession," and to a consideration of this, the speaker confined his remarks. Thanksgiving is the expression of gratitude, which is very apt to be selfish. As we think of God's mercies to us, we must ever remember that, as they are bestowed, they are manifestations of his own infinite perfections. As reasons for special gratitude to God, Dr. Stoughton spoke of the increasing spirit of unity among Christians, and the advance of missionary work. Nothing gratifies the spirit of all evil more than to witness the discords which prevail in Christendom; and we may well believe that there is nothing upon which God looks down with more satisfaction and approval than upon the cultivation of a spirit of union. As to missionary enterprise, its ramifications are so numerous, so extensive, and so minute, that God should be praised for giving such wisdom unto those who fear Him.

Indicating subjects for general confession, Dr. Stoughton referred to our sins in society, in Christian work, and as a nation. He pointed out how deplorable is the increase of worldliness to-day, entering even the religious organisations. Moreover, Christian principle should as much govern the accumulation of wealth as the disposal of it when acquired. After some remarks upon the great patience of God, Dr. Stoughton concluded by urging the need for prayer for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

THE CITY MEETINGS.

On Monday at noon the City friends came together to the Centenary Hall, through a chilling fog, almost Egyptian in its darkness and density. The praying company was a comparatively little one, at the start, but the numbers increased during the second hour. The topic of the first hour being Confession of sin and shortcomings, Mr. J. H. TRITTON, in his remarks, cited several instances in the Old Testament history in which the beginnings of the year were devoted by the people of God to abasement of spirit before Him. These examples he applied to the Church of to-day, exhorting to greater fidelity and wholeheartedness in the year that is before us.

Rev. A. G. BROWN, who had gathered up the confessions of the meeting in the closing prayer of the first hour, took the presidency during the second, when the subject was "Thanksgiving." Naturally a more triumphant tone pervaded the petitions and songs. One of the brethren, who led in prayer, referred with jubilation to the fact that this New Year has brought the Church of Christ a period of time nearer to her Lord's return. Even the very darkness of the surroundings was a sure sign that our redemption draweth nigh. The Chairman, seizing the point, gave out the hymn, "Jesus is Coming Again," which was sung with spirit. Mr. Brown said that the devil knows well the influence which a bright hope of the Second Advent has on the life of the Church, and so he has done his best to shelve it. A man who is waiting for his Lord is not likely to get much mixed up with the world, but will lead a separated life. Mr. Edward Trotter thanked God in prayer for the increase in number of those who proclaim the Gospel, especially among his ancient people. Mr. Brown, referring subsequently to this, said it was a solemn fact that though the Gospel is being increasingly proclaimed, it is also being very widely rejected. London is almost sodden by the Gospel, yet how few are hearing it to salvation. In the story of the Acts we notice the paucity of the organisation and the plenitude of the power; nowadays we find a plenitude of organisation, but a paucity of power. Might God send a mighty revival on all the churches.

Mr. BROWN'S address was based on the word "Hallelujah," as one of the most striking embodiments of the idea of praise. Though a majestic and awful word, how often it is degraded by flippant and thoughtless use. In Ps. civ. we first find it in that book, and in a very solemn connection — the destruction of the ungodly. Towards the end of the book the Hallelujahs increase, and the closing Psalms are, as it were, embedded in it. Again it rings out in the end of the Revelation, and also in connection with the downfall of God's enemies.

In Ps. cvi. there the saint's Hallelujah for mercy that won't be tired out, and that is long-suffering. God's enduring mercy is marvellously displayed throughout the Psalm, in view of the ignorance, the forgetfulness, the idolatry, the unbelief, and the spiritual downgrade, of the Israelites. How like to them are Christians oftentimes; yet God remembers his covenant.

Ps. cxiii. has two Hallelujahs, and between them we discover the evidences of God's enriching and ennobling grace. He so high and holy, and yet stooping to save and exalt the low and base. In Ps. cxxxv., we have a Hallelujah for a reigning and ruling God. There are those who would rob God of his sovereignty; but the Holy Spirit puts on record that He does reign and doeth whatsoever pleaseth Him. In Ps. cxlvi., we see the Hallelujah for a helping God; much we shall need his help before the year is out. In the last Psalm there is the universal Hallelujah. This old Hebrew word of praise resounds again in the Revelation, and the end will be that all creation will be to his praise. Let our life through the year begin and end with a Hallelujah.

WHITTINGTON AVENUE Y.M.C.A.

At the Metal Exchange, Whittington-avenue, Leadenhall-street, on Monday evening, the chair was occupied by Mr. W. Fowler. Prayer having been offered, and John xiv. 12 to 31 having been read by Prebendary Whittington, the Chairman spoke a few words on the results of Christian doctrine as seen in the life of those who serve God. The BISHOP OF LONDON followed with an address on thoughts suggested by the passage read, especially the promise: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself unto him" (ver. 21).

Having spoken of the many ways in which Christ manifested his glory while yet on the earth, the Bishop dealt with the epiphany specified in the passage quoted. To every man that believes in Him, and believing in Him loves Him—to every man who loving Him keeps his commandments, Jesus manifests Himself. This manifestation is the crown of the Christian life. Our Lord does not speak of it as though it was altogether independent of ourselves, but He tells us it will be vouchsafed to those who love Him and who keep his commandments. It is not as if the manifestation came first, and the keeping of the commandments afterwards. Rather the order is the reverse. This manifestation is not what we ordinarily call conversion, but the crown of it. And the Lord tells us we are to seek it by keeping his commandments in love.

No such manifestation is possible, except to those who have an eye to see it. The light was presented to the Scribes and Pharisees of old, but they had not the eye to see it. It is the same to-day, and those who cannot see will remain in darkness. To keep the Lord's commandments, to live in the light, to copy his example—this opens the eyes of the spiritual man. This copying is, in fact, the great rule of all education. If we are to learn anything, we must not only listen to the teacher, but we must exercise our own intellects. So, too, we must learn to appreciate the Lord. We must copy Him, and although the copy will be absurdly faulty, it will yet involve such study as will give the spiritual man to know more than he otherwise could of the great Subject. Little by little, but by sure degrees, the man who does this will come to know what the Lord Jesus is like, and to that man's heart and conscience the Lord will manifest Himself, as He is in the beauty of holiness. He does not keep those who are able to see Him waiting for the manifestation, but He gives them this crown of glory, and they then become changed from glory to glory as by the Spirit of the Lord.

The address was highly appreciated. When the Bishop alluded to the darkness of the Scribes and other leaders of religious thought among the Jews in the days of Christ, one of his hearers interrupted with an ejaculation that similar darkness exists to-day. Moving towards the door, the interrupter earnestly said: "The Lord does not tell us to put up an idol in St. Paul's Cathedral. His glory is the first thing, and worship must be not to the Virgin Mary, but to God—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

A REVERED TUTOR died last week at Cambridge—Rev. Dr. Stephen Parkinson, of St. John's College. His kind, genial manner, and Christian bearing to the young men under his care, exercised a most beneficial influence over them, especially at the critical point of commencing a University career. He retired from tutorial duties in 1883, being succeeded by Rev. A. T. Ward, M.A., who bids fair to gain as great respect as his predecessor.

FREEDOM FOR SLAVES.—A Times telegram from Zanzibar says:—"At Bagamoyo, the Daressalam Church Missionary Society station of Rabai, was witnessed a very remarkable sight on New Year's Day, when Mr. Mackenzie, before an immense concourse of people, presented papers of freedom to many hundreds of runaway slaves, for whose unconditional redemption he had amicably arranged with their owners. This philanthropic measure has had an extraordinarily widespread beneficial effect on all classes."

LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY.—DEAR SIR,—Stowed away in many a cupboard and wardrobe are stores of cast-off old-fashioned clothing, which, if cleared out and sent on to us, would bring comfort to many a shivering body. All sorts of clothing, boots, hats, &c., can be turned to good account. Poor women are employed in making up and mending; those who respond to this plea will not only benefit thousands, but give employment to these poor workers.—Yours most obediently,

JOHN JAMES JONES.

THE "JOHN WILLIAMS."—The Sydney Morning Herald of Nov. 22 says:—"The missionary schooner, John Williams, returned to Sydney on the 16th, after her periodical visit to the islands of the South Seas and New Guinea. She reports bad news of a drought at New Guinea. The country round Port Moresby is suffering severely from want of rain, the whole place having a burnt-up appearance. Scarcely a green spot could be seen for many miles, and no planting had been done by the natives, who may be expected ere long to be subjected to great privations in consequence."

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—PRAISE for the partial recovery to health of Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, of Figueras, Spain.——PRAYER for blessing on a special evangelistic mission at Eastbourne, by Messrs. J. E. Taylor and J. Crofton Rainey, commencing Jan. 13.——For blessing on special services at Baptist Chapel, Longhope, Glos., by Mr. Opie Rodway, on Jan. 12 to 16.——For blessing on a three weeks' evangelistic mission at Arbroath, Forfarshire, N.B., beginning Sunday next.——For blessing on a fourteen days' mission at Barnard Castle.——For blessing on Gospel services at Liskeard Baptist Chapel, Cornwall, Jan. 14 to 28, by Mr. J. E. Burt.——That the Divine blessing may abundantly rest upon the work amongst the showpeople during the remaining weeks of the World's Fair.

MR. A. G. BROWN'S PASTORATE.

THE many-sided character of the work done in connection with the East London Tabernacle was happily demonstrated at a meeting held on Monday evening, in celebration of the twenty-second anniversary of Pastor Archibald G. Brown. The large audience, including past and present members of the church and congregation, was presided over by Mr. R. C. Morgan.

After some remarks by the CHAIRMAN, expressing a hope that the pastor's faithful labours will be increasingly owned of God in the future, Mr. Brown made a deeply-interesting statement on church work. At the outset he referred to the length of his pastorate. Two years ago he was much exercised as to whether he ought not to make way for a younger man, but as the congregation would not listen to his overtures, he had continued at his much-loved work.

Alluding to the changes of twenty-two years, he remarked that only a handful of his earliest members are among the 2100 now in fellowship. Death has removed many, and the exodus of people to suburban districts has greatly thinned the ranks. Yet new members take their place. At present there are members living eastward as far as Ilford, northward as far as Stoke Newington and Mildmay Park, and at similar distances in other directions. They are held together by the simple exposition of the Word of God. His endeavour has ever been to follow Apostolic methods as well as teach Apostolic doctrines, and as the church at large more distinctly does the same, so a mighty impression will certainly be made upon the outlying masses.

During the twenty-two years, said Mr. Brown, I have given the right hand of fellowship to 4162 persons. To God be the glory! No one is more amazed than myself. The spirit of prayerfulness still abides with this church. Our prayer-meetings are our great meetings—our most popular meetings. Nothing will draw an audience here like a prayer-meeting. Mr. Brown went on to speak of his deacons and other helpers—men with whom it is a distinct joy to work. There is no friction, and the meetings of officers are about the happiest of all.

Proceeding, Mr. Brown spoke of the many agencies of which the Tabernacle is the home and centre. There is no debt on any branch of the work, the money having recently come in without any begging. The Orphan and other Homes have been a blessing to many little ones, while among the poor and afflicted, old and young alike in large numbers have been greatly benefited, and in many ways, by one or other of the mission operations.

Mr. OVENDEN, on behalf of the deacons, declared the continued confidence of the church in Mr. Brown, whom they now looked upon as "settled down to the work." Rev. G. D. HOOPER, of Hendon, followed with an address, in which he attributed much of Mr. Brown's success to his Apostolic character. Rev. J. STEPHENS, of the Highgate-road Baptist Church, which has rendered much assistance to Mr. Brown in his work, also spoke. Unsound doctrine, he said, leads to unsound life. Therefore he sympathised with such labourers as Mr. Brown, who earnestly contend for the faith, and take care that all their ministrations shall conduce to definitely leading men to Christ.

The proceedings were very hearty, and constituted a powerful testimony to the warmth of the affection felt for Mr. Brown by his flock and the people among whom he labours.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES has been giving addresses in Calton United Presbyterian Church, Finnieston Free Church, Bethany Hall, the Tolbooth Hall, &c

A Y.M.C.A. RECEPTION.

AN excellent beginning to the work of another year was made last week at Aldersgate-street, when Mr. and Mrs. George Williams gave their customary annual "reception." The response by City young men was large; a goodly proportion of the guests were lads, a most hopeful circumstance. After tea, the lecture-hall was well filled with the young fellows, who listened with the deepest interest to some lively songs by a quartette of coloured singers, and afterwards to addresses. Mr. Williams, in the name of himself and his wife, gave a New Year's greeting and wished for all the happiness that comes from Christian life and service. Mr. T. A. Denny pleasantly chimed in and briefly exhorted his younger brethren to decision for Christ.

A very cogent and full address followed from Dr. G. F. Pentecost, who took up and dealt with in a masterly way various excuses that young men advance for not taking a definite stand on the side of Jesus Christ. The Doctor's weighty words fell on most attentive ears, and his closing bit of personal testimony, showing how he knew nothing of real happiness or peace of soul till he gave himself to the service of Christ, was very effective. Dr. Ziemann also spoke in the same vein, earnestly impressing on his hearers the need of having Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord if they would conquer the temptations and discharge the duties of daily life. Mr. Seagram offered some concluding observations, and the hallowed influences of the Spirit seemed to rest on the interesting gathering.

In the course of the evening, Mr. R. Burn, secretary, unfolded a varied and attractive programme for the session in the way of classes, lectures, &c. Rev. Dr. Wright, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has kindly consented to deliver a series of Lectures at the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Friday evenings at 8 p.m., commencing January 11, when his subject will be "The Power Behind the Pope." This will be followed by three popular lectures, entitled, "Side Lights on the Bible," giving deeply interesting geographical, historical, and practical details with which he has become acquainted during his travels and researches in the East. The subjects are as follow: Jan. 18, "The Texture of the Bible"; 25th, "The Boyhood of Jesus at Bethlehem and Nazareth"; Feb. 1, "The History of the Hittites."

THE SLAVE TRADE.—In reply to an autograph letter from Cardinal Lavigerie, Queen Christina of Spain has promised to support the anti-slavery campaign in Africa, which will also be assisted by the Spanish African Society. This body numbers among its members men of all parties, including Senors Castelar and Canovas. The Madrid press points out that nearer home the slave trade is openly carried on—namely, in Morocco, where young natives of both sexes are brought to the markets from the interior of North Africa.—Daily News.

THE HOUSE OF REST, 7 and 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn.—The New Year's all-day meeting on Friday last proved a time of more than usual blessing. At the morning gathering Christian missioners and workers were brought before the Lord in earnest prayer. The afternoon brought a very crowded audience, when Rev. F. B. Meyer gave an earnest address on the necessity of being passive in the Lord's hands when He is seeking to mould us by what may appear to us untoward circumstances into vessels meet for his use. In the evening Miss Mason gave a brief address on the motto of the year, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." Rev. T. D. Sanford spoke at some length on the subject of sanctification; showing that the whole man, spirit and soul and body, and all that he is in the habit of calling his own belongs to God. There was much praise on behalf of the House of Rest for spiritual and temporal prosperity during the past year.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. W. A. Meaton has conducted an eight days' mission at Bethel, Sheerness (Rev. W. H. Whitbread, pastor). The meetings were most helpful, especially some home gatherings of children and young people.

Evangelistic meetings were held last week in the E. U. Church, Govan, conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. E. Crosthwaite, and Mr. William S. Ross. The attendance was very good for a holiday week, and we believe a number have found salvation.

Miss Susannah Wesley Davies, a lady preacher from South Wales, is exciting considerable attention in Flintshire by her evangelistic services. Large crowds have gathered at Holywell, Groes, Gronant, and other places. Miss Davies sings as well as preaches the Gospel.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis has held a series of revival services in Danvers, Illinois, U.S., lasting nearly five weeks. His lectures on the Tabernacle of Moses, illustrated by a large model, were greatly appreciated, and a source of much blessing. Mr. Francis has been encouraged in his work in Danvers by a number of persons professing decided conversion. He has since been holding evangelistic meetings at Mosquito Grove.

Whitehaven. — Three weeks' evangelistic services have been held here, conducted by Mr. W. Thompson, of Glasgow. God was pleased to bless the earnest impressive appeals of the evangelist, along with his graphic description of the journey of Christian, in Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and his frequent application of the truth. The last week, being specially devoted to the young people was a time of much blessing.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith are being much encouraged in their mission at Exeter Hall. Despite the cold and foggy weather, there have been large audiences, and many persons have intimated decision for Christ. Mr. Fullerton's Bible-readings have been highly appreciated, while the prayer-meetings, conducted by Mr. Smith, have been seasons of much blessing. The workers have been cheered night after night, and the meetings are growing in size and interest.

Ballywalter.—A successful series of evangelistic meetings, held in the First Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. J. A. Anderson is the pastor, was brought to a close last week. Mr. J. H. Crawford, of Derry, assisted. The meetings were largely attended; many were brought under deep conviction of sin, and, chiefly through the inquiry-room, a large number professed to accept Christ as their Saviour. The services have given a fresh stimulus to Christian work in the district.

Wroxton. — This village, three miles from Banbury, has been the scene of earnest work during the past year and a half. The awakening dates from the summer of 1887, when Messrs. Newell and Hall conducted a tent mission in the place. Afterwards, a building which had once been used as a chapel, but had been given over to other purposes, was renovated, and Gospel truth is now being proclaimed week by week. The village has no other evangelical lightstand. On New Year's day, Messrs. Newell and Hall attended a happy gathering in the building, and not only renewed their testimony, but listened with pleasure to hearty addresses by other friends. This village is one of three hundred lying within a radius of ten miles of Banbury, and they afford a grand field for evangelistic work.

Belfast.—At the end of February next a mission will be held in Belfast by Mr. George Clarke. The mission will be a united one, and has been arranged for by the local committee of the Evangelical Alliance.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken will conduct missions in St. Silas, Liverpool, January 6 to 20; and at Waterloo, Liverpool, January 27 to February 10. Prayer is requested for blessing upon the work in these places.

SUNDERLAND. — A Conference for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life and the furtherance of foreign missions is to be held on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, February 11, 12, and 13, in the Assembly Hall, Fawcett-street, Sunderland. Feb. 11 will be devoted to the subject of "Deepening of the Spiritual Life"; Feb. 12 and 13 to "The Claims of the Heathen." Speakers well versed in these subjects will take part in the various meetings. Mr. Walter Price, 33, Chester-road, Sunderland, is the hon. secretary.

A BATCH OF BIOGRAPHIES.

THIS branch of religious literature has lately had some notable additions. Of these, several are on our table, all recording the lives of men who made their mark among their fellows. First let us note

A CHRISTIAN MERCHANT.

The name of ALEXANDER BALFOUR, the Christian Merchant and Philanthropist, will long be green in the minds of many outside of Liverpool, which was most closely associated with his life-work. Rev. R. H. Lundie's memoir (James Nisbet & Co.) is a fitting and admirable presentation of a truly noble and consecrated career. It would he well for England's future reputation if all her kings of commerce were animated by the high principle and unselfish integrity that marked the business life of Alexander Balfour. As to his zeal for the promotion of every good cause, and his munificent though quietly bestowed benefactions, it can truthfully be said that the late Mr. Balfour was a model, and reached a standard which too few strive after, and to which fewer still attain. The words spoken of the Great Master—that He continually went about doing good—were fully applicable to the disciple whose acts and words are so faithfully enshrined in these pages. Mr. Lundie's book is one that we should greatly like all our Christian young men to read; if they do not find inspiration in it, it will not be the fault of the author or his subject.

THE AUTHOR OF "PRAYING AND WORKING."

Equally beloved and revered by all who knew him was WILLIAM FLEMING STEVENSON, the Irish Presbyterian pastor, and friend of missions. Those who recollect the brief sketch of him, which appeared in our columns shortly after his death, will be glad to make a more detailed acquaintance with his busy and fruitful life, as recorded in the "LIFE AND LETTERS," edited by his wife, and published by Messrs. Nelson & Sons (5s. 6d.) As a pastor, Dr. Stevenson was highly successful. His gifted pen was freely at the service of the Church universal, while his devoted endeavours on behalf of foreign missions were worthy of the fullest imitation by all who do not devote their lives wholly to that department of Christian service. He died in harness, and if he had spared himself he might have been with us still. But he accomplished much; by tongue, and pen, and example, he sowed the seeds, we believe, of a far more extended harvest than he was permitted on earth to see. May his mantle descend on many who shall push the battle to the gate.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

The life of this eminent American preacher, compiled by his son and his son-in-law (21s. Sampson Low & Co.) makes a big book, but Mr. Beecher's busy career was so closely interwoven with his nation's history that a briefer record would scarcely have been adequate. Whatever may be thought of his lapses into theological mistiness in his later years, there is no gainsaying the fact that Mr. Beecher was a man of extraordinary gifts, and that he used these gifts in the advocacy of the great social reforms of his time. His noble services on behalf of freedom for the slave can never be forgotten by his countrymen. In this ample narrative we have an extremely vivid presentation of the man and the prominent figure he played in many parts. His early experiences as a Gospel preacher were unusually interesting, and one could wish that he had retained to the end the simplicity and evangelistic zeal which caused him to exercise such an influence for good among the youth who came under the scope of his ministry. The dark controversy that clouded his later life could not, of course, be passed over. The case as here presented affirms a complete vindication of his character. We can only trust that Mr. Beecher's speculative opinions will soon be forgotten, and his earnestness in upholding the cause of the oppressed will find many imitators.

MISSIONARY BIOGRAPHY.

A memoir of THOMAS J. COMBER, Pioneer to the Congo, by Rev. J. B. Myers, has been issued by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., as one of their admirable series of eighteenpenny Missionary Biographies. It is an intensely interesting record of a noble career. To the same series is added a life of SAMUEL CROWTHER, the slave boy who became Bishop of the Niger, by Mr. Jesse Page. In a few introductory words the venerable African Bishop testifies that it is a faithful record of his life. We cannot conceive of anything better calculated to inspire in the hearts of young people an enthusiasm for the cause of foreign missions than the reading of such biographies as these.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AVONDALE PRIORY, by Mrs. Lucas Shadwell, is a telling temperance story from a polished pen (Temperance Depôt).

STELLA RAY, by Harriet E. Burch (Gall & Inglis) will please those who like a story for its own sake without inquiring very curiously as to the lessons to be learned.

DAVID: THE MAN AFTER GOD'S OWN HEART. By Rev. H. E. Stone. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This book contains the substance of sermons delivered on successive Sunday mornings in Nottingham Tabernacle. It is a study of the life and character of David, intended for the help of young men. It is not remarkable for depth or originality of thought, but is exceedingly earnest in tone, and practical in its aim, and it abounds in inspiring and helpful lessons.

OUR CELESTIAL HOME. By Jermain G. Porter. Nisbet & Co. The author thinks he has reasonable ground for believing that heaven is a material locality, and lies within the starry heavens. Whatever we may think of his theory, we thank him for his most interesting book. In a very small compass he has condensed a great wealth of instruction concerning the heavenly bodies. Even those who do not accept his conclusions will find pleasure and profit in reading the work.

DANIEL'S PROPHECIES NOW BEING FULFILLED. By Rev. E. P. Cachemaille, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. This is not an exhaustive work. It gives general outlines rather than particular details. The author's aim is "to give a brief and condensed exposition" of Daniel's visions. The advantage of the book will be in making the reader long for a more thorough study of this deeply interesting theme. The carefully-arranged harmony of the visions in the Book of Daniel is very helpful.

ON THE WAY TO THE THRONE. By R. Ballantine. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. These seven discourses are designed to unfold the teaching of subjects represented on a stained glass window, recently erected in the Peebles church. We commend the sermons warmly. They are fearless in their statement of truth, full of strong and healthy evangelicalism, clear and vigorous in style, and enlivened by appropriate illustration. The author knows what he believes, and is not afraid to teach it. His book indicates a well-instructed mind, a sound judgment, and a fervent spirit.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES. Edited by Rev. T. Bowman Stephenson, LL.D. Vol. i. of the new series of this organ of the Wesleyan Methodist Children's Homes is a very attractive book. There is here much for young people as well as for Christian workers. We trust this latest development of the well-known "Children's Advocate" will prove a valuable help in the work of the Homes. Dr. Stephenson has also brought out the first number of THE CHILDREN'S HOUR, a halfpenny monthly. Illustrations form a prominent feature of both these publications. (T. Woolmer.)

EVERY MORNING. FIRST THOUGHTS FOR FIRST HOURS. By Joseph Parker, D.D. Burnet & Co. This book contains meditations, expositions, and prayers, designed to minister inspiration, and comfort, and strength at the beginning of the day. Like all that Dr. Parker writes, it is thoughtful, suggestive, practical, and original. Yet we think the work might have been done better. The usual method of providing a separate portion for each morning's reading is better than the Doctor's new and awkward arrangement. Books of this character are most helpful when they turn the reader to the Word of God itself; but in this, even the texts quoted above some of the portions are without indication of chapter and verse. Though we cannot think that the book will be widely used for the purpose for which it is intended, yet all will find it interesting and profitable reading for quiet hours.

HOW WE ARE SAVED. By J. A. R. Dickson, B.D. Religious Tract Society. A book for inquirers, brief, simple, clear, and safe. It is not remarkable either in thought or illustration, but many will find it helpful.

WHAT SAITH THE MASTER? (W. P. Nimmo, Edinburgh) is a very pretty specimen of the daily text-book series. The texts selected by Miss Cochrane are all chosen from the utterances of the Saviour. The binding is exceptionally chaste and neat.

REMARKABLE SAYINGS OF REMARKABLE QUEENS. By Eleanor F. Cobby. 1s. Elliot Stock. There is nothing remarkable either in the sayings or the queens; and the compiler, who indulges in very "tall talk," needs to learn the art of "boiling down."

WORDS OF CHEER FOR MOTHERS BEREFT OF CHILDREN is a posthumous and pathetic work by the lamented Mrs. Prentiss, and consists mainly of extracts from her letters or journals as to her own family sorrows and bereavements (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton).

"MY MASTER AND MY FRIEND." By Rev. George Everard. Religious Tract Society. Twelve brief chapters containing "words about the love and service of the Lord Jesus." A gracious book, brightly written, and one that will help many Christians to more fervent love, and more devoted service to their Master and their Friend.

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE OF GOD. By J. S. Candlish, D.D. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. A valuable addition to the series of "Handbooks for Bible-classes." The author deals with God as the Infinite Spirit, manifested in nature and providence; as Holy Love, revealed by Jesus Christ; and as Three in One. The treatment of the subject is clear, scholarly, thoughtful, Scriptural, and devout. Others besides conductors of Bible-classes will find this to be profitable and interesting reading.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR: GALATIANS. By Rev. J. S. Exell. 7s. 6d. Nisbet. A monument of patient industry in book-making. The illustrations are of various kinds, gathered from a wide range of reading, home and foreign, and the book cannot but be of great service to persons desiring an abundance of expository information on this fundamentally important Epistle. The pages would certainly be more inviting to busy students if the type were larger, and the matter broken up into more frequent paragraphs; but the collection is so full and well digested that it seems ungracious to say anything calculated to qualify our praise of such a useful book.

THE GOSPEL OF ST. MATTHEW IN FORMOSAN has just been published by Messrs. Trübner & Co. It is edited by Rev. W. Campbell, from a translation by Daniel Gravius, issued at Amsterdam in 1661. A minister of the Reformed Church of Holland, Gravius laboured for some time among the aboriginal tribes in that part of the Island of Formosa which formed a colonial possession of the Dutch East Indian Company. Through political and other circumstances, his work was never permitted to reach the people whom he wished much to benefit. It is hoped that now his endeavours will be rewarded, and that the editor, who has bestowed much care upon the re-issue, will be greatly cheered by the results of its circulation.

LUX BENIGNA, being the history of Orange-street Chapel. By Rev. R. W. Free, M.A. W. B. Whittingham & Co. Orange-street, or Leicester Fields Chapel, has had a most remarkable and interesting history. It was occupied from 1693 to 1776 by the French Huguenots, from 1776 to 1876 by the Church of England, and from 1787 to the present date by the Congregationalists. The author of this book is the present minister of the chapel, and the subject loses nothing in his hands. His style is easy, bright, and sometimes humorous; and he possesses the power of stating historical facts with clearness and brevity. The first chapter contains a very valuable outline of Protestant history in France up to the flight of the Huguenots. The subsequent history introduces us to many memorable names, which are enough of themselves to secure the reader's interest; but the author makes his book even more readable by graphic descriptions which enliven his pages. In his closing chapter he is not likely to carry all his readers with him. Many will unite in deploring the present divisions of the Church of Christ, and in the feeling that "sectarianism is doomed." But they will want to know whither the author is tending before they fully follow him. None the less, however, will they enjoy and profit by the book.

T. NELSON & SONS.

This firm is celebrated for the neatness and general attractiveness of the get-up of their publications. Several are before us. SAVED BY LOVE, by Emma Leslie, is a touching tale of the London waifdom, in which love proves the conqueror. EAGLE AND DOVE, by M. E. Clements, is a well-told story, founded on fact, the scene of which is in the theatre of the Franco-German War. Apart from the intrinsic charm of the tale, some vivid glimpses are afforded of the vicissitudes of that terrible struggle. OUT IN THE WORLD, by Pansy, is a truly delightful story, describing the many good deeds accomplished by one devoted and earnest-minded young lady. The narrative is thoroughly American in its vivaciousness and swing. We heartily commend it, especially to young ladies whose time hangs heavy on their hands. ILLUSTRATED BIBLE STORIES FOR THE YOUNG embrace some of the better known Scripture narratives couched in simple language.

JOHN F. SHAW & CO.

IN ALL OUR DOINGS, by Grace Stebbing (3s. 6d.), is a bright, healthy, bracing story, fit to put into the hands of any boy over ten. This author's stories are always well worth reading, and these twenty-five breezy chapters are even better than her best.—TWICE RESCUED, by Nellie Cornwall (2s. 6d.), is a Cornish story, very touching and beautiful. The author is pleasantly conversant with Cornish ways and dialect, and her story is full of the Gospel.—PRISON BARS, by Catherine Shaw (2s. 6d.), is a beautifully practical little story, written in a sweet natural style. Anyone desiring a nobly true example of every-day Christianity, to give to their growing girl friends, cannot do better than to introduce them to Gwendoline.—PIXIE'S ADVENTURES, by N. D'Anvers (2s. 6d), is supposed to be a portion of the biography of a rather conceited and self-satisfied little dog, written from his own point of view. It may amuse, but will not elevate.—SYBIL'S MESSAGE, by Emily Brodie. 1s. 6d. With such an author, so perfectly in sympathy with her subject, what wonder that this little story, written on behalf of the "Theatrical Mission," is one of the most touching we have read for some time?—TO THE END, by C. Lockhart Gordon (1s.), is a tale of five lives—all commenced their Christian course together, but all do not run the race in the same way. It contains some useful lessons.

JANUARY MAGAZINES.

ILLUSTRATIONS (3d.) answers well to its title, and, as usual, contains entertaining and practical contributions in several of the chief departments of general knowledge. Kent & Co.

THE MOTHER'S TREASURY enters upon its twenty-sixth year in an enlarged form, and is more than ever a first-rate monthly for the home. 1d. Religious Book Society, 27, Paternoster-row.

THE WELCOME HOUR (1d.), Marshall Brothers, is another useful publication of the same class, also brightly illustrated.

THE HOSPITAL is replete with information of wide interest. Five nursing supplements are stitched with part 15, making in all 100 pages of very readable and really valuable matter. 6d. The Hospital, Limited, 38, Old Jewry, E.C.

THE HOMILIST begins the new year with a varied fare. Generally speaking, the articles are characterised by sound and vigorous exposition; in most of them, moreover, Scripture teaching is viewed in the light of present-day needs. 6d. Houlston & Sons.

OUR DARLINGS. 3d. J. F. Shaw & Co. The new issue of Dr. Barnardo's illustrated monthly is full of promise for the volume for 1889. Old and young cannot but find much in this magazine to excite their interest in the weak and needy.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY MONTHLY REPORTER comes out in an enlarged form, capitally illustrated. THE BIBLE SOCIETY GLEANINGS FOR THE YOUNG also begins a new series. These are halfpenny monthly publications, issued from The Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

BABYHOOD is a magazine which mothers and others who have the care of young children cannot but read with pleasure and profit. The pages are uniformly bright and instructive, and as their readers increase, the comfort of infants will undoubtedly be enhanced. 6d. Babyhood Publishing Company, 92 and 93, Fleet-street, E.C.

THE MISSIONARY REVIEW OF THE WORLD gives promise of making good the editors' promise that 1889 shall excel 1888. In the literature section there are nine original articles, every one of which is good, for instance, Dr. Pierson's "Christian Missions as the Enterprise of the Church," and "Signs of the Supernatural in the General Work"; Dr. J. M. Ludlow's paper on "Henry Martyn," "Missions in the Levant," "British Opium in China," and "Translations from Foreign Missionary Periodicals." Under "Organised Missionary Work," we have the latest report of the eighteen woman's missionary societies of Canada and of Great Britain and Ireland. Then correspondence from China, Brazil, Persia, Asia Minor, and Africa. The portrait of the Earl of Aberdeen, President of the World's Missionary Conference, adorns the number. Funk & Wagnalls.

THE REAPER (1d. Houlston & Sons) is an admirably conducted paper, containing thoughtful papers and well-digested missionary and other items. MEDICAL MISSIONS (1d. T. O. Smith, 14, Paternoster-row) deals with important phases of evangelistic work at home and abroad. THE CHRONICLE OF THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY (1d. Snow & Co., Ivy-lane) tells of earnest work in many lands, the blessing of God distinctly attending the same. THE CHURCH MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCER AND RECORD (6d.) is a very ably managed magazine, published from the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square. From the same source comes THE CHURCH MISSIONARY GLEANER, which is a remarkably well illustrated monthly. The January issue of NORTH AFRICA (1d.), the quarterly record of the North Africa Mission, contains reports that are full of encouragement to those who are supporting testimony in Morocco, Algeria, and Tunis. The opening part of vol. v. of ALL THE WORLD (3d.) is filled with varied reading matter. A portrait and sketch of "Commandant" H. H. Booth are given (Salvation Army Headquarters).

FRET NOT THYSELF. A message for the New Year, by Mrs. Cronyn. 1d. Partridge. This booklet contains much that is always in season.

ELSIE: THE ANGEL CHILD. By Michael Scott. Tunbridge Wells: Baldwin. A story in verse; the execution cannot, however, be pronounced successful from a poetical point of view.

Messrs. Collins & Sons' Combination Diary, Blotting Pad, and Slate Tablet, is a very handy and useful companion for the desk or table. Those who use it once will not easily relinquish it.

THE MORAVIAN ALMANAC AND YEAR BOOK contains full information relating to every department of the Church of the United Brethren. (4d. Moravian Publication Office, 32, Fetter-lane, E.C.)

HOME MISSION WORK. Mr. J. N. Mackinlay, 421, Sauchiehall-street, Glasgow, has published a suggestive booklet, by Michael Honeyman, on Congregation Charity, with some remarks on mission work in general.

Three penny booklets, by Rev. John Averill, of Teignmouth, are: THE PREDICTED RAPTURE OF THE SAINTS; THE CROWNS PROMISED TO BELIEVERS; and THE TABERNACLE OF GOD WITH MEN. They are thoughtful and instructive. (E. Stock.)

THE BETRAYAL AND CRUCIFIXION OF OUR LORD. By Alfred Cooper. 6d. E. Stock. A consolidation of the Gospel records, in some measure serving the purpose of a harmony. It is compiled in accordance with the order followed by Archdeacon Farrar in his "Life of Christ."

DOVES: THE LESSONS THEY TEACH US. By Rev. W. Talbot Hindley, vicar of St. Barnabas, Holloway. 1s. Hunt & Co. An address to the young, presenting great lessons in simple language. The truths are, moreover, such as maturer minds do well to have in constant remembrance.

THE TIME TO BEGIN. By Rev. A. E. Foster, Hastings. 1d. Partridge & Co. A New Year's call to the unconverted. It is forcibly shown that there is a time to die as well as to live; therefore it is needful that men should, while it is possible, decide to repent and believe the Gospel. A good, useful tract.

Mr. Henry Putman, of 41, Middle-street, Southsea, has written and published some pretty and graceful stanzas, entitled "Perfect Peace and other Verses." But fourpence for seven short poems will be deemed by most people an inordinate price, even though the proceeds be "devoted to Christian work.'

THE SHILLING BABY. By Dr. Barnardo. This is "an incident of the London slave trade." It tells of a little girl whom the author bought for a shilling from her wretched mother in an East-end lodging-house. The child is a type of many who have been rescued from misery and shame. (6d. per dozen. 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.)

A new monthly paper, entitled, The Banner of Asia, is to be published at Bombay. It will be edited by Alfred S. Dyer, Wallace J. Gladwin, and Maurice Gregory. Its object will be "to uphold the right of Christ to reign in the councils of the nations, and to demand the immediate stoppage of the iniquitous Government traffic in vice, liquor, and opium, in and from British territory in the East."

THE BOOK OF THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND. 6d. Edinburgh: R. & R. Clark. This year-book is published for the General Assembly's Committee on Christian Life and Work. The issue for 1889 contains a large amount of tabulated information, and several historical and other articles specially interesting to members of the Church of Scotland.

SELL'S DICTIONARY OF THE WORLD'S PRESS. Each successive issue of this work finds it increased in bulk and interest. The 1889 edition contains no fewer than 1450 pages, and remains the same price—2s.! The newspaper lists are very complete, while the articles and illustrations are more numerous then ever. Sell's Advertising Agency, 197, Fleet-street, E.C.

CLERICAL VISITING LIST. 3s. Hazell, Watson & Viney. A compact and complete pocket-book for parish purposes. Besides an ample visiting list, separate pages are left for various church helpers, nurses, lent and borrowed books, &c., a full list of church societies and officers is given, and a table to find daily Psalms is added this year, and a clear wages or income table. For town clergy the book is most convenient.

The 14th and concluding volume of Messrs. Cassell & Company's ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY is ready for publication. This work, which has been in preparation for nearly seventeen years, will contain about 50,000 more words than any other existing dictionary. Whilst "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary" fills 1538 pages, and the "Imperial Dictionary" 2222, the ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY extends to no less than 5629 pages.

KEEPING THE HEART is the title of an illustrated booklet, in which the young are simply and lovingly addressed by Rev. W. Duncan. Glasgow: Aird & Coghill.—In THE "LITTLE MEMBER," a New Year's address to the young, by J. Forbes Moncrieff, there is instruction which many grown-up people would do well carefully to read, as to the use of the tongue. This booklet also is illustrated. (1½d. Glasgow: Charles Glass & Co.)

PHONOGRAPHIC LITERATURE. The rapid growth of good reading matter printed in the beautiful phonographic symbols is an index of the increasing popularity of Mr. Pitman's system of shorthand. Mr. E. J. Nankivell has commenced the issue, in weekly penny numbers, of that social classic, UNCLE TOM'S CABIN, with clever illustrations. A new generation of young readers has arisen that knows very little about one of the most remarkable narratives ever penned, and we anticipate that most phonographers, students or otherwise, will become acquainted with it, or renew their acquaintance, through these superbly written pages. THE REPORTERS' MAGAZINE is unusually interesting this month, because of the new phonographic game of "outline quartettes" described in it by the editor. An important addition to the literature of the art is the issue of a new edition of Mr. Pitman's PHONETIC SHORTHAND DICTIONARY (in fornightly parts, 4d. Pitman & Sons). The most approved outlines of all the working words in the English language are given in this work, which will be indispensable in every phonographer's library.

 There was an unfortunate printer's error in our notice last week of Mr. L. Macbean's excellent collection of "Songs and Hymns of the Highlands." "A rich but largely worked mine of Celtic poesy," should have read, "A rich but largely *un*worked mine," &c.

AN EVENING SONG.

LET me sing:
I am weary to-night;
Let me sing, and the music will light
All my heart, with the thought that the right
Must triumph at last, in my sight.

With the ring
Of the harmonies clear,
Surely, sweetly, there falls on my ear
An echo of harps I shall hear
When free from all faintness and fear.

As I cling
To the thought of the joy,
I arise from each earthly annoy,
To the rapture no power can destroy,
To the pleasure which never shall cloy.

Thus I wing
Up, up to the source of delight,
As the skylark soars, spurning the night,
And returning, refreshed from the flight;
Fresh hope for the morrow is bright,
New strength to my work I can bring.

MARGARET BERESFORD.

REV. JAMES GILMOUR, the solitary worker of the London Missionary Society in Mongolia, recently paid a visit to Tientsin. Nothing had been heard of him for more than three months prior to his sudden appearance. He has had a sorely trying experience "among the Mongols," but sees signs of spiritual movement which cheer his heart. Five men—not Mongols, however, but Chinese—have been baptized, and seven more have enrolled themselves.

Letters to the Editor.

ANECDOTAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Dear Sir,—May I ask your readers, through you, to send me any anecdotes which they may come across in their reading during the coming year? I do not wish for any out of any already existing collections. It does not matter what the subject of the anecdotes, or from what sources gathered, with the above exception. I am preparing an illustrative work on a new system for the use of preachers, Sunday-school teachers, &c., and the greater the variety of its contents, the more useful will it be.—Yours faithfully,

P. B. Power,
Author of "The I Wills of the Psalms,"
"The Oiled Feather," &c.

Richmond, Surrey.

LOCK HOSPITAL AND ASYLUM,

Harrow-road, W.

Dear Sir,—Since the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts all Government support has been withdrawn from our hospital, involving a loss of £1400 per annum. We urgently need £5000, to remove a heavy and long-standing debt. These poor girls, whose sufferings we alleviate, and whom we seek to restore to a better and brighter life, are aptly described by the words, "Nobody's hope, and nobody's care."

Still, they are our follow-creatures, have bodies to be healed, and souls to be saved. May I earnestly appeal to your readers to help us in what has recently been well called by Mrs. Bramwell Booth, our "sad but noble work."

During the past six months more than 50 per cent. of the inmates of this hospital have been rescued, and sent either to the Lock Asylum or to some other Home.—Yours very truly, Algernon C. P. Coote, Sec.

A NOTABLE BOOK.

Sir,—I ask permission to call attention in your columns to a very remarkable work lately published, a work of peculiar value at the present time, but of which I have only seen one very brief notice, and which I fear has consequently not obtained the circulation it, in my humble judgment, unquestionably deserves. I refer to the book, "The Divine Programme of the World's History," by Mr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness (Hodder & Stoughton). Written with all the perspicuity and ability which characterise the previous productions of its authors, it exhibits in a most striking manner the seven main sections of the prophetic history of mankind, as associated with Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, David, Nebuchadnezzar, and—last and greatest—our Lord Jesus Christ. The extreme, the stupendous improbability of the fulfilment of that prophetic history, and yet its marvellous and precise accomplishment, are pointed out in the clearest and most interesting manner, and open what will probably be to many an entirely new aspect of the Word of God.

But the main value of the work, to my mind, consists in the overwhelming evidence it affords of the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures, an evidence which is, indeed, nothing less than a mathematical demonstration, and to a candid mind can hardly fail to carry the deepest conviction.

"If," to quote one sentence, "the Bible offers as a pledge of its Divine inspiration a complete programme of future history, if it has recorded in advance the events of ages to come; and placed the document containing the record in the possession of mankind; if all the events of the slowly unfolding ages have actually fallen out according to its prophetic foreview; if all that was predicted has happened, and nothing has occurred contrary to its programme; then, beyond all question, we are bound to hold the Bible to be from God, and practically to acknowledge its Divine authority."

The battle is now raging over the Word of God, and will probably wax fiercer as the days go on. We cannot afford to neglect any weapon which has been placed in our hands, and in Mr. and Mrs. Guinness's work we have, I believe, one which will prove of immense value. This is my principal reason for venturing to ask your readers' attention to the book. But I am also led to do so by the fact that the profits of its sale will be devoted to the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, of which its authors are the founders and directors, and of which I have the privilege of being the treasurer.—Yours obediently,

S. Arthur Blackwood.

Shortlands, Kent.

THE TERRIBLE CRIME IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—It would be a very desirable thing if every minister of the Gospel and every ministers' meeting would forward to Viscount Cross, at the India Office, an energetic and strongly-worded protest against the abominable illegality exposed in The Christian of the 4th inst. Government cannot be made to feel and act except by the protest of a righteous indignation.—Yours faithfully,

Ilfracombe. W. R. Foster.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH AND BIBLE-READING.

Sir,—It may interest your readers to know that I, who was brought up a Roman Catholic, was sent by my parents as a boy to the college of the "Josephite" Fathers at Grammont, Belgium, and my Roman Catholic New Testament was taken away from me on my arrival, on the ground that in a Catholic country the Bible must not be possessed except by the bishop's special permission.

It was in a great measure what I saw in that priests' college that led me afterwards to abandon Romanism—the low moral tone, especially as regards truth; the superstition, making presents to the Virgin's image to win favours from her; the unmanly form of piety instilled into the pupils. The "good" boys, who were favoured because of their piety, which was often hypocrisy, were unmitigated sneaks; and to make sneaks of them seemed to be the great object of the fathers.

Yours, &c., Ex-Romanist.

P.S.—Even in England priests rarely allow Bible-reading.

HOMES FOR AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—Fifty-seven inmates were present at the annual Christmas dinner; two other urgent cases have since been admitted. There is accommodation for seventy-five inmates, and those who are able to strengthen the hands of the committee will make it possible for more poor and sadly afflicted people to enter the Homes. The hon. superintendents are: Rev. H. and Mrs. Bright, Hanley-road, Crouch-hill, N.

JEWS IN JERUSALEM.—Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, writing from Jerusalem since his return to his post, says:—"We found the condition of our poor Jewish brethren much improved. The Lord has sent us rain, so at present there is plenty of water, and this is no little joy to the poor. Though the downfall lasted only a short time, the floods went to the trenches and filled the cisterns, so we have plenty of water for the present. The Jews have now permission to come to Jerusalem, and houses are built for them. The best part of the commercial enterprise is now in Jewish hands. There are also a good number of Jewish craftsmen, and they do their work skillfully. Foolish superstitions are also dying out among them."

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—The monthly meeting of workers and friends, held on Friday last, was attended by a large number, and was much enjoyed. The chair was occupied by Mr. W. H. Seagram. After several friends had engaged in prayer, Mr. J. T. Isaac gave a short account of the happy time spent at the Rest by many of the sailors at Christmas time. He spoke thankfully of the encouragement given in the Scandinavian meetings, at which, on Sunday week, several of the men were decidedly impressed. Then followed an interesting and helpful address by Rev. F. B. Meyer, on "The Principles upon which the Apostle Paul wrought his Life-work." Miss Hodges, who is about to leave for mission work in North Africa, and Mr. E. H. Glenny, who has recently returned from his eighth visit there, also spoke briefly.

DR. STEPHENSON'S CHILDREN'S HOME.—There was a large assemblage of friends of this institution a few evenings ago, on the occasion of the annual festival at Exeter Hall. The children seemed to much enjoy the proceedings, while their singing and manipulation of the many musical instruments of the orchestra gave great pleasure to the friends and supporters of the Homes. The meeting was presided over by Mr. T. B. Holmes, of Hull, who said that already some 2000 Sunday-schools send subscriptions. Dr. Stephenson, in the course of an exhaustive address, stated that about 300 children are received every year, and there are always more applications than vacancies. Three more Homes might be built within the next six months, if the means of maintaining them, about £1000 a year, could be reckoned upon. The chief office of the institution is Bonner-road, London, E.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE EVANGELICAL SOCIETY OF GENEVA supports or assists five pastors, six evangelists, and one teacher, labouring in France. Moreover, during the last year, fifty-seven colporteurs worked under its direction in thirty-eight Departments of France.

MR. J. A. NARDON, an ex-Roman Catholic priest, has joined the Reformed Church of France. In a declaration recently published, he urges his brethren in the priesthood who have consciences harassed by doubt (and he says they are numerous) not to be afraid to imitate him.

M. REVEILLAUD has been holding meetings in several Belgian towns. At Liège on three successive evenings there were large audiences, that on the last occasion numbering about one thousand persons. The Gospel continues to find eager hearers in Belgium wherever it is proclaimed.

PALESTINE.—M. Schneller, the missionary, reports that the Evangelical Church at Bethlehem, for which funds have been collected, is being rapidly erected. He points out the necessity for a place of worship in connection with the Syrian Orphanage at Jerusalem, directed by his father.—Journal Religieux.

"THE LEGION OF HONOUR."—That the political condition of France at the present time is favourable for aggressive work on the part of Protestants is shown by the fact that three evangelical pastors and several well-known Protestant laymen were among those who, on January 1, were made Knights of the Legion of Honour.

PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.—French religious papers have been discussing the question of the strength of Protestantism in France. The Journal Religieux quotes M. Puaux, editor of L'Annuaire Protestant, as estimating the number of the Protestant population of the country at 750,000. Having carefully studied the history of the free churches, M. Puaux regards this result as encouraging.

HAMBURG.—Several remarkable meetings have been held in this busy town by Rev. E. Schrenk. Night after night a large concert hall was crowded, the audiences reaching in numbers to 2400. Such earnest assemblages of people to hear the Gospel had never before been known in Hamburg. Meetings specially held for Christians were attended with much blessing.

JUVENILE SMOKING IN FRANCE.—The members of the Society against the Abuse of Tobacco have determined vigorously to petition for legislation to put down juvenile smoking. The Society has conducted investigations into the evil effects of the habit upon children ranging in age from nine to fifteen. In a large number of cases serious diseases have been distinctly traced to the practice.

THE EVANGELISATION OF FRANCE is the theme of earnest articles in Le Signal. It is felt that the time has arrived for talking and writing to give place to real active work. To penetrate the rural districts, inaccessible by railways, will not be easy, and unless the workers are many, and of special physical calibre, the rate of progress must be slow. It has been suggested that the churches might well, and profitably, liberate their pastors for occasional evangelistic tours.

AUSTRALIA.—Writing on Nov. 12 last, the Melbourne correspondent of The Presbyterian Messenger says:—"Our Centennial Mission in Victoria is drawing to its close. The winding-up of the lengthened series of evangelistic services is to be marked by the circulation, far and wide, of a brief printed statement of Gospel truth. Its object is to present, in clear and impressive language, the love of God in Jesus Christ. It is proposed to distribute this address broadcast over the land, so that not a family may escape.

MADAGASCAR still presents large heathen tracts of country to the Christian missionary. Indeed, in spite of the encouraging progress which the Gospel has made in the island, paganism still holds sway over the majority of its upwards of five million inhabitants. The Holy Spirit is now beginning to work in the hearts of the people, especially amongst the young, in a manner such as has not been heard of for many a year; and there seems, says The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society, to be a real stirring among the "dry bones."

SWITZERLAND.—The evangelical churches are showing greatly increased activity. A correspondent of Le Christianisme speaks of the diversity of form which the meetings have assumed at Geneva, noting especially that women as well as men have been praying at the after-meetings, and that large audiences have been assembling on Sunday evenings in a public hall, in which the Gospel has been preached. A petition for the total suppression of haunts of vice has received 6000 signatures in Geneva alone. Temperance work is making a remarkable impression at Lausanne and Neuchâtel.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—In a pamphlet entitled, "Only Players," Mr. Courthope Todd gives an interesting account of eighteen months' work. Old and young, sick and poor, have been reached, and help has been given in various ways to those who have needed it. The institute, "Macready House," Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C., has been in greater requisition than ever, and there have been many evidences that the loving solicitude of the Mission is duly appreciated by many who toil on the stage. The cause has lately been advocated in many cities of the Continent, and actors and actresses have learned that, though "only players," they occupy a place in the sympathies of the followers of Jesus Christ.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. F. S. Webster, late principal of the Church Army Training Home, and a highly esteemed missioner of the Church Parochial Mission Society, has been appointed vicar of St. Thomas's, Birmingham.

The Bishop of Rochester has left London for a voyage to Australia. He expects to be at home again before Easter. Dr. Barry, Bishop of Sydney, has announced his acceptance of the post of Assistant Bishop of Rochester. Dr. Barry will arrive in England about May next.

Dr. Goe, Bishop of Melbourne, has refused the offer of a layman in the colony to erect a reredos in the new cathedral that is being built in Melbourne, because, when the plans were submitted to him, the centre panel was found to contain a figure of the Virgin, to the removal of which the donor would not consent.

Mr. Paulus Ashkenazi, who worked for some time amongst Jews in Spitalfields, in connection with the Home of Industry, has been ordained by the Bishop of Rochester, and is now at work in a very poor parish at Deptford, S.E., as curate to Rev. James Malcolmson, vicar of St. Luke's, Deptford. Mr. Ashkenazi will still continue his work among the Jews of Spitalfields voluntarily on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Rev. A. H. Delmé-Radcliffe, vicar of St. Andrew-the-Less and Christ Church, Cambridge, has been appointed to succeed Sir Emilius Laurie in the incumbency of St. John the Evangelist parish, Paddington, London. Mr. Delmé-Radcliffe is a devoted evangelical clergyman, whose ministry at Cambridge during the last few years has been greatly blessed. He took warm interest in the work carried on in connection with the Theatre Mission, Barnwell.

Rev. Dr. Bullinger has retired from the oversight of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow, Essex, and is succeeded by Rev. H. E. Noyes, of Kingstown, Dublin, also a spiritually minded clergyman holding sound evangelical principles. It was with deep regret that the congregation heard of Dr. Bullinger's retirement, and a few days ago, by an address and testimonial, they affectionately acknowledged his faithful ministry during the past sixteen years.

PRESBYTERIAN.

There are 2000 Icelanders in the city of Winnipeg, and a Presbyterian mission has been formed under the care of a converted Icelander. An Icelandic hymn-book has been printed, and there are two Icelandic newspapers. No church organisation has yet been begun among these children of the north, but there are evidences that this will soon be needed.

Rev. C. P. Way, who has been pastor of the English Presbyterian congregation at Alderney for nearly six years, is about to resign the charge. Though the scope for aggressive effort in the island is very limited, his work has been greatly blessed; many souls have been born again, and the church membership has been increased threefold. Mr. Way proposes devoting himself to the work of an evangelist.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. Spurgeon, father of C. H. Spurgeon, preached in the Crown-lane Chapel, Maldon, twice on Sunday, December 23. Very good congregations assembled to hear the venerable gentleman.

At the mission anniversary in connection with the South Cliff Church, Scarborough (Rev. A. Vine Hall's), the work at the mission chapels was shown to have been very successful during the past year, increased accommodation being imperative.

Rev. Edward Storrow has closed his ministry of thirteen years at Sudeley-place Chapel, Brighton. He does not seek another pastorate, but will devote his time to writing on various aspects of the foreign missionary question, and to preaching as occasion offers.

The Colonial Missionary Society are about to establish a Congregational Church at the Johannesburg Goldfields, South Africa. Rev. F. J. Ecclestone, late of Broadstairs, has accepted the charge, and will leave for South Africa directly. Johannesburg is a new town in the Transvaal Highlands, of nearly 20,000 Europeans. It is already the second largest town in South Africa.

BAPTIST.

The Baptists of Northwich have been granted the use of the public baths for baptismal immersions.

One hundred and thirty-two converts, gathered by the revival of the Virginia-street Baptist Church, at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, were immersed on the 2nd ult. by Rev. Mr. Williams, pastor of the church, in a mill-pond in a bend of Little River, in the presence of several thousand persons.

At the annual meeting of the church at Beeston, Nottingham, reports of the various branches of Christian work showed signs of increasing prosperity. A larger number was added to the church during the year than for many years past. The pastor, Rev. R. Pursey, and deacons are greatly encouraged.

Rev. J. T. Wigner, the venerable pastor of Brockley-road Chapel, New Cross, London, on Sunday week commenced the fiftieth year of his ministerial work. He read a brief statement showing that he began his ministerial course on December 30, 1839. During these years there have been but twelve Sabbaths on which he did not preach. Among other things, he said, "I need an assistant.'

METHODIST.

Great Home Missionary Conventions are to be held in Bolton and Burnley next week. Revs. J. E. Clapham, Hugh Price Hughes, and P. Thompson are announced as speakers.

Rev. T. Champness, who is to be liberated from circuit work at the next Wesleyan Conference, so that he may give himself to the extension of the Joyful News Mission, announces that, as he will not receive any salary, he will support himself by the sale of Joyful News and other kinds of pure literature. He invites friends to purchase from his book depôt at Rochdale. He will send any book on receipt of the published price.

Mr. Champness, says The Methodist Times, has hit upon a happy idea in his new temperance magazine for the young people. The Joyful News Banner of Hope, edited by Rev. Josiah Mee is a very good "ha'porth." Multitudes of children are enrolled in our Bands of Hope who know very little of the terrible evils of drink. This little magazine is admirably calculated to give them "a reason for the hope that is in them."

Methodism is waking up to its duty with regard to the working classes. A working-men's club, with reading and refreshment rooms, has been opened (says The Methodist Times), and every effort is being made to provide such an institution as shall successfully compete with the attractions of the public-house. We regard it as a matter for great thankfulness that our Church is beginning to realise the necessity of attending to the social aspects of religion, as well as the more directly spiritual.

The staff of Rev. Charles Garrett's Liverpool Mission consists of two ministers, six laymen, and a large number of voluntary helpers. During the year 20,000 visits have been paid, 3000 of these being to the sick and dying; 60,000 tracts have been distributed, 912 persons have signed the pledge, and 327 cottage meetings have been held. In addition to these, numerous open-air services have taken place, and diligent attention has been paid to the dockyards, railway sheds, and similar establishments. The Methodist Times urges that this work should be taken by a Conference Committee in the same way as the London Missions, as at present Mr. Garrett bears the whole burden of carrying on the Mission, having to find all the money and do all the work.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Successful evangelistic services, conducted by Revs. S. Hollingsworth, J. D. Lamont, and others, were held each evening last week in Holywood Methodist Church.

Evangelical Alliance meetings for united prayer and praise were held each evening last week in various towns and cities of Ireland. They were well attended and very interesting.

St. Enoch's Presbyterian congregation, Belfast, of which Rev. Dr. Hanna is the pastor, is a flourishing one. It has over 700 seatholders, besides a large number of adherents, is attended by 1000 soldiers. It has 3200 children in its Sabbath-schools, and 2300 in its day-schools.

It is proposed to found a Soldiers' Home in Belfast. The institution will form a safe place of resort for soldiers when out of barracks, and provide them with coffee, reading, and recreation rooms; while sleeping accommodation will be supplied for soldiers passing through Belfast during the furlough season. The Home will also offer numerous other advantages, and is urgently needed in Belfast, with its large garrison. The subscriptions now amount to over £1000, but about £2000 more is required.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The work in Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, has so increased under the pastorate of Rev. J. J. Mackay, that Rev. A. S. A. Bishop has been appointed as assistant.

Rev. John Leathley, the new pastor of the Govan Wesleyan Church, has entered upon a course of earnest evangelistic work in connection with his congregation.

Special services have been held in London-road United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, to express thanksgiving for the fact that in four years a membership of 400 has been doubled, and a debt of £4000 halved.

The United Presbyterian Church has lost one of her ablest ministers by the death, on Thursday, January 3, of Rev. Joseph Leckie, D.D., of Ibrox U.P. Church, Paisley-road, Glasgow, aged 62 years. He had been settled at Ibrox for twenty-two years, and was greatly beloved.

The annual tea-meeting of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen, was held in the Hall, Queen-street, on New Year's night. A number of testimonies were given by friends from many places in the country where the evangelists had been working during the year.

The Clydebank Wesleyan Church, Glasgow, has only been opened eighteen months, and during fifteen months it has enjoyed a series of weekly conversions without a break. Every month the pastor lectures on Sunday afternoon to men, and has an average congregation of three hundred. Every Saturday night there is a crowded Gospel Temperance meeting, at which pledges are taken and souls saved, while the Mission Band is always making raids on the neighbourhood.

DEATHS.

At Limerick, Rev. James B. Gillman, probably the ablest preacher Irish Methodism ever possessed.—Captain Edward Littlehales, R.N., for twenty years the devoted honorary secretary of the Thames Church Mission, and a warm friend of Christian enterprise.—At St. Mark's Hospital, City-road, London, after an operation for cancer, Rev. W. R. Mullett, of Frodsham, for the last ten years a minister of the United Methodist Free Churches, and an ardent labourer in the Gospel.—Colonel O. de Büren, of Berne, whose loss is much felt in Switzerland.—Rev. C. C. Tyte, Congregational minister, late of Sheffield.—Rev. George Kettle, pastor of the Swan Hill Congregational Church, Shrewsbury.—Rev. James Simpson Macnab, Minister of Cumbrae Established Church.—Rev. George Campbell, of Tarbat Ross-shire.—Mr. George Voss, of Stoney Stanton, an evangelist well known in Lincolnshire.—Rev. Henry Quick, Congregational pastor, formerly of Clifton, Bristol.—Rev. Thomas Russell, a veteran Methodist minister, and one of the co-workers with Hugh and James Bourne in founding the Primitive Methodist Connexion. In 1830 Mr. Russell was sentenced to three months' hard labour in Abingdon Gaol for open-air preaching.

Appeals.

Lambeth Ragged Schools.—Funds are greatly needed for the free breakfasts, halfpenny dinners, and other benevolent agencies. Gifts in money and kind will be gladly acknowledged by Mr. E. NICHOLLS, hon. sec., 106, Leathwaite-road, S.W.

Old Hall, Wellington.—The expenses of our Mission in this town are pressing us sorely. Four hundred hands turned out of closed ironworks means great distress among their families, and our various agencies for preaching the Gospel and relieving the poor are in full operation with greatly increased demands. We rejoice with heartfelt praises for the blessing attending the word in our large congregations.—J. EDWARD CRANAGE, The Old Hall, Wellington, Salop.

Hackney-road Mission.—A series of festivals has lately been provided by the Mission's friends. It is with the rougher element of children that special interest is taken for their welfare, and it is intended to develop this part of the Mission's efforts. Aid is needed to supply the needy poor with grants of coal and bread this trying weather. Left-off clothing would be acceptable, to help to clothe these half-clad children.—Hon. sec., CHARLES C. GIRLING, 33, Queen Margaret's-grove, Mildmay-park, N.

Gifts of ladies' left-off garments are very acceptable at any of the Homes for Working Girls:—Victoria House, 135 and 137, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.; Morley House, 14, Fitzroy-street, Fitzroy-square, W.; Gordon House, 8, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W.; Woodford House, 28 and 29, Duncan-terrace, Islington, N.; Garfield House, 361, Brixton-road, S.W.; Norfolk House, 50, Well-street, Hackney, E.; Hyde House, 27, Somerset-street, W.; Lincoln House, 12, York-place, Baker-street, W. Please address to the SUPERINTENDENT at the respective Homes, carriage paid.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

It is stated that the business of Truman, Hanbury & Buxton, the eminent brewers of London and Burton-on-Trent, is to be sold to a limited liability company.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson believes the licensing question, Sunday closing included, will be referred to the County Councils, and that therefore sound temperance members should be secured.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, speaking at Helston, mentioned that in Salford Gaol, out of 744 prisoners 688 had been to Sunday-school, and every one of them ascribed his or her fall to drink.

Dr. Coley, Newcastle, urges as the next most practical step the bringing in of a Bill to enforce earlier closing during the week. He holds that the worst form of drinking is after 9 p.m.

Teetotalers are raising a protest against the danger and inconvenience caused through publicans being allowed to lower barrels into cellars by means of obstructive ropes. Why, they ask, should publicans be permitted to take liberties with the public which would not be tolerated in ordinary tradesmen.

FOREIGN.

Mrs. M. C. Leavitt has organised a Women's Christian Temperance Union in Madagascar.

The next International Temperance Conference is to be held in August next in Christiania, Norway.

Mr. George Kennan, in The Century, says there are thirty rum shops to every school in Western Siberia, and thirty-five rum shops to every school in Eastern Siberia. These drinking establishments bring revenue to the Government, but demoralisation to the peasants. They are mainly responsible for the dirty, slovenly, poverty-stricken appearance of all the villages on the great Siberian road.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.—Between three and four thousand poor children, collected from the most crowded districts of Liverpool, enjoyed a "Robin" feast on the 3rd inst., organised by Mrs. Birt, of the Sheltering Homes. The band of the Myrtle-street Orphanage added much to the pleasure of the proceedings, which passed off in a manner affording delight to all who took part. The edibles were distributed in bags, and many of the little ones took a goodly portion home for mothers and sick sisters and brothers. After the feast, hymns were heartily sung by the "Robins."

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

THE IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, JANUARY 7, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHIAL ASTHMA—ASTHMA and WEAK HEART—SON of a P. M. MINISTER at BRISTOL—and ANOTHER CASE.

This case was brought under my notice several years ago, by the father of the patient, REV. GEO. MORGAN, then of Chippenham, now of Stanley-villa, Eastville, Bristol.

The symptoms were those of Bronchial Asthma, accompanied with night sweats and debility. The patient was eight months, I believe, under my treatment.

Writing me May 14th, 1888, Mr. Morgan says:—"Your medicine having done my son so much good—(in fact he is quite well now)—I have recommended it to others. A member of one of my chapels is suffering from asthma and a weak heart, and I believe it would do him good," &c. Accordingly medicine was sent.

In answer to my inquiries, Mr. Morgan, writing me Nov. 17 last, says:—"I have much pleasure in stating that my son greatly improved under your treatment, likewise the member of my congregation for whom I had medicine from you."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"MESSRS. CAMPBELL & CO.

"GENTLEMEN,—The Cabinet Roller Organ reached me safely on the Saturday that I requested, and I am much obliged to you for your kind attention. I am exceedingly pleased with the instrument. It possesses a rich, mellow, and most charming tone; besides which, externally, it is quite an adornment to any house, and especially it is a most valuable and desirable acquisition for the multitude who are unable to create music for themselves. Again thanking you for your kind attention, I remain, Gentlemen, yours faithfully, FREDERICK HAYNES."

NO KNOWLEDGE OF MUSIC IS REQUIRED.

The Tone is of surprising power, very rich, and blends beautifully with the human voice IN SINGING. At the top of the Instrument is arranged the Swell, by which the most beautiful variations can be given to the music. It plays thousands of tunes, both sacred and secular.

The Cabinet Roller Organ is Selling in Thousands. Price, packed in strong deal box, including Six Rollers of Music, £2 15s. Carriage Paid to any Address in Great Britain or Ireland.

No. 990.] FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1889.

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O. AS A NEWSPAPER.

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.

[ONE PENNY. POST FREE, 1½d.

The undermentioned Books are published by MORGAN & SCOTT.

ABOUT TWO YEARS LATER than the date of his letter [the Epistle to the Romans] Paul visited Rome, as related in the Acts of the Apostles, as a prisoner under course of trial, he having appealed to Nero, the then Roman Emperor. If reference is made to the map of the Mediterranean Sea, the course which the Apostle took in his voyage to Rome, as recorded in the last chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, may be traced; from Melita or Malta, where he suffered shipwreck, to Syracuse on the coast of Sicily, where he tarried three days; thence to Rhegium, the southern point of Italy; thence to Puteoli, and so onwards to Appii Forum, "the market-place of Appius," about fifty-six miles, and to the "Three Taverns" (Tres Tabernæ), about thirty miles from Rome. These two places were situated on the Appian Way, a road leading south from Rome. It will be observed that Christian brethren came to meet him even "as far as Appii Forum," that is, fifty-six miles on the road (Acts xxviii. 15), a circumstance remarkably indicating the affection of these early Christians for the Apostle. Now it was under and along the line of this Appian Way, which Paul traversed in his journey to Rome, that many of the Catacombs—the hiding-places of the early Christians—had been excavated.

I think I may assume that even at that early period the Christians, influenced by a regard for their safety, had commenced taking refuge from popular dislike, Jewish opposition, and the persecution of the Roman Government, in these subterranean fastnesses, which have been found to extend at least fifteen miles from Rome in the direction of the Appian Way. This is, at all events, an interesting speculation, and may account for these poor people being able to meet Paul at so great a distance from Rome."—From "Contents and Teachings of the Catacombs at Rome." By Benjamin Scott, City Chamberlain. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"I AM WITH YOU" (Matt. xxviii. 20).—Two hundred years ago there lived in the Carmelite monastery, in Paris, a simple-minded man who, though a cook by profession, was one of God's rarest jewels. At the age of eighteen, when wandering through a wood in the depth of winter, the thought was suddenly flashed into his mind, that those very trees which stood before him, naked and bare, would ere long be clothed in all the glory of luxuriant leafage, quivering in the summer breeze. In a moment he realized that God must be there, and, if there, also everywhere; and he said to himself, "He is here, close beside me, and He is everywhere, so that I can never again be out of his Holy presence." This sense of the nearness and presence of God became thenceforth one of the formative thoughts of his soul; it never left him for long, and he carefully cultivated it, so that it moulded his whole inner being.

It was a noble thought, and it would be of immense assistance to each reader to acquire an habitual experience of the same kind. But before we can do so, we need a strong foundation on which we can build it up; and surely it would be impossible to find one more suited to our purpose than that contained in those precious words with which our Lord parted from his disciples, "LO, I AM WITH YOU ALL THE DAYS, EVEN UNTO THE CONSUMMATION OF THE AGE."

How full of meaning is that present tense! It is not that He was with us, or will be with us; but that He is with us. We may not always see Him, or realize his presence; we may be blinded by our tears, or dazzled with the false glare of this evil world; we may even, like the Lord Himself, in moments of crushing sorrow, reckon ourselves forsaken, and cry out for fear, like startled babes in the dark, who do not know that their mother is sitting by their side; or, like silly children, we may look for our Friend through a reversed telescope, removing Him to an infinite distance by our way of regarding Him.

But all this will not alter the fact that He is with us, pitying us, yearning over us, and awaiting the moment when, by a gesture—as to the two at Emmaus—or by the tone of his voice—as to Mary, weeping by the empty grave—He may make us start with the glad consciousness that He is near. Happy the soul which has learnt to say by faith, when it cannot say by feeling, "Thou art near, O Lord."—From "The Present Tenses of the Blessed Life." By F. B. Meyer, B.A. Cloth, 1s.

THE ALPHA AND OMEGA of the promises of God is to bring a people nigh unto Himself. The mercy of God reaches us through the promises. Every promise is a mercy; but, once given, it becomes a just and holy thing to fulfil it, therefore "the sure mercies of David" are among "the just things and holy things" of the inheritance of the saints, for "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance."

The mercies of God are secured to us through the Everlasting Covenant by the blood of the Lamb slain; "for all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen, unto the glory of God by us" (2 Cor. i. 20); therefore the death and resurrection of Emmanuel (God manifest in the flesh), the Lord Jesus Christ, is pre-eminently the sure mercy of David (Ps. xvi. 9, 11; Hosea xiii. 14).

* * *

From this springs the forgiveness of sins; from this the gift of everlasting life. "God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 9), because He has fulfilled his promise in giving his beloved Son to take away the sin of the world.—From "The Sure Mercies of David." By Anna Shipton. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Rev. Thos. Truscott, missionary in Sierra Leone of the United Methodist Free Churches.

Can any of our readers oblige us with copies of the following numbers of THE CHRISTIAN for 1887:—February 24, June 17, September 30?

We have been asked to mention that the widow of our late friend and fellow labourer in the Gospel, Mr. George Brealey, of the Blackdown Hills Mission, is now residing at 12, Elstow-terrace, Hatfield-road, Torquay. It may be that some who knew Mr. Brealey, and valued his labours for the Lord, would like to express their sympathy with her.

In The Standard of the 10th instant appeared a letter addressed to Cardinal Manning by Cardinal Lavigerie, in which the latter pleads for "reconciliation and union" with the Protestant Church. But what does such "reconciliation" mean? The foreign Cardinal himself explains:—

Why do we remain separated? Your English Protestants, quite different from the rationalists of other countries, have preserved the faith of their fathers in all the great doctrines of Christianity; they believe in the Holy Trinity, in our Lord's incarnation, in his redemption. They love and respect the law of God. Prejudices alone keep them apart from the ancient Church, which is ever mourning for them, and even opens to them her maternal arms.

It is the old story. We must give up our liberty, and what do we get in return? Nought, but the worthless benediction of a "man of like passions with ourselves." The Pope takes all and gives nothing. Union on such conditions is impossible. We love the people who are enthralled in this evil system, but union with Popery is impossible on any terms.

The expulsion of the C.M.S. missionaries from Uganda, and the massacre of some of the native converts, to which Mr. Eugene Stock referred at one of the City prayer-meetings, is a very sad and sorrowful chapter in the history of Gospel effort on the still Dark Continent. This revolution is clearly the work of the Arabs, who are making a bold stroke for the preservation of their slave-trading immunities. We fear there is too much ground for the current opinion that the warlike operations by Germany and England on the Zanzibar Coast have provoked these unhappy reprisals.

We are glad to know that a telegram was received on Monday from Zanzibar, to the effect that letters from the interior have been received, and that all was well at the London Missionary Society's stations at Urambo and on Lake Tanganyika.

In these days of bloated and crushing armaments, it is refreshing to find that the old Quaker spirit is alive in some parts of the Continent. The following is from the Vienna correspondence of The Times of Tuesday last:—

The Nazarenes, twelve men and seven women, who were arrested several weeks ago for holding unauthorised religious meetings, have been brought before the Court of First Instance, at Belgrade, Servia, and sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying between sixteen and three months. The main count in the indictment charged them with conspiracy to hinder the execution of the law, that is, with inciting people to refuse military service. The prisoners are reported to have behaved with great propriety in the dock. They declared fearlessly, but without arrogance, that their Christian faith forbade them to bear arms. Much sympathy is felt for these poor people, and especially for the women.

It is much to be feared that China is now experiencing a famine more widespread and disastrous than any of those with which it has been afflicted in recent years. In the provinces of Honan, Shantung, and Chihli, large food-producing regions are at present suffering not only from the inundation of the Yellow River last year, but from total loss of crops consequent upon destructive rains. Dr. Nevius, the well-known missionary, has investigated the matter, and he describes the condition of things as sad in the extreme. He visited districts covering an area of about 6,000 square miles, and having a population of 1,500,000, and destitution and beggary made up the entire scene. Happily, there are missionaries on the spot willing, to the best of their ability, to dispense relief to the sorely tried people, and we do not doubt that funds for this purpose will be promptly raised in Great Britain and America.

The room in which the dead woman was lying was so small that one could touch both the walls by stretching out one's arms. The ceiling was very low, and was breaking away, and hanging in wreaths of filthy plaster entwined with cobwebs. There was no ventilation except by the little skylight, which is the only window that the room possesses....A recess about three feet deep investigation showed to be the only sanitary accommodation in the place.

Such is a contemporary's description of the chamber in which, "upon a shutter spread on the top of four herring boxes, and covered with a piece of coarse cloth," the wasted body of a poor old widow, who had died alone in the night, was laid for inquest. She and her husband had lived in the place for twenty-five years, keeping a wretched old furniture shop, of which the apartment in question was the back room, and after the death of her husband the woman had continued to pay five shillings per week for the "accommodation." It is satisfactory to find that she was "aided by a very little parish relief," but it is terrible to reflect that such a lot is that of thousands of the poor in our large centres, while on the other hand, and almost within a stone's throw from so much misery, entertainments are given which are stated to cost thousands of pounds. Surely, the responsibilities of wealth must be immense, and who shall dare to say that if they are ignored there will not one day be a terrible reckoning?

Statistics recently published by The Manchester Guardian show that there are in Manchester no less than 2585 houses licensed for the sale of intoxicating drink, or one to every twenty-five families, and a map which our contemporary has published, showing the number and position of the public-houses, depicts the city as a network of drink-shops. It goes without saying that pauperism in Manchester is excessive, for drink and pauperism are twin sisters, and we are not surprised to find an eminent authority stating, from personal inquiry, that 51·24 of that pauperism is directly attributable to the drink traffic. When shall we have a statesman able to grasp the fact that a revenue derived from drink simply means the expenditure of a larger amount in the repression and punishment of crime, and in the alleviation of pauperism?

There is again, we regret to notice, an increase in pauperism in England and Wales, the number of paupers, according to the latest return of the Local Government Board, being 331,000, there being 260,000 in the workhouses, and 625,000 "outdoor," the proportion to the whole population being one in thirty-four. We have frequently urged that the system of Poor Law Relief is capable of wide improvement, and there is only too good ground for the belief that the millions expended in relief do but result in the punishment of myriads of the really deserving poor, and in the encouragement of the professional vagrant.

The Hospital recently commented upon the establishment in America of an association of invalids, under the name of "The Shut-in Society," with a magazine entitled "The Open Window," and there is much in the work of the society deserving of imitation, the chief objects being—

To relieve the weariness of the sick-room by sending and receiving letters and other tokens of remembrance, to testify of the love and presence of Christ in the hour of suffering and privation, to stimulate faith, hope, patience, and courage in fellow-sufferers by the study and presentation of Bible promises.

As the only qualification for membership is the pathetic one of being a sufferer shut in from the outside world, there being "no fees, and no promises required," there seems no reason why a similar society should not be started in England. A means of intercommunion between invalids could not but be a blessing, and to many it might be the medium of peace and rest in Jesus.

Many feel that there is much in the state of London that calls for prayer and humiliation before God. Lawlessness and godlessness are but too manifest in our midst; excessive luxury and self-indulgence are common, while thousands are going down into drunkards' graves, and multitudes are living in sin and misery, corrupted and corrupting others, streaming into eternity "without hope and without God in the world." With deepest thankfulness we see a great advance in Christian activity. Still there is a loud call for more devotedness of life and unity of action. There will, therefore, be meetings for intercession for London, and prayer for more entire personal consecration of life, at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street (three minutes from Victoria Station), January and February, Tuesdays at 11.30 a.m., Fridays at 3 p.m. All Christians are earnestly invited.

Many of the miserable creatures met with in our streets and highways are, as Mr. Francis Peek has said, "our own manufacture," and their wretched existence is largely due to irresponsible and indiscriminate almsgiving. Yet to escape this Scylla may be only to strike upon the Charybdis of a pure political economy. This danger is pointed out in a thoughtful paper, by Lord Meath, in the current Nineteenth Century, augmented by the fact that every day sees a thousand more mouths to be fed in England. As he says:—

No doubt, indiscriminate almsgiving is hurtful to the State as well as to the individual who receives the dole, but not less dangerous would it be to society if the principles of these stern political economists were to be literally accepted by any large number of the rich, and if charity ceased to be practised in the land. We cannot yet afford to shut ourselves up in the castle of philosophic indifference, regardless of the fate of those who have the misfortune to find themselves outside its walls.

Is it impracticable that the present mendicants and vagrants should be dealt with by the police, and that the supply of recruits to their ranks should be gradually cut off on the one side by a more discriminating administration of the existing Poor Law, and less stringent adherence to cast-iron rules by guardians and similar authorities, and on the other side by a more careful exercise of private charity? But, as Lord Meath indicates, the latter stream must by no means be dammed up, but rather allowed to flow into more useful and practical channels. There will still remain ample scope in numberless directions for the benevolence of individuals. "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good."

The Roman Catholics are pressing Dr. Barnardo hard on every side to cause him to deliver up to them children admitted to the Homes in a destitute condition. A case is now pending, in which a great effort will be made to compel him to deliver up to the custody of worthless people a girl rescued by him from a position of grave danger. He asks the prayerful sympathy of Christian people generally, on his own behalf that he may be strong to do what is right. We understand that the case now going on is a test case, and if the Papists are successful other applications will follow.

The usual practice of the Roman Catholics is to proselytise among the middle and upper classes of Protestants, but largely to exclude the actually destitute poor; yet when a Christian institution opens a door of hope to these children, after they have been a while in the institution then the priests urge their spiritual influence to bear upon any relatives whom the child may possess, and compel them to apply for the removal of the child from the Home. Dr. Barnardo has taken the stand that his institutions are a preparatory medium for children not admitted for religious reasons, but solely because of destitution, hence [illegible] they expend to the profit of ratepayers. He has refused them for these reasons, and always by the wish and consent of their relatives at the time. He now declines to surrender a single child upon religious grounds.

If we are to accept the statements contained in a recent book of travel, entitled "Round New Zealand," by E. W. Payton, the prevalence of hard drinking in that country is a black spot in an otherwise fair picture. The result is that, although the population is only a little more than half a million, this colony has recently been obliged to enlarge an already immense lunatic asylum, built at a cost of several hundred thousand pounds. Describing how [illegible] he says:—

From personal observation I am inclined to think it is the universal and extensive use of [illegible] which accounts for the enlargement of that establishment on the one hand. We are accustomed to hear drunkards at home are decidedly addicted to their destructive habits. Many men who can earn £5 per week and keep themselves in all, will drink the remainder of [illegible], and run into debt.

Thus it is that the scourge of alcoholism throws out its deadly tentacles in all directions. Drunk is made of nineteenth century enlightenment and civilisation; but as Africa can bear witness, these drinking habits dog the steps of the explorer and the colonist with a fatal pertinacity.

We have frequently commented upon the painful fact that one of the greatest stumbling-blocks in the way of the Gospel in India is the inconsistent and practically Godless lives led by so many of the European laity. A letter confirming and illustrating this, from the pen of a native, recently appeared in The Statesman, a Calcutta daily paper; the following is an extract:—

We in this country are apt to think that [illegible] alone are Christians, and that [illegible] Europeans as a rule have no religion at all. It is a common belief among those of us who have never been to Europe that Christianity is professed by a small minority in civilised countries, that it is an old, defunct creed, and that whatever appearance it has of the prevailing creed of the West. We draw our inference from the behaviour of the clergy, and it is they more than the clergy who are responsible for the prevalence as well as [illegible] that results in the spread of Christianity in this country.

The Hindu or Mohammedan judges by what he sees: it is small wonder, then, if he is puzzled to reconcile Christianity with the lax morality of its professors.

The two columns in The Daily Telegraph of the 5th instant, from its St. Petersburg correspondent, present a picture of Jewish sufferings in Russia which is unutterably distressing. Millions of them, we are told, are condemned to remain in one circumscribed district, and never obtain a glimpse of the world beyond. They are naturally treated by Government officials with curses and oaths, and are insulted and assaulted by other Russians. Almost every right is denied them, and the most oppressive disabilities are heaped upon them. Their poverty beggars description, and, forbidden to venture outside the land pale, hardly any means are left to them to eke out the barest livelihood. Even the Czar is their enemy. Is this history repeating itself, and Israel in Russia, in another true sense of bondage? The correspondent who made the accurate remarks on their mutual love; is not this a welding of them together, as of old in Egypt?

Surely these Jewish persecutions are on the eve, not a preparation for what is to come. Through the repentance of modern Jews may come through a trial of fire, they will yet turn unto their God with weeping and supplication, and in truth are beginning to do so. While evil powers seek to embitter or to crush them, the battle culminates and ripens into a day of deliverance, and soon shall see how truly the Lord has been answering prayer and working on their behalf. The consummation of the ages hastens, and the time when in their gathering together Israel shall sing the song of Moses and of the Lamb.

The [illegible] of Wolverhampton, while granting [illegible] a theatrical application, expressed a very strong opinion on the practice of placarding walls with highly-coloured and scenes against morals. It is so far gratifying that in one important town a magisterial condemnation has been heard. Surely it might be made a condition of granting a theatrical licence that there should be no such demoralising advertisements to attract and corrupt the young in the streets.

The printing of the revised version of the Mahratta Bible has been completed. The British Committee, presided over by Rev. W. H. Crosse, of the London Missionary Society, commenced their work in December, 1857. It has thus taken fifteen years to accomplish the great work which has now been happily brought to a successful conclusion by the printers, Messrs. Richard Clay & Sons.

Agnostics, Freethinkers, and Buddhists are just now much disquieted among themselves. Mr. Harrison is severe upon Mr. Horton Spencer, and Mr. Laing is equally so on Mr. Harrison. Meanwhile the latter has replied to the current Fortnightly Review, maintaining that the most pressing problem before Christianity is to overcome Agnosticism. We have no such idea. Christianity has always had to overcome the ignorance which is culture, and the task is scarcely more difficult to overcome the ignorance which is avowed. Man's intellect will not be content with ignorance when the means of knowledge are at hand. The avowed ignorance of Agnosticism makes all life an enigma of loss and darkness, and clothes the future with an Egyptian darkness. The term "Agnosticism" is not twenty years old, and an escape from Atheism can not be many years longer. If Christianity, which brings "the light of life" to men, were studied and preached as it ought to be, it would be more far from finding it difficult to overcome Agnosticism.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For [illegible] a month's special evangelistic services at St. Jude's Christian Mission Church, Lisle Street, Leicester Square, W.C., being conducted by Mr. C. Hallard of the Haymarket Theatre.—For blessing on special services by Rev. H. Bulgarin, at Zion Chapel, Bethnal Green, E.; at Union Road, Jan. 21 to 27; and at Coventry, Jan. 28 to Feb. 3.—For blessing on evangelistic services conducted by Mr. J. M. [illegible], in Queen-street Free Church, Glasgow, from Jan. 24 to 31.—For a special outpouring of the Holy Spirit from 6 to 7 p.m. on Sunday next, January 17, at Mr. W. Brown's, of Elm Terrace, Hull.—For a blessing on a series of Gospel meetings at Bolton Woodhouse, near Leeds, on Thursday.—For [illegible] on a tour in Ireland, commencing on Wednesday next, Jan. 27, at Dublin.

Letters to the Editor.

"TERRIBLE CRIME IN INDIA."

DEAR SIR,—I have just read, with my spirit burning within me, the case of the poor Indian girl in your first issue of THE CHRISTIAN this year. God bless you for lifting up your voice against such monstrous iniquity, and God bless Mr. Dyer and all the noble men and women who stand up in behalf of the young, the weak, and defenceless, to deliver them from ruin.

You may be sure their Maker and Redeemer is not unmindful of your efforts, and you have with you the sympathies of many who have the bowels of Jesus Christ.

Go forward until the Church of God awake, and in her heaven-born beauty of tenderness and holiness be the light of the world, the salt of the earth.

"THE UNIVERSAL REVIEW" AND THE PAPACY.

SIR,—I have not yet seen it noted anywhere that Mr. Harry Quilter's gorgeous new magazine, The Universal Review, is, last month, peculiarly in harmony with its symbolical red cover. Or, to speak seriously, is it not rather curious to find, in a single issue of a general magazine, published in Protestant England, no less than three long articles, written by Romanists, or in the interests of Romanism? One is by the well-known and keenly sectarian Roman Catholic who edits Punch, Mr. F. C. Burnand; a second is by a priest in a Romish seminary, whilst a third is anonymous.

This last receives the place of honour. It is of enormous length, attempting to review everything in heaven and earth for the last half-century. But its most striking passage is the one in which the writer bursts forth into a long and impassioned eulogium, couched in terms of the most extravagant and cringing flattery, upon modern Popery, and its glorious prospects, and its magnificent leader, Leo XIII.

What are we to make of such strange literary phenomena? It seems as if the secret union between Romanism and infidelity were about to assume an overt and explicit form.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AND THE BIBLE.

SIR,—The letter of "Ex-Romanist," in your columns of the 11th inst., opens out a subject teeming with interest at the present moment [illegible] to discern the signs of the times. An [illegible] phenomenon in the history of the Roman Catholic Church has occurred. A Roman Catholic insists on his right to read the Bible, and yet to remain a Roman Catholic. He moreover asserts, with an audacity which must have shaken the nerves of the Vatican itself, that this privilege and right of reading the Bible is of ancient date, and was only removed at the Reformation because of the free handling of Scripture by Protestants, and the consequent error of individual interpretation.

Such is the gist of M. Lasserre's special pleading for the restoration of the right, granted as we know, by the Pope on Dec. 3, 1881, withdrawn a year later. Meanwhile, twenty-five editions of his Gospels have been circulated, and are doing their work somewhere. Even the power behind the Pope cannot prevent that, and surely we ought to pray earnestly that the outcome of this may be an immense impetus to the study of God's Word on the Continent. Would, indeed, that evangelical Roman Catholics, like Henri Lasserre, could see their way to come boldly out from the Roman system, where Jesus could teach them! Meanwhile, we can but marvel how persons of devout minds can read the Scriptures, and yet remain linked with Rome.

May I add, that the freshness and fragrance of Lasserre's translation must make it a study to all Bible students. It is interesting to compare it with other French translations, and with our Revised Version.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

The [illegible] annual report of the executive committee, read at the meeting recently held, has been published in pamphlet form. It contains a large amount of information, and by a perusal of its pages friends will be able easily to acquaint themselves with the important work of the Society. The offices are 327, Strand, London, W.C.

Personalia.

Princess Eugene of Sweden is said to have parted with her family jewels that she might build a hospital for cripples.

Mrs. G. S. Reaney has opened a new convalescent and holiday Home at Blackpool. She is writing a new serial, to be called "For Richer for Poorer."

Mrs. Robertson, hon. secretary of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, has changed her address from 1, Oakhill-park, to Chesils, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W.

Rev. James Smith, of Simla, has had an accident, which might have proved very serious. A somewhat fractious horse rolled over Mr. Smith, but the venerable gentleman was not hurt very severely.

The Czar of Russia has devoted a million roubles, and an estate worth 300,000 roubles a year, to the foundation and maintenance of a blind asylum in St. Petersburg in honour of his parents, to be called the Alexander-Marian Institute.

Mrs. Leavitt gave a lecture at Faravohitra, Madagascar, at which 1200 natives were present. Malagasy is the twenty-seventh language in which she has spoken through an interpreter since leaving America, besides the innumerable lectures she has given in English.

Mrs. Anna Shipton is, we regret to say, very ill, having been for the last three weeks in a very critical state. Many of our readers who have derived benefit from her books will, we are sure, unite in earnest prayer for her recovery. A telegram just received says, "Better, but very weak."

Rev. James Mountain has received and accepted a perfectly unanimous invitation to succeed Rev. George Jones, as minister of the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, Mount Ephraim, Tunbridge Wells. The settlement is regarded as very hopeful, and likely to continue the evangelical teaching and liberal spirit of Christian unity for which the Church has been distinguished.

The Countess of Aberdeen, writing to The Queen on the election of the County Councils, says that women ratepayers have a special responsibility as to many social questions, such as the housing of the poor, industrial schools, reformatories, the Infant Protection Act, &c. They should, therefore, strain every nerve to secure the return of those who will study the truest progress and welfare of the people.

The late Duchess of Sutherland (says a writer in The Queen) was intensely religious in character; while at an earlier period of her life she was an ardent Presbyterian, she latterly took a strong leaning to the High Church. Any cause she thought it right to adopt found in her a devoted and generous supporter. She was an ardent promoter of temperance, and wore the blue ribbon as an example and encouragement to the numerous servants in the large establishments of her husband.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.—At the Metropolitan Tabernacle, on Sunday morning, it was announced that the latest accounts from Mr. Spurgeon were not encouraging or cheering. He was still confined to his room, very weak, and unable to write. He had, however, sent the following telegram to be read to his congregation:—"Most generous friends,—Thanks for your precious words and deeds. I am worse than my fall led me to think. It has caused a sort of total injury. It will take time, but I shall yet walk, speak, and be glad. Over your prayers I exceedingly joy. I would gladly suffer such another smash to win a prayerless sinner."

Dr. Alex. Maclaren, of Manchester, has been enjoying his visit to Australia immensely. He has been doing much varied work, including preaching to crowded churches, in one case hundreds having to leave, not being able to get even standing room. It was expected that Dr. Maclaren would visit India. There has been a careful consultation with friends, which it is thought will result in a decision not to allow the Doctor to run the risk of the stress and strain and exhaustion which would almost certainly be the effect of a visit to India. When last heard from, Dr. Maclaren had sailed for New Zealand, where he was to have taken a rest before returning to Australia, thence to England; he is expected to reach home about the end of March.

Mr. Henry Thorne, who has laboured for several years under the auspices of the English National Council of the Y.M.C.A., lately resigned his office, and purposes devoting himself entirely to general evangelistic work. The National Council, at a recent meeting held at Exeter Hall, adopted the following resolution:—

That in adopting the report of the Executive, one of the recommendations of which involves the acceptance of Mr. Thorne's resignation of his position as travelling secretary, which was rendered to the Executive in October last, the Council desires to place on record (a) the expression of its sense of the invaluable services rendered by Mr. Thorne to the cause of Y.M.C.A.'s during the many years he has been occupied in their work: (b) its satisfaction on being so completely in accord with Mr. Thorne's view of the circumstances rendering necessary his resignation, that he might henceforth devote himself entirely to the work of an evangelist, to which God is so manifestly calling him; (c) the special pleasure it affords the Council to be able to co-operate with Mr. Thorne in endeavouring to further the arrangements for his future work, under the direction of an independent committee, which it is hoped will receive the support of friends of Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. alike, and of others who are specially interested in work of a general evangelistic character; and also (d) its earnest hope that the warm sympathy that will continue to be felt with Mr. Thorne's labours by Association workers throughout the country will often find expression in reciprocal help being given that will be for the mutual advantage of Mr. Thorne's missions and of the Associations, and bear fruit for the Lord's own glory in the gathering in of very many precious souls to his kingdom.

At a meeting held at Exeter Hall, on the 7th inst., a Council of Reference consisting of a large number of representation Christian men residing in London and several provincial towns, and an Executive Committee, were elected to make arrangements for Mr. Thorne's future work. As Mr. Thorne will be left free to make his own engagements, applications for his services should be sent direct to his address, 8, Mill Hill-road, Derby. He hopes to begin work on the new lines on April 1. Friends wishing to render financial help may communicate with Mr. Thorne, or with Mr. W. H. Mills, Hon. Sec., Stafford Rooms, Tichborne-street, London, N.W.

UNION IN WORK.—In a recent address in New York, Dr. Josiah Strong said: "What the Church needed was not to be a great Christian mob, but a mighty Christian army. Snowflakes were harmless and insignificant things, but acting in concert they could sweep away villages in their destroying flight down the mountain side. The external pressure must make the Church close up its ranks. This would be a good thing in more ways than one. Nor only would it produce greater power, but it would bring about a deeper Christian love for each other. If Christian unity was ever realised on earth it would not be through discussion, but by being drawn nearer together by a common work for a common Master."

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—An excellent article on this Mission in the current Gentleman's Magazine says the work which has been performed at the instance of the Mission, and through the means which have been so readily contributed by the generous British public, has been in the truest sense a service to humanity. As it was said of the Emperor Augustus that he found Rome brick and left it marble; so may it be said of this Mission that it found a large and important body of Englishmen dead to their highest interests, sunk in deplorable ignorance and almost savage barbarity, and in seven brief years so succeeded in raising them in the scale of moral and intellectual being as to make it possible for the cynical man of the world to forget his cynicism and describe the movement as "a very beautiful and wonderful social phenomenon."

THE COTTAGE HOME FOR LITTLE CHILDREN, Tivoli-road, Kingstown, continues to engage the sympathies of many friends of work among the helpless and needy. The object of the institution is to provide a safe and happy shelter for very young children of the industrious Protestant poor, who from various causes are left without a home. There are Homes in Ireland for older children, but were the "Cottage" to close its doors, the little ones would have no other shelter but the workhouse. When the ninth annual report, recently published, was drawn up, there were forty inmates, varying in age from eleven months to six years. To maintain the institution in efficiency the assistance of the Christian public is solicited, as the cost of management is considerably in excess of the income in the shape of fees charged in respect of inmates. The hon. secretary is Miss R. M. Barrett, 6, De Vesci-terrace, Kingstown, co. Dublin.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

VIII.—Did Christ leave Instructions for his Servants?

WE now approach the heart of the subject of missionary methods. Before proceeding, it may be well, from the attitude we have now attained, to GLANCE BACKWARD OVER THE GROUND WE HAVE TRAVERSED. We have looked on the field that we might know our position. We have reviewed our forces that we might know our strength, and weakness as well. We have sought to dispel the glamour with which popular address and appeal have encircled certain highly estimated points of advantage, and found them fictitious, not real. We have scrutinised the spiritual condition of the Church, and perceived how defective is the consecration of the most advanced, and in what that defect consists. We have examined the relation of money to the work, and have seen the hurtful effect of putting it in the lordly place it holds to-day, and contrasted it with its true position in Apostolic times. We have perceived also why the Church permits foreign mission operations to languish for lack of funds, and have spoken of her sin in accumulating riches, and have sought to put Giving in its true spiritual light.

THE BEARING OF ALL THIS UPON DIRECT FOREIGN EFFORT IS OF VAST MOMENT. For it is evident that until the work in hand is clearly understood, and all spurious advantages rightly estimated; till the normal state of consecration is attained in the home churches, if not by all at least by those who thirst to do God's will; and until money is relegated to its place in the shade, mission work cannot largely prosper. We must gather out the stones that "the Lord the Spirit" may come along his appointed pathway to do the blessed work He longs to accomplish among the nations. These things must be corrected at home; for there the future missionary is trained, and there he takes his conception of Christian life, and breathes in the spirit, which afterwards he carries with him abroad to his own hurt, and to the lasting injury of those to whom he is sent, who in him see the only living exponent and example of Christianity they know. Without a far more rugged home training in Christ's first principles of renunciation, simplicity, and faith, how can the intending missionary enter upon the thorny path to which the words of Christ are about to point him? How unreasonable also to expect those who go forth to endure great hardness, while those at home have every outward comfort! Hence the responsibility of every believer.

As we enter this theme of missionary methods, we find ourselves at the focus-point of all the light we have hitherto sought to throw on the subjects leading up to this prime one. Many may be disposed to justify worldly conformity in the rank and file of believers, and to evade the force of those commands of Christ intended to free his people from world-choking cares, and perpetuate the primitive simplicity of Christianity. But let it be known to them that they do it at their peril. However this may be, we are now about to see that THE PRINCIPLES WHICH UNDERLIE THOSE LONG-FORGOTTEN COMMANDS OF CHRIST ARE UNMISTAKABLY APPLIED BY HIM, AND WITH TREMENDOUS EMPHASIS, TO THE PATHWAY OF THE HERALDS OF HIS KINGDOM. Hence, O beloved messengers of Christ, it is for us, uninfluenced by the pernicious example of others, to "do whatever He saith unto us;" to come under the conditions appointed by Him for all his disciples, and to obey and embody those special precepts we shall find He lays on all who covet the high honour of laying the foundations of his empire among the unreached nations.

As in Apostolic times, so now, THE RESISTLESS POWER OF THE HOLY GHOST AWAITS OBEDIENCE, NOT PARTIAL, BUT PERFECT. The Church now awake to her real calling, with aroused interest would afresh press out among the nations. But past failure causes her to pause questioningly. A consciousness of defect somewhere—she scarcely can discover where—weighs down her willing footsteps. The gold without which she cannot go forward is not in her treasuries, for her present tactics, like modern carnal warfare, are costly. How shall she gain the victory? How become newly anointed? Only by doing as the early disciples did when waiting for the promise of the Spirit: to wit, by ceasing from her own self-prompted efforts; by laying aside all carnal reasoning and maxims borrowed from the world; by parting company with that inordinate and restless activity that ever mars God's work; by cleansing from her vision the film of human tradition, that her eye may be single to perceive her Lord's will; and then by quietly waiting, in the spirit of receptiveness and obedience, to discover how far she has diverged from his way of work, and to discern the true and appointed methods. Then, if repentance and ready obedience follow, she shall again "look forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

Our question is now, DID CHRIST LEAVE INSTRUCTIONS TO GUIDE HIS MISSIONARIES IN THEIR WORK? If, for an answer, we consult the present practices of those in the field, it must be: No, there are no certain lines of action laid down. We behold everything modelled on the principles of prudential foresight and human expediency, and administered as statesmen might conduct the affairs of a colony, where the reference is not to those sublime, and eternal, and heavenly principles which are designed ever to obtain in the spiritual realm, but where worldly wisdom draws its springs of action from the seen and temporal, and takes not a step that may not be justified by sight. We see also a great variety of plans of action not agreeing with each other, nor with anything we know of in the Word of God. It is evident that it is assumed by the leading spirits of missionary enterprise that there are no explicit directions left by Christ as to the details to be followed in spreading his kingdom.

But must we take this negative reply as final? Let us stand in thought with the eleven on Mount Olivet. Their beloved Lord had just been hidden from view by the cloud. His last words were resounding still in their ears—his royal commission, "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." How they would ponder it in the stillness of the night that followed! How they would con it over with each other during the ten waiting days! I imagine Peter saying, "The Lord gave us our errand to the world. We are to go everywhere with the glad tidings, after the promise of the Father shall come upon us. We are to begin at Jerusalem. We are to baptize those that believe. But how are we to go? What about our temporal supplies? How are we to regulate our conduct in all the details of our life and service?" James might have replied, "He said to us just before He died, 'As the Father hath sent me so send I you.' We are to be outwardly circumstanced just as our Lord was." Then John might have truly added, "Has not the Lord been training us for this work for three years and a half? When He called us, He said He would make us fishers of men. We followed Him for that purpose. After a time He gave us power (some such power as we are waiting for now), and sent us forth to preach and to heal, as He afterwards did the seventy who are here with us. He told us then just how we were to go, and gave us detailed instructions. It was part of our training for our future work. Of course there is no other way but for us to go forth on the same lines the Lord has schooled us in." Then, as they went on conversing upon the precious words of Jesus, they would recall how, in those instructions for their missionary journeys, there were clauses they understood not—far-reaching precepts which dimly outlined something not then revealed to them. "He spoke to us," they would say, "of raising the dead. But we have not yet fulfilled that word. He spoke of our being delivered up to councils and scourged in synagogues, and brought before governors and kings for a testimony against them and the Gentiles. But these things did not happen to us, for on that first journey the Lord told us not to go into the way of the Gentiles. He must have spoken of our future work also in those instructions."

But, however it may have been as to their thoughts and conversations, it is true that when the Holy Ghost had come upon them and they went forth, it was on just the lines laid down by our Lord to the twelve and the seventy, of which the record is in Matt. x., Mark vi., and Luke ix. x. Therefore our reply to the question that heads this article is, Yes, CHRIST VERILY LAID DOWN IN THESE SCRIPTURES THE MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION FOR ALL TIME, the methods upon which the enlarging frontiers of his kingdom were ever to be extended. We are sure that, to the single eye, whatever doubts or difficulties may seem in the way, all will become clear as the mid-day sun in a cloudless sky, as we go on to examine these precious words and note their blessed meaning—the Divine philosophy that underlies them and their perpetual obligation.

As to pastors and deacons, it is admitted that there are explicit directions for their selection and duties. The manner in which the former are to be supported is laid down. Is it then credible that the Lord Jesus has left those whose task is the most important, as well as the most perilous and difficult of all, to act in the light of their own judgment, or according to the prevalent ideas of the times in which they live? What envoy of any earthly state would be so circumstanced? These are the ambassadors of the High Court of Heaven to the rebellious provinces of earth. They are commissioned with a message which makes them the targets of men's hate and contempt. They must hazard their lives for his name's sake. Is it possible that He gives them no exact command as to how to deport themselves? What about their temporal supplies? Shall they lade themselves with burdensome outfits, and establish their base of supplies, and keep open their line of communications, like an army in a hostile country? Shall they stock themselves like a trader, with goods and trinkets, to tickle the fancy of the savage tribes to which they go, and secure the necessities of life from them? Shall they go empty or full? armed or defenceless? clad so as to command outward respect, or in mean attire? Shall they invoke the aid and protection of the strong arm of power? Shall they locate or itinerate? What shall be their resource when persecuted? What is required of them when their message is rejected? What their course when brought before rulers? How impossible that all these should have been left to the misleading rulings of worldly wisdom, or even to the uncertain application of general principles!

Each one of the many and divers forms of Church government in these times claims to find its original upon the page of the New Testament. Much more shall not we find the Divine model of the Gospel herald?

We are now prepared to consider these missionary instructions.

A MISSIONARY.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.]

Now that foreign missions are in the crucible, and ancient and modern methods are exposed to unsparing criticism from foes and friends, we could not but give publicity to this series of papers from one who is himself a missionary—and not only a missionary, but working on the lines which he believes are scriptural, and which he lays down for others; and with signs following. It was not to be expected that these views, leading to a revolution in missionary management, would pass unquestioned. We have received communications in reply; but it will be more convenient that the Missionary should first complete his articles (which extend to No. XX.); then we shall be prepared to receive replies, provided that they deal with the important principles which have been contended for, rather than with secondary or side issues.

"WAS IT NOT WONDERFUL?"

A TRUE INCIDENT.

WE have received from Mr. George Lawrence the following remarkable incident, related in a recent letter to him by his daughter, who resides in Cardiff. Miss Lawrence writes:—

As I am talking about gifts, I may as well tell you about one of those Christmas presents we saw distributed on Boxing night at the Festival. A Norwegian "wandering boy" had left his home and mother twenty-one years ago, and had not written to the latter for sixteen years. He was wandering about on Christmas morning in an unhappy frame of mind, when he heard the singing, and went into the N—— church. Mr. H—— invited all present to the Festival to be held next day. At the time named the "wandering boy" turned up. The number of his ticket was four hundred and something, and I think the corresponding present was a muffler.

He did not trouble much about it; but, before "turning in" that night, he thought he would inspect it. Fastened to it was a letter addressed to whatever sailor should receive the gift. He opened it, and read the kind message from the maker and sender, who said she was over seventy years old; she had three sons who had gone to sea; the youngest of them had not written to her for sixteen years, and she knew nothing of him. Her signature was at the bottom. When he read it, imagine his feelings; it was his mother's!

He had £27 coming to him as wages. He received it, "rigged himself out," and took the first steamer home to gladden her heart and give her a "Happy New Year." Was it not wonderful?—nearly 1000 presents sent, and the right one to go to the right man. I am sure that she is a praying mother!

CHESTERFIELD LODGING-HOUSE MISSION.—At the quarterly meeting of workers a few days ago, it was reported that eight houses had been visited every Sunday evening. The inmates received the workers with pleasures, and listened with attention to the Gospel message.

KOLAR.—Parties of natives passing through Kolar are still frequent visitors at the orphanage. On such occasions Miss Anstey feels it a great privilege as well as a duty temporarily to lay aside other work, in order to tell the story of salvation. Sometimes, on market days, from twenty to thirty persons will follow each other in, and many seem much impressed with what they hear. Miss Anstey writes, December 8:—"The granaries have been empty a long time, and there have been heavy expenses. We have a daily prayer meeting, at 6 a.m., when we bring the many needs of the Mission before the Lord. He has indeed blessed us with spiritual blessings, and having given the greater, will He withhold the lesser blessing? He will help us right through, though the funds have been strikingly less this year."

XIII.—OUR GETHSEMANES.

HEBREWS v. 7, &c.

EIGHT old olive trees mark the site of Gethsemane. It is thought that they may have been witnesses of that memorable and mysterious scene, where Christ's obedience, as man, to his Father's will, was tested to the uttermost. What a scene was that! It had stood unparalleled in history, had it not been followed by fifteen hours of greater wonders.

Some of the strongest words in the Greek language are used to describe his bitter anguish. He began to be sorrowful, as if, in spite of all his past experiences, He had never really tasted sorrow till then. Sore amazed, as if his mind were dazed, and reason were shaken on her throne. Very heavy, so that his spirit stooped beneath the weight of sorrow, as afterward his body under the burden of the cross; or the word may mean that He was so distracted with sorrow, as to be almost beside Himself. Nor could our Lord have used a much stronger expression than when He said, my soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death. The Evangelist Luke also adds a touch to the scene, which more than all beside proves the extremity of his anguish. It must have been a cold night, but He was covered with sweat, as He lay prostrate on the frosty ground; and his sweat was blood, and He was in an agony as He prayed. And here, one further addition is made, borrowed, perhaps, from oral tradition, that He offered up his prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears. Those groans, and sighs, and prayers were borne afar on the evening air; and his tears plentifully besprinkled thy bosom, O mother-earth, who surely might have found for Him a softer, warmer resting-place.

Understand that, as man, He submitted in perfect simplicity to every movement of his Father's will. He was the Father's Fellow, co-equal in his Divine nature; but for the purposes of redeeming man, and becoming the second Adam, it was needful that He should temporarily lay aside the attributes of his Deity, and live a truly human life. As man, He carefully marked each symptom of his Father's will, from the day when it bade Him stay behind the good Joseph and Mary in the Temple, and instantly, at whatever cost, did its behests. "I came down from heaven," He said, "not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." This was the yoke He carried, and in this He found rest for his soul. Whatever was the danger and difficulty into which obedience might carry Him, He ever followed the beacon-cloud of the Divine will, sure that the manna of daily strength would fall, and that the sweet, deep waters of rest would follow where it led the way. But during the last few months that pathway had been getting ever more and more difficult. And now, when the will of God seemed about to demand that He should tread a path which would bring Him under the burden of a world's sin, it seemed as if He could not bear it, and in the darkness of the mystery his soul cried out, "Is there no other way than this? To think of going thus is anguish so bitter that it crushes my life down to the dust. Spare Me if Thou canst."

But there was no other way. On the one hand there were the awful things to suffer, on the other hand there was the demand of obedience. And when He knew that the choice lay between these two, He did not hesitate for a moment; the will and command of God were dearer to Him than all beside, and He determined to obey to the last jot, to drink the cup to the last dreg. But in this determination He learnt and taught what obedience meant. In the furnace of that trial, which so tested his obedience, it shone out in unequalled majesty, beauty, and tenacity, and there was given to men and angels the example of an obedience which is unparalleled in the annals of the universe. As man, Jesus never knew how much obedience meant till then. "He learned obedience by the things that He suffered," and through his obedience was perfected. And He now asks that we should obey Him as He obeyed God. "He learned obedience." "Unto them that obey Him."

I. THE DEMAND FOR OBEDIENCE.—As Jesus, our Lord, obeyed his Father, He expects us to obey Him. Here is one of those assumptions of authority which would be utterly inconsistent with the meekness and humility of his character, and would be rank blasphemy if He were not Son as well as Servant. He is no longer the meekest and holiest of men, if He arrogates to Himself an authority over his fellows which belongs to God alone, unless He have such a right to do so as naturally springs from that oneness with the Almighty on which no mortal can presume. But this is his one majestic demand: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them"; "That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father."

It is of little use to call Him "Lord, Lord." We must do the things that He says. We must follow Him, as He followed the Father. We must obey Him, as He obeyed the Father. We must do his will, as He fulfilled the will of the Father. The one searching question of each disciple is: Do you obey Him? Are you eager to know, quick to discern, prompt to obey? Can you say, as the Apostle did, "Whom I serve." Not with any thought of merit, but because you must since his love has mastered you?

II. OBEDIENCE TO CHRIST OFTEN LEADS TO A GETHSEMANE.—At first the path of obedience is made easy to our unaccustomed feet; but the path climbs upward, and the gradient is constantly steeper; the shadows grow denser; and the lissom climber of the morning creeps slowly forward on hands and knees. The day is never greater than the strength; but, as the strength grows by use, the demands are greater, the hours longer. And when the will has acquired the habit of submission, and the lesson of obedience seems almost learnt, then there often comes one solemn, searching, final test. It is the hour of Gethsemane.

On the one hand, there is the will of God, clearly defined and evident; but it lies through suffering, from which the weak flesh and the soul shrink with unutterable dismay. A cup is presented to the lips, brimming with a draught so bitter that the entire nature seems on the point of revolt. We have exceedingly feared and quaked as we have entered the brooding cloud, or climbed the smoking mount. To part from some dear circle, to risk the loss of name and fame, to relinquish the cherished ambition of a life, to incur obloquy, persecution, and loss. Ah! then, when God has made such demands on us, and our flesh has quivered and drawn back, torn between obedience and alarm, unable to realise that such a path can lead out into the light, we have kept the midnight vigil of the garden of Gethsemane.

III. IN OUR GETHSEMANES, OUR BEST RESORT IS PRAYER.—Our Lord betook Himself to prayer; and if He needed its relief, much more shall we. Heaven and God are best discerned through tears, and are hardly discerned without them. Trouble will sometimes show a man's unreality by staying his prayers; but it often has the effect of driving us to our knees. Some aromatic shrubs only exhale their sweetest odours when pounded and beaten.

At first, we may ask with Him that our cup may be removed. "Take away this cup from me." "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not my will, but Thine be done." There was no real reluctance in the Saviour's heart to redeem men; He only wished the coming woes to be averted, if it were possible, consistently with the will of God and the salvation of men, that the same ends should be realised in some other way. And it is quite natural, as we realise the nearness of some terrible sorrow, which we are soon to encounter, to ask whether it may not be averted, and some other path chosen, without thwarting the Divine purpose or losing any fragment of blessing.

Do not mind to say, the same words again and again. It will soothe you. Your pitiful Father does not forget that you are dust. Pour out all your heart before Him. And as you do so you will get calmer and quieter; you will come probably to feel that the path must be trodden, the cup drained, and a change will pass over the spirit of your prayer; you will no longer ask importunately that the cup may be taken away, but, realising that it is God's will for it to remain, you will murmur, as a child sobs itself to rest on its mother's bosom, "O my Father, if this cup may not pass from me, except I drink it, thy will be done." If you do not like God's will, go on willing it, and you will come to choose it.

IV. SUCH PRAYERS, OFFERED IN GODLY FEAR, ARE SURE TO BE HEARD.—"He was heard for his godly fear." His holy reverence and devotion to the will of God made it impossible that his prayers should be unanswered, though the answer assumed another guise than at first He asked. But it came. It came in the mission of the angel that stood beside Him, and strengthened Him. It came in the calm serenity with which He met the brutal crowd, saying to Peter, "Sheathe thy sword, the cup which my Father hath given Me to drink, shall I not drink it?" It came in his deliverance from the power of death and the grave. It came in his being able to be a faithful and sympathising High Priest, and in being constituted the Author of eternal salvation to all who obey Him.

Prayers prompted by love and in harmony with godly fear are never lost. We may ask for things which it would be unwise and unkind of God to grant. But in that case his goodness shows itself rather in the refusal than the assent. And yet the prayer is heard and answered. Strength is instilled into fainting hearts. The faithful and merciful High Priest does for us what the angel tried to do for Him, but how much better can He do it since He learnt so much of the art of comfort in the school of suffering. And out of it we emerge to the resurrection morning, the ascension mount, the right hand of the throne, with power to comfort and help those who shall be called to pass through the same dark glades.

Let no one therefore flinch from the inevitable Gethsemanes of life. The Captain of Salvation has been there Himself. They are the schools of manhood. They are threaded by the King's highway, which passes directly through them towards the New Jerusalem.

THE FIGHT IN EAST LONDON.

UNDER this appropriate title, Rev. W. E. Hurndall, of Harley-street Chapel, Bow, has issued a report of the past year's work in connection with his congregation. We make a few brief extracts :—

"Our staff is just as it was a year ago, eight missionaries of our own, and one city missionary. The missionary staff is the very key and centre of our position in this daily fight. I have a splendid staff of voluntary visitors, who do another kind of work excellently; but they are busy folk, and it is utterly impossible for them to spare either the time, energy, or concentration of mind needful. Our staff should be augmented. I am very much astonished that rich people do not charter missionaries. If I were wealthy and living in a good neighbourhood, I think I should have no rest until I had set a missionary to work for me in some squalid streets. An annual subscription of £70 would secure the unceasing work of a missionary amongst the East-end poor. Our Crèche could not be started for lack of funds. The battle sorely needed this weapon, but friends seemed to forget all about it.

"It has been, I think, the best year since the special work amongst the poor was commenced. The missionaries have laboured with much diligence and enthusiasm. It is impossible to tabulate their labours. Their visits to the poor have reached the large total of almost 40,000. Of these over 21,000 were "conversational visits," many of considerable length. Conversions of a remarkable character have taken place. A week of special services has revealed what a beneficent influence the missionaries exercise over the people, and what true seed-sowing has been going on.

"Our Relief work is thoroughly separated from our Mission work. I have no faith whatever in paying people, either directly or indirectly, to attend services or make a profession of religion. We relieve solely on the ground of deserving poverty, and care not who the people are—Turks, Jews, Christians, Infidels. The people thoroughly appreciate this mode of dealing with them, and we are freed from the presence of canting hypocrites. During the year we have helped folks to help themselves, by placing in their hands sewing machines, giving them small sums for stock-in-trade, providing them with clothing in which to go to work, and so on. Our dinners for hungry children have been greatly appreciated by the half-famished bairns. Saving homes from brokers, taking tools out of pawn, giving meat, bread, groceries, &c., to the half-starving, and small sums of money in urgent cases, have been the means employed to benefit our poor clients. We have helped a number to emigrate to Canada and other parts, spending £190 for this object. The results have been very satisfactory—in some quite surprising. The people's free services in the Bow and Bromley Institute have flourished greatly. Our Christmas dinners were this year on a gigantic scale. I feel confident that those who have helped before will seek to do great things during 1889, and also that I should have an increased number of warm-hearted supporters.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

IN accordance with custom for several years past this Mission began the year by holding two tea and Gospel meetings among the Jews, Jewesses, and their children in the East-end of London. In the schoolroom under Sion Chapel, Whitechapel-road, hired for the occasion, the adults had their meeting on New Year's Day, and the night school and other Jewish children on the following day. About 350 were gathered on the first evening, and about 400 on the second. The missionary staff with other ladies and gentlemen attended, and rendered loving service. After tea, on the first evening, a few words of hearty welcome were spoken by Mr. John Wilkinson. Prayer was offered by various friends in English and in German, and soul-stirring Gospel addresses were given in English by Mr. T. A. Denny and Mr. Henry Hutchinson, and in German by Mr. Adler and Mr. David Baron.

It was matter of devout gratitude to God that so many sons and daughters of Abraham could be gathered together for more than three hours, listening without disturbance to the message of salvation through the atoning blood of the Crucified One. Only one Jew wished to disturb the meeting, but he yielded to kindly influence. Two representatives of the Jewish Board of Guardians got into the meeting, and frightened a few poor Jewesses, but they were soon requested to leave. The meeting being thrown open for testimony to faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, it was most touching to see Jews rising one after another and boldly saying, "I believe with all my heart in the Lord Jesus Christ."

On the second evening about 100 of the night school children and 300 outsiders were gathered. The night school children had prizes given for neatness, punctuality, and good behaviour, &c., by Mr. Field, an old friend of the Mission. During the meeting they sang most heartily. Mr. Wilkinson asked them a number of questions, which for the most part were admirably answered. To the question, "Will Christ save all who come to Him?" one little boy said, "He saves good sinners," which furnished Mr. Hutchinson with a topic for a simple but powerful address. The lady teachers singled out a few of the children, who repeated texts of Scripture bearing on the way of salvation. Many of them brightly testified their love for Jesus.

Not more regularly are these meetings held, year by year, amongst the Jews, than are meetings on their behalf held at the Mildmay Conference Hall on the first day of the week of prayer. This year the numbers in attendance were not so large, on account of the dense fog. But so far as interest is concerned, the meetings were never better. The interest was sustained for two full hours in the morning, and for two and a half hours in the evening. Mr. James E. Mathieson occupied the chair on both occasions. Mr. Wilkinson gave at both meetings a brief statement of the work during the past year, and of the various institutions of the Mission, together with a reference to the marvellous work of God in New Testament distribution in Russia and elsewhere. Pastor Frank White, in the morning, gave an encouraging address based on Rom. ix.—xi. Dr. Dixon, the senior medical missionary, Mr. Adler, and Mr. Baron also gave deeply interesting addresses at the evening meeting. Over 16,000 visits to the Medical Mission, including visits of doctors and deaconesses to indoor patients, were paid during the past year; over 5000 Jews and Jewesses heard the Gospel at the Mission in the same period, and over fifty confessed their faith in Jesus as the Messiah. The interest of these meetings was deepened by the singing in Hebrew and English of twelve Jewish children, under training of Miss F. Wilkinson, a Mildmay deaconess, at the Children's Home, Newington-green. The spirit of praise and prayer richly rested on these hallowed gatherings.

WORK ON THE FRENCH COAST.

THE work on the French coast in connection with the Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission was greatly blessed during the year just ended. It is nine years since Mr. Henry Cook, superintendent of the Mission, added this to his other undertakings. From the first the results have been gratifying beyond all expectation. In the report for 1888, details are given of visits to Bordeaux, Havre, Trouville, Cherbourg, and Morlaix. The Mission ships were heartily welcomed, and the word preached was heard gladly by large numbers of French people, while in some cases English and other sailors found their way into the audiences, or were visited in their own vessels.

The few scattered Protestants in these French seaports were much cheered by the visits of the Mission ships. It was with pain that the superintendent and his helpers left them to preach the Gospel in other places. The year ended with a small debt on this useful Mission. Mr. Cook's address is 47, Stoke-road, Gosport.

VICTORIA HALL MISSION, NORWICH.

A REAL, live work is being carried on here, under the superintendence of Mr. Robert Adcock, who has just issued his annual summary of the year's efforts.

The foundation of the Mission dates back to 1864, but twelve years ago it was reconstituted, and very encouraging results have since been achieved. The most important feature of the work is seen in the largely-attended services held every Sabbath afternoon and evening, conducted by various denominations, many of whom represent special departments of the Lord's work at home and abroad. By this means the members of the Mission have become practically interested in such well-known endeavours as those of the Open-Air Mission, the Mildmay Mission to the Jews (an annual "Jews' Sunday" having been established), Mr. Grattan Guinness' Missionary Institute, and in connection with the last-named work Mr. J. McKittrick, from the Congo, paid a visit, accompanied by an African lad, in whom much interest was evinced.

Then the Opium Question has its share of notice, and in this manner Mr. Adcock keeps his people in touch with various outside branches of the Lord's work. Good work, again, is done by the "Lamp Mission," which comprises six bands of workers who spend an hour and a half every Saturday evening in each, holding three or four brief out-door services, at which also the meetings of the following Sabbath are announced. By a carefully organised plan this effort reaches over the whole town. On Sunday mornings a "Court and Alley Mission" is carried on, and light is brought into many a sick or aged heart by means of the "Bible and Flower Mission."

The expenses for the year amounted to £200, of which £120 was contributed at the Sunday gatherings, the remainder being made up by other friends. But under "expenses" we find over twenty guineas handed over to other missions! Evidently these friends are educated up to not only supporting their own work, but having practical fellowship in the labour of others. We wish this were true of a great many more.

TRINCOMALIE, CEYLON.—God is blessing our work here, several conversions having occurred among our comrades lately. Any Christian men in Her Majesty's ships or merchant service calling at Trincomalie will receive a hearty welcome by making themselves known at my quarters, next the flagstaff. We have meetings nearly every evening, either at my quarters or in the schoolroom.

D. J. GRANT, Quartermaster-Sergeant, R.A.
Fort Frederick, Trincomalie.

"OH! MY FATHER!" *

A WOMAN, a young, fair woman,
Meant for the helpmeet of man,
Meant by her God to tread the path
That only a woman can;

Meant to spread joy and blessing,
Meant to be mother and wife,
Meant to be friend and consoler,
Healer in discord and strife.

A woman, a young, fair woman,
But fallen so low, so low, [brain reels,
That the heart's blood chills, and the sick
At thought of her shame and woe.

Lying befouled in the gutter,
Struck at and kicked by men,
An object of scorn to the vilest,
Cast out from the drinking den.

Shall we turn with a deadly faintness,
With loathing, and leave her there,
Lost, and debased, and ruined,
Alone in the chill night air?

"Stand back!" cry two fresh young voices,
As they fearlessly break the ring,
"We are Christians; we mean to save her,"
And the crowd stands wondering.

And the women bear their sister
In their arms to the place of rest—
The blest saloon, where no gin is sold;
And at last is the truth confessed:

"My father, oh, my father,
He drank, and he beat us all,
Mother, and brothers, and sisters:
It led to my fearful fall.

"It drove me from home and mother
To the streets with their horrible sin;
And the shame, and the pain, and the thinking,
I have striven to drown in gin."

Her voice cries out from the gutter,
It rings on the chill night air,
It strikes on our ears with a sharp, wild note
Of horror and despair.

The drink! Oh, the cursèd poison!
From the father to child it came—
The craze for the fiery liquor—
The harvest of woe and shame.

Christians! go forth, like the women,
Who picked up the senseless heap
That God had said was their sister,
Though lost in her drunken sleep.

Christians! go forth for the Master,
And fight with the shameful sin—
Herald of death and disaster—
Fight with this demon of gin.

Join with the host of abstainers;
By ribbon or medal forth tell,
By your life, by your pen, by your language,
How to flee from a drunkard's hell.

PROTESTANT PRINCIPLES.—At a meeting of the Commemoration Council, held a few days ago, resolutions were passed calling upon all loyal Protestants to unite in associations, having for their first object the education of the people in the following principles: "The Word of God is the sole, sufficient, and supreme Rule of Faith, Worship, and Life. Justification is by Faith alone. The One Offering of Christ was finished upon the Cross. All human Pretensions to Sacerdotal Power and Authority in the Church of Christ are to be utterly repudiated." This education is to be carried out by meetings, classes of instruction, and examinations, and the dissemination of Protestant literature. The ultimate object is the promotion of political action on distinctly Protestant lines. The necessary funds are being raised by the Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand, London.

FACTORY GIRLS IN THE EAST.

OF the many means employed by Dr. Barnardo to influence young people for good, none are more popular than the free teas annually given to the factory girls of East London. These are as nets let down in the sea of young life of the great city, in the hope that some of those who are taken therein will prove of the sort which the great Fisher of men shall keep and use unto his own praise and glory. That the teas and the entertainments which follow them are humanising in a remarkable degree is beyond question, while Dr. Barnardo and his zealous helpers know of many instances in which these occasions have been stepping-stones to a new and better life.

In years gone by, Dr. Barnardo has invited large numbers of girls to a tea and entertainment at the Edinburgh Castle, Burdett-road. This year he has spread the invitations over three nights, and with much advantage, for it is easier to manage six hundred lively girls, some of them disposed to be boisterous, than it is to keep thrice that number in really good order. On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, last week, he provided tea for three such parties. The first two nights were for the most part devoted to girls employed at the match works, and the third night to those employed at jam, jute, rope, blacking, and sweet works. About one-third of the last six hundred were members of the Sturge House classes, in which the needful training is given to those factory girls who wish to enter domestic service.

The tea was heartily enjoyed, and the proceedings which followed were, on each evening, full of interest. The few friends of the work who were privileged to be present were much struck by the general good behaviour of the girls. On the last night, the bell ringers gave performances which were loudly cheered, and after the little pipers from the Homes had played some Scottish airs, the guests of the evening were in excellent spirits for the treat which followed. That was a magic-lantern entertainment, for the most part descriptive of the sea and its wonders, with an accompanying address by Rev. W. J. Mayers. The attention was most cheering, being accorded alike to the thrilling scenes that were exhibited, and to the words of warning and stories illustrative of Christian truth which Mr. Mayers fittingly introduced at intervals. Occasional songs by Mr. Mayers were also much enjoyed, and the way in which the girls took up the choruses was evidence of a pleasing familiarity with some of the most hallowed of Gospel songs.

As the evening wore on, some forty prizes, consisting of work-boxes, books, and dress materials, were distributed to members of the Factory Girls' classes. As they left the building, each of the girls received a parcel, containing an illustrated almanac, a picture-book, and two oranges. That the impressions of the occasion will bring forth fruit to the glory of God, was the lively hope and strong conviction of those who witnessed the sincerity of the workers and the thorough happiness of the girls.

DAILY PRAYER UNION.—In his quarterly paper, Rev. H. L. Harkness, of Worcester, gives a large number of testimonies as to the spiritual benefits received through this Union.

SEAMEN'S REST, PRINCE'S DOCK, BOMBAY.—Much good has resulted from the operations of this institution. Besides conducting Gospel services and arranging free teas, the superintendent visits the ships in dock daily, and becomes personally acquainted with the men. With the help of the police and magistrates, he has succeeded in closing all the disreputable houses and grog-shops in the vicinity. Worthy and destitute seamen are cared for and fitted out with decent clothing, and, when possible, work is secured for them. In a word, the men are in every way influenced to sobriety and godliness. The superintendent is Rev. Ben. Mitchell.

DIED AT HIS POST.

MY DEAR SIR,—I send on the accompanying letter without opening it. The writer of it, Rev. W. E. Richards, my only colleague in this Mission, died on December 27, after a fortnight's most painful illness, at the age of 32, leaving a wife and child.

Mr. Richards joined the London Missionary Society's Mission in Madras in the autumn of 1882, but, health breaking down, he was sent to Sydney (N.S.W.) to recruit. Unable, however, to rejoin the Mission in Madras, he was appointed to this Mission at the end of 1884, and arrived here May, 1885.

Exceptional circumstances have contributed to this second and fatal breakdown of Mr. Richards' health. He was a true missionary, unsparing of himself. Two ideas possessed him—seeking the Master's glory, and the elevation and enlightenment of heathen races through the Gospel.

I have in sorrow to ask you to discontinue sending THE CHRISTIAN to his address.

I remain, yours very sincerely,
EBENEZER V. COOPER, of Huahine.

Raiatea, Society Islands, viâ Tahiti, South Seas, Oct. 15, 1888.

P.S.—THE CHRISTIAN continues to afford me much enjoyable and refreshing reading, for which I am grateful.

MR. RICHARDS' LETTER.

MY DEAR SIRS,—Owing to the Christian sympathy of some kind friend in the Motherland, I have received regularly a copy of THE CHRISTIAN for a long time. I have often wished to thank the sender, and yourselves also, for one of the brightest features in my monthly mail. Little duties cropping up thickly every day have kept me from my desk; a passing hour of pain now gives me liberty to express my gratitude.

To a missionary, like myself, voluntarily exiled to the South Pacific, such an excellent focus of the Home and Foreign Mission Fields as THE CHRISTIAN is most welcome. Friends at home may sometimes think that hand-to-hand conflicts with heathenism, or with the crude Christianity of half-leavened island races, must of necessity be a constant stimulus to work. Alas! speaking for myself, these daily scenes would often become anodynes to the travail of a missionary's soul, were it not for the inspiring and healthy spirit that your paper brings into our isolated home; and when I have read it, I pass it on to one or another of the few English residents on Raiatea. Will you kindly convey my thanks to the thoughtful friend who has thus remembered one of Christ's servants on active service in a foreign land.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM E. RICHARDS.

Raiatea, South Seas, Sept. 12, 1888.

[We are sure our readers will join in sympathy for the bereaved family and co-workers of this devoted man, and in prayer that the Lord of the harvest will supply his place. Such a letter as this gives a glimpse of what missionary life involves for the service of the Master. The details may not be recorded in annual reports, but God will be mindful of them.—ED.]

VINEGAR GROUNDS MISSION.—Several festivals for poor children have recently been held at the Costers' Mission, Vinegar-grounds, off the City-road. Besides the substantial meals, many warm garments were given them, a number of poor women being paid here twice a week to make clothing. There are six meetings held here weekly; a Gospel service and Band of Hope for children, which are well attended, every Tuesday and Thursday evening. Anyone taking an interest in the rising generation will be gladly welcomed by the superintendent, Mr. W. Penrose, and his wife.

For the Young.

THE "WANDERING STAR."

It is nearly twelve years ago since, in a little out-of-the-way place in Dumfries, report and some few printed notices made known the startling fact that, independently of all the churches in the place, a little unsectarian mission was to be held "near by;" that is, in a village about four miles distant, where there was a building which had once been used as a mill, but which now, from depression in the weaving trade, was standing unused and empty.

Barefooted, bareheaded, and otherwise barely clothed, little Grace McEwen was on an errand when she heard of the innovation—"A mission to the folk near by." "And maybe they want it," said one, "but I hope they'll have better manners than to come preachin' here." Gracie heard the words, and longed to know more. "Father," she asked, on reaching home, "what will it be that's comin'? They're aye talkin' o' a mission." "Mission, indeed!" said her father, contemptuously, "I winna hae yer heid crammed fu' wi' sic nonsense. Ye've got to be content withoot the mission. I'll hae nae wanderin' stars, amo' ye; the kirk's guid eneuch for you, if it's guid eneuch for me."

But two days after this, as Gracie was returning from morning school, she stopped to read a notice of the coming mission; at the bottom of the bill were the words, "All are earnestly invited to attend." "Surely," said she, half aloud, that means me, as weel as the ithers. I'm sair hearted that I canna gang." "Would you like to go?" asked a stranger, stepping across the burn that divided his path from Gracie's. Gracie was very shy of strangers, but desire gave her courage. "That would I; but I'm no' to think ony mair aboot it." "I'm sorry for that," said the kind stranger, "but perhaps, if you were to ask father or mother, you might come." "I daurna think o' that, for ma feyther says he'll hae nae wanderin' stars amang his bairns, sae I canna come."

At once the stranger saw how matters stood. It was not the first peep he had got into some of these Kirk-bestarched hearts; but he was not discouraged. "Suppose," he suggested, "that you and I pray about it? We will ask God to make a way for you to attend this mission, if it be his will. Shall we?"

The language was new to Gracie; she looked puzzled, and so the stranger-gentleman explained to her what he meant, and by this time they were only a mile from Grace's home, the school-house being two miles distant. Little Grace's heart was full of joy that day; she might hope, for she would pray about going to the mission. The day came when Dumlie meant to show that it could turn its back on such new-fangled nonsense as missions. Nobody out of the whole village went. The next day the stranger called on Grace's father, and gave an order for a piece of cloth from the too-often idle loom. McEwen was in high spirits; he found out who his patron was, then he called Gracie into his place behind the loom, and said, "Ye can gang for ae nicht to the fulin', for maybe, if he sees ye there, he may be inclined to mak' anither order. I must put up wi' a wanderin' star sometimes for the sake o' the siller." And he laughed softly to himself at his wit in thinking of such a bargain.

Gracie went, her heart leaping for joy, and at the door her stranger friend met her with a warm welcome. "I've been expecting you," he said, "for I knew you would come." "It's for the sake o' the siller I'm here; but I'm richt glad to be here onyway, though it'll be the last time," said the child. She looked round the big, bare room—not a creature from Dumlie was there; altogether there were six souls that night who had come to hear the good news.

Gracie was surprised to hear the stranger give out the text, after a hymn. The words were, "Come unto Me," and she drank in every word of the little address, as one who, for the first time, hears that which means new life to the soul. At the close of the meeting the preacher said: "Six souls wanting, seeking, peace with God! Who will be the first to yield to his loving invitation, 'Come'?" At once little Grace dropped upon her knees, and there and then, with broken heart and stammering tongue, gave herself, as she was, to her loving Saviour. "Oh, dear Jesus! I'm a wanderin' star, but my sair heart langs to find its everlasting rest in Thee." And she found it. And so did the five others, for Grace's confession gave them courage, and one by one they accepted the Saviour's call.

And Grace's father? As he got no more orders for cloth from the stranger, he was continually teasing Grace about her new-found piety and zeal for God. "Ye'll always be prayin' now, I suppose. What is it ye'll be asking maist o' the time?"

"Ye'll no' like me to tell ye, father; but I'm just worryin' the blessed Lord to mak' ye a wanderin' star, for I ken naething that can gie ye mair joy than that."

Contrary to her fears, her father did not strike her for such a bold answer; but laughed and said, "I'm no' like to fash mysel wi' sic notions, and ae wanderer is eneuch in the place for me."

But Grace had persuaded a neighbour to invite one of the six souls saved that night to hold a little meeting in the best room. To this McEwen was invited, and he went. During a pause he stood up and confessed that God had called him out of his groove, and that henceforth he must serve Him with a living faith, and not rest satisfied with the dry bones of mere theology. Everyone was surprised, but Grace softly took his hand as he sat down.

"An' noo there are twa wanderin' stars in ae place, and we winna rest until we ha' gotten mony mair sic stars to lay at his blessed feet."

Grace will have many crowns to bring to the King, but the brightest gem of all will be her father, the first soul given in answer to her loving prayers.

THE YOUNG FOR JESUS.

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth." ECCLES. xii. 1.

We want the young for Jesus!
Now in their youthful days,
Oh, may they seek the Saviour,
And early sing his praise.

Chorus—O Lord, in life's bright morning,
To Thee our hearts we bring:
Our praises Thou wilt welcome
When from the heart we sing.

We want the young for Jesus!
On earth when He was here,
With gentle, sweet affection,
He drew the children near.

And still He waits to bless them
With fond and yearning love;
Kind Shepherd, He would lead them
Safe to the fold above.

We want the young for Jesus!
Be this our blest employ;
No mission could be nobler,
Or fraught with sweeter joy.

For e'en the tiniest jewel
Shall shine in Jesus' crown;
And sparkle there for ever
When time itself has flown.

HOSPITAL WORK IN JERUSALEM.

DEAR SIR,—There is great need for a new English hospital outside the city walls, where alone it can be healthy. At the present hospital there is no drainage, or any provision for the application of sanitary principles. The hospital represents Protestant England, and compares unfavourably with those of all other nations and creeds, who have been able to build fine hospitals in good situations. It is meant only for Jews, who flock to it in great numbers, and seem impressed with the kindness and skill of the doctor, who is an earnest Christian, and speaks to them very plainly of his belief in the Saviour. We have lately come from Tottenham to take charge of the nursing; we feel we cannot do justice to the patients, and so we make this appeal. A lady in England has promised £1000, and we trust that sufficient help will be given to enable us to proceed with the work.

At present we are in the midst of narrow streets, into which refuse of every description is thrown, and the effluvia makes fever unavoidable. In the court-yard is the opening from an old cesspool underlying the hospital, and connected with the drains of the town. A stream of foul air penetrates to every part of the building incessantly. The wards are cold, dark, not properly ventilated, and with no means of heating them. This is a real practical mission work, intended to benefit both the souls and bodies of men. It only needs ample support to make it a centre of great blessing in the years to come, when the Jews will probably be here in increased numbers. The patients seem astonished to be treated with kindness, having been accustomed to the reverse. The London Jews' Society, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C., will supply further information and receive the gifts of friends.—Yours faithfully,

DEACONESS ADA.

THE REFORMED CHURCH OF FRANCE.—In a review of the past year, Le Christianisme says: "The seminaries of Batignolles and Tournon are full, and the faculties of theology also number many students. If the harvest is white, the workers are being prepared."

REV. WILLIAM WILLIAMS,

Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, S.E.

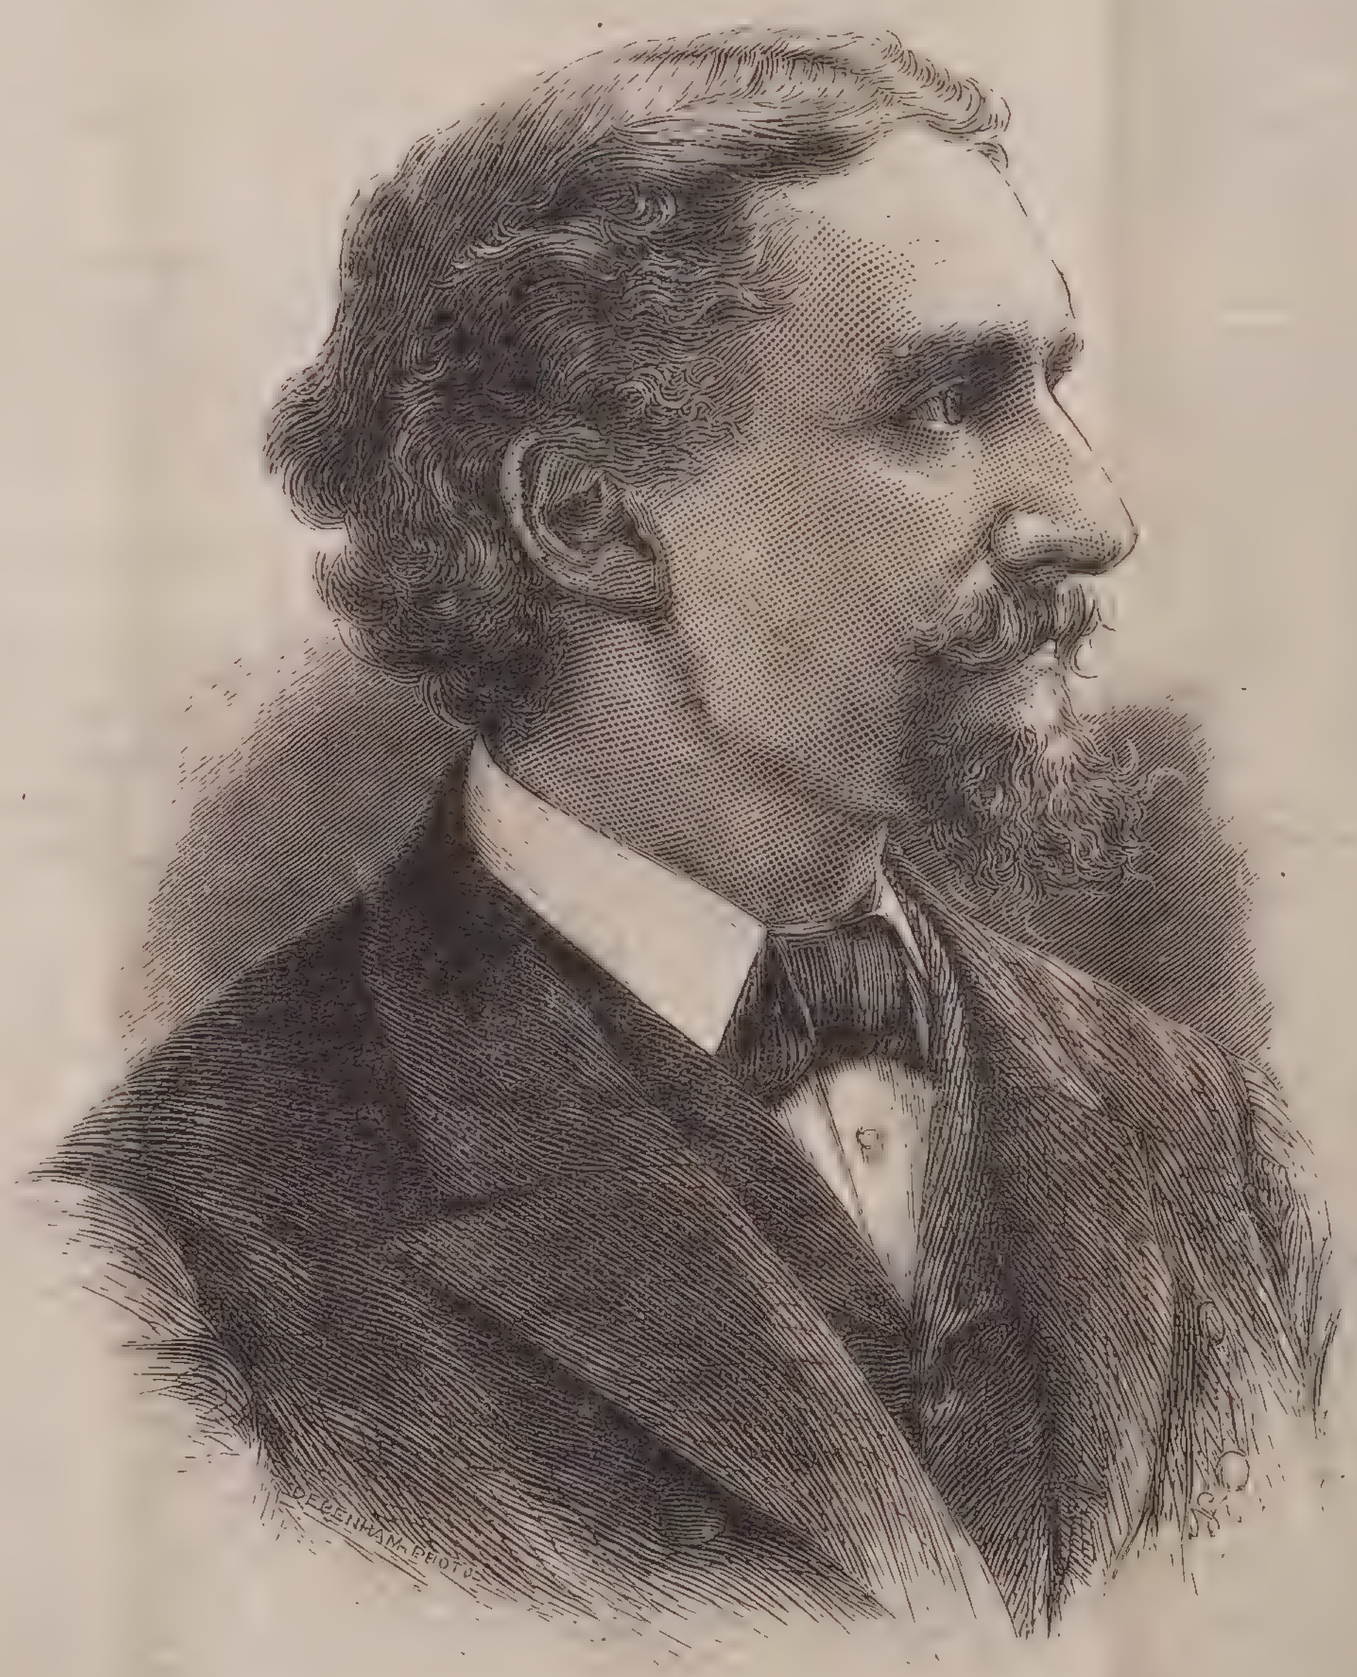
"COME into the College, and God bless you!" This was Mr. Spurgeon's reply to his application, and in August, 1872, the subject of this sketch entered the Pastors' College, where he proved a most diligent student. He was then in his twentieth year, and had resolved, by the grace of God, to make the best of his opportunity, and to consecrate the whole of himself to the ministry of the Word.

The only son of godly parents, his early years were spent in an atmosphere which made youthful discipleship easy; but it was not till he was sixteen years of age that he became consciously Christian by his personal faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and the witness of the Spirit. If grace cannot be claimed as an hereditary principle, the children of God-fearing parents are, as a rule, peculiarly conditioned for its reception. "Thou and thy house" is a promise which embodies or expresses a certain law of the kingdom. Young WILLIAMS was early dedicated to God, in conformity with the rites of the Calvinistic Methodist Church, at Waverton, Cheshire, of which his parents, were members. As he emerged from the twilight of his experience as a child of Christian parents, into the light of another sonship, he soon gave evidence of the change, and began to labour as a Sunday-school teacher; and later on as a village preacher. Developing a character of an intensely spiritual type, and labouring with all the zeal of a youthful enthusiast, he found an ever-widening sphere of usefulness.

It was proposed that he should enter Bala College as a student for the ministry; but, as his views upon the subject of baptism had undergone a change, the proposal fell through. When he entered the Pastors' College he was baptized by Rev. James Spurgeon. During the two years he spent in that institution he drank in deeply the spirit of the President, whose character and preaching suggested an ideal after which he felt he ought to strive.

On completing his college term, he was called to the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Clay Cross, and the record of his three years' ministry in that place attested his fitness for a larger sphere of service. The opportunity for change came, and after much prayer he accepted an invitation to the church of which he is still the pastor.

Upton Chapel was erected to perpetuate the work of Rev. James Upton at Blackfriars, where he laboured from 1786 to 1834. The old chapel was removed during the construction of the London, Chatham & Dover Railway. James Upton was a companion as well as a neighbour of the celebrated Rowland Hill. It is said that on one occasion Mr. Hill remarked to his fellow-pilgrim, "If you and I don't move off soon, the angels yonder will think we have missed our way."



Depressed as was the condition of the church at Upton, an earnest band of godly people held together, and prayed, and worked for better days. Faith triumphed, and hope was rewarded in the advent of Mr. Williams, to whom they felt they had been Divinely led. A gracious revival soon commenced, and has continued for eleven years, during which the pastor has welcomed into the church members who may be reckoned by hundreds. At the present time there are upwards of six hundred baptized believers in fellowship. Foremost in every good work, Mr. Williams is ably supported by a choice body of church officers, and a devoted band of Christian workers; a missionary is also maintained to labour under the direction of the pastor. We have seldom met with a more touching little record of congregational work than a green-covered booklet which Mr. Williams has lately issued, detailing his second annual story of work among the Lambeth poor. Its title, "Sunshine in Sadness," is singularly appropriate. Speaking of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis, the missionary and his wife, the pastor says:—

> They have thrown into their service a self-sacrificing energy and holy zeal of which we cannot speak too highly. On the part of Mrs. Ellis, the labour has been all voluntary, without either fee or reward. Yet many times has she taken girls and young women, and even young men, to her own home, and cared for them until they were in some newly-found situation, or safe among friends. It would be a great boon to us in our mission work if we could rent a house where our missionary and his wife could live rent free in order to take in, for a day or two, young girls and others, to whom kindly help at the right moment might bring temporal and eternal salvation. If any friend or friends could help us to do this, we should be deeply grateful.

Though the chapel is situated midway between the Tabernacle and Christ Church, and Mr. Williams has to labour under the local disadvantage incidental to the near neighbourhood of such preachers as C. H. Spurgeon and Mr. Newman Hall, the large congregations attracted by his ministry attest his fitness for the peculiar position he is called to occupy.

Mr. Williams enjoys the personal friendship of Mr. Spurgeon, and has frequently occupied his place at the Tabernacle with much acceptance. His services are sought for anniversary and other meetings, and, till recently, he was a useful member of the Committee of the London Baptist Association. He has published a volume of sermons, and has given a concise history of the church of which he is pastor.

As may be inferred from his portrait, Mr. Williams is a man of a sensitive temperament, and of great tenderness of spirit. That he may be long spared to occupy his present sphere, and find, with ripening years, a richer harvesting of souls, is, not only a wish, but the fervent prayer of all who have any knowledge of his worth and work.

HIS MISSIONARY TRAVELS IN AFRICA.

LAST week we briefly referred to the appearance of this young missionary before the Geographical Society, when he read a paper describing his seven years' experiences as a traveller across a great part of South Central Africa. That paper did not give any details of the missionary work which Mr. Arnot has been quietly and successfully endeavouring to do all these years, while pursuing his main purpose—to found a station in a healthy locality, which could be used as a centre for Gospel effort among the surrounding peoples. Our readers will be glad to have a pretty full account of one of Mr. Arnot's missionary addresses, recently delivered; in it we have embodied several paragraphs from his paper read to the Geographers:—

In 1864, on Livingstone's return from the Zambesi expedition, I was taken, when quite a child, by my parents to witness his distribution of prizes in a school at Hamilton, in Scotland. The impressions regarding Africa which I then received remained with me; in course of time, as I was enabled to take a more intelligent interest in the subject, and somewhat to understand the needs of Africa, I purposed to make some effort towards helping her people. Cherishing this thought, I prepared to set out for Africa as soon as opportunity offered, with a view to missionary work among some of the tribes to the north of the Zambesi. I also sought to obtain a little knowledge of such handicrafts as might be useful there. Seven years ago I started for Africa, hoping that God would lead me to make my way into the interior from the south. My object was to reach the high watershed of Africa, thinking it would be possible to find some healthy country, habitable by Europeans, where missionaries could carry on preliminary work in training natives for evangelising the people who reside in the lower and less healthy parts.

The heavy dotted line indicates the route taken by Mr Arnot.

THE WAY TO EVANGELISE AFRICA.

I started from Natal, making use of the ordinary means of travel, bullock waggon, and succeeded in reaching the first native station at Shoshong. The missionaries at Shoshong have for some time been greatly blessed. The young native Christians go out in all directions to the villages, and carry the Gospel message to their fellow countrymen. I saw there that the only way to evangelise Africa is by means of Africans themselves. At Shoshong I had to remain from necessity for some time, as the country to the north was a great arid desert, very difficult to traverse. One cannot start lightly on such a trying and often perilous journey.

I had no proper means of crossing the desert, but I secured three donkeys, and was planning a start on foot, or in any way, when the great Christian chief Khama came to my help. He became interested in my mission, and placed at my disposal his own waggon, with twenty oxen and some of his men, to accompany me as far as they could towards the Zambesi. This chief Khama not only desires to see the Gospel prosper in his own country, but to carry it forward to those in the regions beyond. We succeeded in crossing the first part of the desert, and, after many delays, we started on the most trying part of the desert journey. We soon got past the permanent springs of water, and got into the great untrodden region; we pushed on day and night, not knowing when or how we should reach water, but hoping to strike it somewhere.

HOW BUSHMEN DRAW WATER.

At this time we were dependent on a few bushmen who provided us with water. These inhabitants of the desert, about four feet high, are supposed to be among the lowest types of humanity in existence, yet we found them capable of wonderful kindness. They came and dug pits alongside of our waggon. At the bottom of these they sank long hollow reeds which acted as a kind of artesian wells. Every morning they sucked up a little moisture that had gathered round the reeds during the night, this they spat into tortoise-shells and gave to us to drink. So that by a little frothy water out of their own mouths, they sustained us in life in the heart of the desert, until the oxen returned. Then we started off again, and by and by we reached a spot where water was fairly plentiful.

We found, however, that we could not proceed further with the oxen, owing to the prevalence of the tsetse fly, which is fatal to them. The oxen and waggon had to return, and I had to look about for means of transport on foot. I was able to muster twenty men in all, gathered from the villages. Each man carried a supply of water, and off we started. We had a long march before we could reach the River Chobe, a tributary of the Zambesi. We thought that by being very economical of the water, and travelling long marches, we would succeed. The country, however, proved very difficult to travel through; the low blackthorn rendered it impossible to journey by night. Our water supply became less and less, and it had to be served out in cupfuls. At one point we hoped to reach a pool where we expected to find water. Just before we got there we came on the track of elephants; they had been before us, and had drained the pool of its last drop. The men were completely discouraged; they threw down their loads, and from the look of things I saw no chance of starting again unless we got water. They went out in all directions in search of water.

WELLS IN THE DESERT.

At last they came back more cast down than ever; they saw no signs of water, and there seemed no hope of life, unless they ran away and left their loads behind them. One lad, however, who had gone out in a different direction, fell in with some bushmen who were on the trail of elephants. Meeting the boy they left the trail and took him to one of their own deposits of water in the desert. They fill ostrich shells with water and bury them in the sand, so that they can be found when needed. These men brought some of the water to us, and we were sufficiently refreshed, so that we were enabled to start and traverse the remaining sixty miles that lay between us and the River Chobe. You can imagine the effect it had upon us when we saw that great rolling stream. We sat down on the bank and, like children, gazed at the river; and, though we could only swallow a few cupfuls, we felt as though we would like to drink bucketfuls, after our long and weary journey of two months.

How that stream reminded me of the stream of God's grace flowing so full and rich and free for all. Out there in the desert several hours before a few drops of that water would have been beyond price, not to be compared with gold or diamonds. Ah, we do not know the infinite value of the stream of God's grace, if we have never felt our great need of it. Only those who have tasted of it in the time of their need can tell the preciousness and blessedness of it.

We remained at this river resting for about ten days, and, starting again, at length reached the Zambesi. Here I did not exactly know how my steps would be directed—whether to remain there or to proceed towards the north. I was told that some distance up the river there lived a powerful chief, Liwanika, who was paramount ruler over all the country to the north of the Zambesi; and that no one could cross the river without getting his permission. I sent a messenger to him, and he at once sent down three boats for me. Meantime I had returned to Panda-ma-tenka, to procure some things necessary for the journey up the river. Starting a second time for the river, and crossing the seventy miles of desert country that lay between, I was struck down with

MY FIRST TOUCH OF AFRICAN FEVER.

It comes so suddenly that before one knows its effect he is unconscious. We were nearly half way on our journey when I was seized. I was behind my party, and had with me only a little boy. I felt myself growing more and more unfit to travel, and I was obliged to lie down, sending the boy after the carriers to call them back. He missed them, however, as, not knowing I was so ill, and thinking that I would follow on, they had pushed on for the river, without any instructions from me; the lad started back at once, showing that he knew how serious my case was. He went on all that night and till about eleven o'clock next day, through a country infested with wild animals. He had really run the whole of the way, fully thirty miles. When he reached the station he told a trader that I was out in the desert dying. There I lay until the third, when a messenger that the trader had sent reached me. This kind man found me in a desperate condition from thirst and fever. My tongue was swollen so that I could not speak a word, and I was so feeble that they had to lift me up and nurse me for five weeks. It was entirely owing to the kindness of that little boy that my life was saved at that time. On recovering strength, I started back to the Zambesi, and the king's boats reached that point on the river two days after my arrival. These five weeks of sickness had not been lost time after all, as I was in plenty of time to meet the messengers from the king.

This was my first experience of travel in Africa by river, and it was certainly much pleasanter than walking. That part of the river was very beautiful. There were great cataracts over which we had to struggle; sometimes we had to force the boats over land, stumbling on over rocks and stones. There were trials, however, on the river also. Food is very scarce there, because the people do not live along the banks of the rivers. They are really deserted, because the slave raiders make use of the water highways. The people, in order to be out of the track of these dealers, have gone off towards the watershed of the country, and it is there that the great mass of the people are found, rather than on the waterways and lakes.

A KINDLY RECEPTION.

On reaching his capital, Liwanika received me very kindly, and was willing I should remain. He did not at all approve of my going to the north, though he acknowledged that it was a very healthy country. It was inhabited by a class of people whom he called his "dogs"; they were reserved by him to be raided upon at his pleasure, and to replenish his own villages as he desired. I thought it was better to remain there for a few months, and see how things went. So I remained, learning the language and picking up some strength, so far as it was possible to do so in such a country. The Zambesi overflows its banks twenty feet every year. The grass grows high, and, as the water returns at the time of overflow, the grass falls down and becomes a great rotting heap all the rest of the year.

It is in this Barotse country, under Chief Liwanika, that Mr. and Mrs. Coillard, of the French Mission, are. They are enduring hardships and privations such as I myself even have little idea of. They are living in the country, whereas I only passed through it. When I was there a revolution was threatening to break out; it kept the country in a state of tumult for eighteen months after I had started.

I returned a second time to Panda-ma-tenka, hoping to hear of the arrival of someone to join me. I was disappointed in this, and concluded it was no use going further north. I then resolved to go towards the west coast. On the way thither I passed through a most interesting country. My idea of Africa had been that of a land very much desert, or else marshy and almost uninhabitable. But here was a region, rich, fertile, and beautiful, well watered, and, better still, with many people living all along the banks of the rivers. Of course we had varied kinds of receptions. At one place, among the Bakuti, it was very remarkable how the people seemed to open their ears and hearts, and gave their time. I spent ten days among them. The first five I went among their villages, having large meetings. As I could speak a dialect which many of them understood, I could explain myself quite freely to them. They became very much interested in what they heard me say, and they said among themselves: "We are only tiring the white man out by coming day after day to our villages; we will go to him." So, for the last five days, they gathered together, and we had —a most extraordinary time, I might say, for Africa. They kept up the discussions among themselves, and before I left at least two of the men stood up in the midst of their tribe, and declared for Jesus before all their friends, in their own simple language. They acknowledged that the things that we said to them were true, and they renounced their superstitions and fetish worship. Since then I have heard that they are still longing for a return visit from me, or that some other white teacher should go to their country.

ALL-DAY MEETINGS

We had to leave these people, and went on travelling from day to day. At one point we had rather a different reception. We had pitched our camp in the midst of long grass. Towards evening, as we were getting things in order, we found that the grass round our camp was on fire. As soon as the men succeeded in extinguishing the flames, we found that eight of them were missing. Then we understood that an enemy had surrounded us, set the grass on fire, and carried off all the stragglers. There was nothing to do but to find their trail and follow them up. After a ten-miles' journey we reached a little village in the forest where they were resting. They thought we had come to fight with them, and they rushed out with their guns, bows and arrows, and spears to receive us. My men, thirty or forty in number, being only Africans, got into fighting order, and began to load their guns for action. I was a little way behind, and did not take in the situation at once. Seeing how things were going, I ran forward, seized a little stool, and held it up in the air as a signal of peace. This arrested the enemy, and at last two of them came forward to hear what I had to say. After a little talk, it turned out that the whole thing was a mistake. They thought we had come to their country to rob and plunder them, and quite naturally, in self-defence, they wished to have the first hit at us. Next day we spent the time in receiving presents and telling them of the things we had been speaking to the people all along the road.

"SO STRANGE...AND I SO OLD."

At another point on the journey there was a chief who had heard about the things of God. He was intensely interested in the reports, and he came himself to see me. Before we had time to settle down to speak he said: "All the huntsmen have been called in; the women are in from the fields; we are all here, and we want you at once to begin your conversation with us about the Great Spirit, and those things you have been talking of along the road." After talking with them for some hours, the chief asked me to go with him to their village. He said there were some old people there who could not come down to hear me with the others, and he wanted me very much to go and see them. I went up to the village, and conversed with these poor old broken-down people, one after another, and it was most touching. They shook hands with me, and looked me in the face with such a look. What a feeling of guilt came over me at that moment, the guilt of the professing Church of Christ, knowing these things, and acknowledging the preciousness of the Gospel, and yet withholding the Gospel message from these people so long. Some of them were too old to understand the things I had been telling to the younger people; they could only look wistfully at me, and shake me by the hand. It reminded me of an old man I had spoken with on the upper Zambesi. After leaving my hut, he came back to the door and said: "It is so strange for me to hear these things for the first time, and I so old." Truly it must strike them. And how our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, must yearn over them. On us lies the guilt of neglecting them; why have we not taken the message of the Gospel to them sooner? There are many physical difficulties connected with travel in Africa, and I would be the last to urge any particular individual to go out there. But there are no difficulties in the preaching of the word. As soon as you learn a little of the language, you can have all the attention of the people, and all their time. I may say that, in going amongst them, it is important to get some standing at their native courts. I have always taken the place of an ambassador from another country, and have demanded from them a hearing. This is the surest way of getting the attention, not only of the chief, but the whole of the people.

(To be concluded in our next.)

TO "LITTLE-DROP" CHRISTIANS.

"You have no Scripture for total abstinence," were the words of a minister to me one day. To this I replied in the words of the loving disciple, 1 John iii. 16, "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."

"Now, my friend," I said, "is not the less comprehended in the greater? If we are to lay down our lives for each other, is it too much to ask of the professed followers of Christ to lay down an article of superfluous and injurious luxury, for the sake of those whom it is causing to stumble, to be offended, made weak, and many to fall and rise no more?" He replied, "That kills me. I thought I could have held my ground, but I cannot; you have killed me."

Ten years passed over, and we met again. He came towards me with a smiling countenance, saying, "Ten years ago you killed me; nevertheless I live, and live a better, a happier, and more useful life than I did before." Thus, every refuge failing (even the crumbling, time-worn fortresses of Cana in Galilee and poor Timothy's stomach), the good man nobly surrendered.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.

THE chief objects of this institution are to raise the moral and the intellectual condition of the people; to improve their homes; and to find for them recreative engagements to relieve their hard and daily toil. To do this many efforts are put forth; the Library itself, with its 20,000 volumes and spacious reading-room, gives the means whereby the working men who nightly fill every section are kept from the attractions of the public-house; likewise are the lads and youths from their manifold temptations.

The work is far from being limited to the building itself, as grants of books are frequently made to various working-men's clubs, coffee-palaces, police stations, youths' institutes, Sunday-school, and other libraries; so that the total number benefited during the past few years has been estimated at 360,000 persons. There is also a lecture hall, where free lectures are given to men and women on health, Christian evidence, and other important topics. The crowded state of the room testifies to the appreciation of this important branch of the work. The hall is used also for evening classes. Among the subjects taught are wood-carving, book-keeping, &c.

A very interesting part of the benevolent work is amongst the factory girls of the neighbourhood, whose daily labours prevent them learning needlework; and for these a class has been formed in which free instruction is given in plain needlework and dressmaking by voluntary lady friends.

To sum up the entire benefits, we cannot do better than quote from the London City Missionary's report concerning its value:—

"I know of many men whose minds have been much elevated and enlightened by this institution; and, in some cases, minds have been opened to receive spiritual truth, homes have been improved, and families been better kept."

WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER.

STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN SQUARE.

TUESDAY, JAN. 8.

ON Tuesday "The Holy Spirit in the Church" was the subject. Sir William Willis presided, and read John xvi. 8—15. Rev. J. R. WOOD, of Upper Holloway, followed with an earnest address. At the outset he called attention to the prominence occupied in the Gospels by the Lord's promise of the Holy Ghost to the Church. Already dwelling with believers, comforting them in trouble, and helping their infirmities, the Spirit need not be asked for as if He had not been already sent forth. Rather, we must pray for a larger measure of the blessing already granted, and with our petitions we must blend devout thanksgiving for what we actually enjoy. Mr. Wood spoke helpfully of the various offices of the Spirit—the Comforter, Advocate, Teacher, and Guide — and pointed out that when the spiritual life is enfeebled, the Giver of all good will, in answer to prayer, warm and quicken his people by the Holy Ghost, and fit each and all for effective service in their several spheres.

WEDNESDAY.

Mr. George Williams presided on Wednesday, when the topic was "Families and Schools." The address was given by Rev. W. H. BARLOW, vicar of Islington, who based his remarks on Rom. xii. 6—8. He pointed out that the varied gifts of God all come from the same Spirit. There is "prophecy," not the foretelling of future events, but the declaring the will of God; and those having the gift of public teaching were warned that they must not teach portions simply, but must take every portion of the Word, every doctrine in its turn, place, and proportion. Surely, it is the bounden duty of parents and heads of colleges and of schools to proclaim the truth, and in doing so to study the capacity and powers of those to whom they proclaim it. Then there is "ministry." It may take the form of teaching, or of visiting the sick, the sad, the sorrowful, and the dying. In teaching, rightly understood, there is an imparting to another mind that which we have found to be a treasure and a blessing to ourselves. The great secret of a teacher's art is patience. "Exhortation" or comfort is also a distinct class of service for Christ. Not all can comfort others in distress.

THURSDAY.

On Thursday morning, Sir R. N. Fowler presided, and in opening the meeting read Matt. ix. 35—38 and Eph. v. The subject of petition was "Home Missions and Social Reforms," respecting which a deeply interesting address was delivered by Rev. G. W. OLVER, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. He maintained that in the service of Christ the temporal and spiritual, the bodily and eternal, cannot be separated. At the same time they need not be confounded. The speaker called special attention to the words of Christ when talking of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and visiting the desolate: "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto Me." So it is clear that Christ requires us to take account of the needs and troubles of our fellow-men.

There is to-day not only an earnest desire in the Church for consecration to service, but, on the other hand, there are multitudes of men and women in the world who are weary with hunger and heartache. Of these latter many would work for a living but cannot, and some who are ready to work cannot get it to do. Such are bringing forward bitter complainings because of the order of things in social life, and they mock at Christianity because they say that it proclaims glory to God in the highest, while as seen by them, it brings but little of good-will, to men. If, continued the speaker, my belief is right, the heart of the people is not set against the true God, but it is set against what they call "the Christian's God." As, therefore, his people look up to Him, and ask for consecration for service, Christ points to the world around us, suffering bodily as well as spiritually, and He says again, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me."

Mr. Olver went on to point out that from the very beginning Christ attained the spiritual by means of the material, the benefit of the soul by means of the body. He condescended to appear among us in the likeness of sinful flesh, in order that he might bring life and immortality to light. He shared our weakness, our pain, our woe, before he claimed our allegiance and our trust. Are we to be afraid to follow in his steps? Bodily suffering and family troubles brought the people to the Saviour, and He looked upon the multitude as a plenteous harvest. The duty of Christian workers is to follow the Master in solicitude for the body, for the benefit of the soul. If they do that, Christ will draw men to Him, as He has said. In conclusion, Mr. Olver urged to simple surrender and true consecration to God, in readiness for work in any way and anywhere.

FRIDAY.

Sir Robert Phayre presided on Friday, when the subject was, "Missions to Israel, Moslems, and the Heathen." Having read Matt. xxviii. 18—20, and Rom. x. 9—15, he pointed out that we know that bearing witness for the truth, as Christ Himself set us the example, is according to the mind and will of God. If, therefore, we ask for the Divine blessing on the work, we know that God heareth us, and may be quite confident of receiving that for which we plead.

After a prayer by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, in which the desires of the meeting were very acceptably and fervently expressed, an address was delivered by Rev. G. KARNEY, of Hampstead. It was founded on the story of the thinning of the ranks of Israel before the fight with the Midianites under Gideon, as recorded in Judges vii. 1—7. As the land of promise was reduced to desolation by tribes who knew not God, so the earth, which has been given to Christ for his inheritance, has been overrun by those who worship idols, and give not glory to the living and true God. The thinning of the ranks of Israel showed that only courageous men were fit for the fight. There is to-day a call for men of like mind, as also is there need of leaders in the spirit and power of Gideon, through whom Israel became victorious. Much is being earned at the present time as to the methods, of warfare, and those who at home are engaged in devising means, as well as those who go into the thick of the battle, require wisdom from above. The issue is beyond question, for Christ will yet draw all men unto Him.

Rev. Burman Cassin, who followed with prayer, asked that some Gideon may be raised up in the Church of England to do battle against error and superstition, and carry forward the fresh Reformation which the invasions of Popery have rendered desirable.

SATURDAY.

The closing day of the week was set apart for prayer for the nations of the earth. The weather was very unfavourable, but the season was a specially blessed one to the few friends who attended the meeting. The chair was occupied by Mr. G. Lidgett, who read Amos v. 6—15. After prayer, by Rev. J. Fordyce and Sir R. Phayre, an address was delivered by Rev. ROBERT TAYLOR, of Norwood. The old divines, he said, made a very good and Scriptural distinction between the common and the saving operations of the Holy Spirit—a distinction which is not so generally recognised to-day. Nevertheless it remains true that all good gifts, including intelligence, power, and skill, are bestowed upon the inhabitants of the earth by God's Spirit, which also enlightens the human conscience and controls the conduct of nations. Praying for the Holy Spirit to be poured out upon the nations, we commit ourselves to personal exertion for the advancement of truth and righteousness.

With this basis the speaker entered upon a thoughtful consideration of Christian duty in relation to slavery, the opium traffic, and the drink curse, also alluding to the need for Divine restraint upon the military spirit which so largely prevails. He emphasised the importance of citizens of the heavenly country being acquainted with political questions. English Christians ought to rejoice that, with considerable differences of tendency and opinion, there is in the general sentiment of this nation a large measure of agreement as to what is best for the nation's interest. Not only is it desirable, however, that political life should be purified and elevated—that politics should recognise Divine truth and authority as both rule and guide—but there should be a political charity, as there is a Christian charity. This would wonderfully sweeten the national life, and breathe peace in many a divided home. In conclusion, Mr. Taylor pointed to the Gospel hope of the returning Christ, who will not only make blessed provision for his saints, but will so transform England, Europe, and the entire world that "the people shall be all righteous," so that they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of his planting, the work of his hands, and that He may be glorified.

THE CITY MEETINGS.

TUESDAY, JAN. 8.

The meetings at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street Within, on Tuesday, Jan. 8, were well attended. At the first, Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE delivered a powerful address, founded on Gen. vi. 3, "And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years." God's thoughts are not our thoughts, nor are his ways our ways. According to human standards, the people of Noah's day were at once progressive, prosperous, and powerful. God saw, however, that man had corrupted his way upon the earth. There had been a mingling of the holy seed of Seth with the unholy of the race, and every imagination of man's heart became evil—became fleshly as opposed to that which is spiritual. May not the record also describe the condition of things to-day? The signs of prosperity and tokens of civilisation are, indeed, apparent to the onlooker, but God sees something more. He sees that the Church no longer occupies the high level of separation she once enjoyed, but is bound up with much that is worldly. He sees that barbarian nations learn from us not only the arts of civilisation, but also drunkenness, opium-smoking, and debauchery of a kind that makes the very heathen shudder. What can we do but bow our faces to the ground before God, when we look at India, placed under our power, and yet Christian truth and the Bible are banished from every school under the Government? When, again, we look at China and see the results of the use of the opium we have forced upon her people; and when we look to Africa, and see what has followed the civilisation which had been introduced, shame and confusion should cover our faces. Moreover, when we look West, it is the same, for in America men who once worshipped the Great Father have been taught to drink themselves to death. Doubtless, the nations of Europe are powerful and prosperous, yet we see that twelve millions of them are in arms, ever ready to spread ruin abroad, and we cannot overlook the fact that one great end of scientific endeavour is to compass most quickly the destruction of God's creatures. God sees all these things, and His patience and long-suffering are truly amazing.

The fact that God's Spirit "shall not always strive with man" is evidence that He does now strive. As, however, man becomes more given over to the flesh, the striving will surely cease, and the vials of God's wrath will be poured out. In the meantime, the Holy Spirit restrains the awful judgment. It is God's resting time, during which men may obtain salvation. It is for true believers now to embrace their opportunities. Having been saved themselves, they must, as Noah of old, see after the salvation of their households, and also be preachers of righteousness.

At the second meeting, Pastor F. H. WHITE delivered a brief address. He maintained that the object of the meetings was not merely to provide occasions for prayer, but to provoke Christians to a continuing instant in prayer. Living in an atmosphere of prayer, we shall not only be blessed ourselves, but be a blessing to those with whom we come in contact. Moreover, being filled with the Spirit, we shall have such boldness in the faith that our word will have power with men and be greatly owned of God. In conclusion, Mr. White showed that, in order to be filled with the Spirit, we must first be emptied of self.

The prayers were spontaneous, the burden of petition being the quickening of the Church by the Holy Spirit.

WEDNESDAY.

Families and schools were prayed for on Wednesday. During the first hour, the chair was occupied by Rev. NEWMAN HALL, who founded a thoughtful address on expressions found in the great intercessory prayer in John xvii. Throughout the chapter the Lord wonderfully identifies Himself with his people in many terms, one of them being, "The glory which Thou gavest Me, I have given them." That glory could not be the Lord's antecedent glory; further, it cannot be the glory in which He will one day come again—his own glory, and that of his Father. Rather, it is the glory with which the Father glorified Him as the Son of Man, for the suffering of death and the saving of men. That glory is given to the Lord's followers, who, therefore, must, in like manner as He did, serve God, show forth God, work for the salvation of men, and be prepared to endure suffering while so engaged. All Christ's true disciples are thus privileged, and their glory is greater than any which the world can bestow. It is the real bond of union between all Christians, as it is also an earnest of the blessed inheritance to which they are called. "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him."

During the second hour Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE presided, and at the outset requested the sympathy and prayers of the meeting on behalf of Mr. Spurgeon in his sad illness. Mr. Olney, senior deacon at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, led the petitions. A message of love was afterwards telegraphed to Mr. Spurgeon at Mentone. Having read Ps. ci., Mr. Pearse made a speech full of practical sense and spiritual instruction. He said that the school we have to concern ourselves most about is not that to which the children go, but that to which they come home. The lessons that are imperishable are the influences of home, rather than its precepts. The health of the children does not so much depend upon the pillars and walls and appointments of the house as upon the atmosphere which pervades it. In the story of the Prodigal Son, it was the memory of the father that saved the boy. The best real estate and personal property to leave our children is a memory of what we are. Coming to himself, the prodigal did not reason: "My father will not receive me; it's no use going home." Rather his memory told him of a father who was saying, "Come home, my lad, come home."

The real school is the home, and the real teacher is the parent. Therefore, we should ask: What is supreme with us? Mr. Pearse went on to speak of worldly ambition as opposed to the life of faith, pointing out, by way of illustration, the sad contrast presented in the lives of Abraham and Lot, as given in Gen. xviii. and xix. They were two righteous men, but while the home of the one became a misery and a curse, that of the other became a brightness and a blessedness unending. He showed how much preferable it is to dwell in a pilgrim's tent which the Lord visits, to sitting among the men of the city and only being visited by angels. Lot's business and other enterprises led him to Sodom, and the consequences were fearful. Isaac grew up to bless his father Abraham; on the other hand, when Lot told his sons-in-law to leave the doomed place, they altogether disregarded him. In conclusion, the speaker urged his hearers to put God first, and let the world and its concerns come on behind.

The audience was an unusually large one.

THURSDAY.

In addressing a fair gathering in the Centenary Hall, on Thursday, Rev. E. A. STUART referred, in passing, to the mutual re-action of home and foreign mission work, the former being the topic of prayer and meditation for the day. Speaking of John the Baptist's action in sending his disciples to Jesus Christ, Mr. Stuart drew the lesson for home mission workers, of pointing men away from the worker to the Master, and also from John's message of repentance to Christ and his atonement. Such moral agencies as temperance and purity effort are good; but they will not of themselves renew and regenerate the man without living contact with the Life Giver. Another lesson deduced from the narrative in Matt. xi. was the necessity of preachers being stable and decided in their own spiritual convictions before they seek to teach others. The same indifference and opposition meet the workers of to-day as presented themselves in the days of our Lord; but let us not be discouraged. Christ is still the friend of publicans and sinners; He still sends out his invitation: "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

The proceedings of the second hour were led by Rev. F. B. MEYER, who read out the subjects for the day, commenting as he read on such special efforts and classes as pastors, lay workers, policemen, sailors, soldiers, pressmen and publishers of literature, temperance work, &c. Here, he said, is a great field for thought and prayer. Let us have prayers by the inch rather than by the yard; and let us be definite, each one, sisters as well as brothers, praying for the thing he or she is most interested in. Among the specific objects thus presented for common petition were Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A.; labour among bankers and men on the Stock Exchange; the fight against the drink evil, and the consequent misery among the little ones (a very pressing and pathetic petition by a sister); work in mission-halls among the outcasts; for the thousands of work girls in the City (also by a sister); for work among the emigrants going abroad in the Jumna, and others who had previously sailed; for the sailors at Miss Hedenström's and all other Homes; also for the conversion of gambling mates and cursing captains, who make it so hard for believing seamen; for all open-air workers; for soldiers and those working among them; for those who are seeking to advance the cause of purity; for policemen, exposed as they are to temptations to bribery and other lapses of duty; for all sufferers in hospitals and elsewhere, and for dying ones.

In his address Mr. Meyer said we must all be thankful for the many great schemes on foot for the amelioration of the condition of the people. But the world will never be saved by big philanthropic enterprises; that can only be compassed by individual conversions. Some practical lessons for workers were deduced from the story of Moses' early life—his failure to redeem his people in his own strength, his forty years' solitary training in the wilderness, and his Divine equipment for the great task of leading the nation into freedom. Those who are prepared to be nothing have taken the first step towards being endowed with power from God—towards being something and doing something for Him.

FRIDAY.

On Friday the petitions were directed towards Missions to Israel, to Moslems, and to the heathen. Mr. W. Hind Smith presided over the meeting for the first hour, and Rev. F. W. BALLER, of the China Inland Mission, delivered the address. China of course was his theme. He related some encouraging facts concerning the progress of Christian effort in the country, and forcibly pointed out how great is the claim which her millions have upon British Christians owing to the shameful manner in which we as a nation have forced upon them the deadly opium. He concluded by saying that China wants only the old theology, and only missionaries who will preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

One of the Misses LEITCH, of Jaffna, then rehearsed some interesting particulars relative to Ceylon. She and her sister have been engaged for seven years in work amongst the Tamils in the northern part of the island. The district in which they reside has a population of 20,000. Every house in the district is open to visitation by the missionaries, who are always welcomed, and listened to with gladness by the people. There have already been cheering results of their labours, but the great harvest time is yet to come. Miss Leitch closed with an earnest call for full consecration to the service of God.

The needs of China and Ceylon, the missionaries of all societies engaged in those and other lands, and the native converts, were borne up in prayer by several brethren and sisters in the assembly.

Mr. Eugene Stock then took the chair, and, after prayer had been offered, introduced Rev. H. D. WILLIAMSON, of the C.M.S., who spoke of the Mission to the Gonds of Central India, to whom attention has recently been drawn in these columns. For nearly ten years Mr. Williamson has been stationed at Mandla, in the very heart of the Gond country, carrying on itinerating work amongst these aborigines. Having his headquarters at Mandla, the missionary goes out on tours lasting for five or six weeks during nine months of the year, camping in the villages through which he passes, and preaching the "glad tidings" as he goes along. For over six years they toiled on without any coming forward for baptism, and not until 1885 was the first convert baptized, in 1886 there were six more, and in 1887 sixteen were added to the Church. A large ingathering of souls in the near future is looked forward to. The area of Mr. Williamson's "parish" is 160 by 130 miles. One often has to travel 100 miles without coming across a missionary in these central provinces, which contain vast numbers of people who are waiting for and ready to receive the Gospel. The ministry of the few who are at work in these parts is being greatly blessed, and converts are constantly being brought out. Mr. Williamson feelingly alluded to the late Bishop Parker, who was working amongst the Gonds when he was called to Eastern Equatorial Africa, where he laid down his life. Out there, in one of the Gond villages, stands the hut which he had built at his own expense, waiting for an occupant who shall carry on the work of evangelising these ignorant aboriginals who lay so near to the heart of the devoted Bishop.

Mr. STOCK announced that at ten o'clock that morning a telegram was received from Zanzibar bringing news that the missionaries in Uganda, Revs. E. C. Gordon and R. H. Walker, had been plundered and expelled from the country, and at the time the messenger left were at Usambiro with Mr. A. M. Mackay and other missionaries. Mr. Stock said it was matter for thankfulness to God that their lives had been spared, and it was astonishing that they had been allowed to remain bearing witness for Christ so long as eleven years. They have left behind them the printed Word of God, which several hundreds have been taught to read, and these in turn will teach others. There is a little church of between 200 and 300 members, a number of whom, it will be remembered, have already sealed their testimony with their blood.

Prayer was offered on behalf of the Gonds and the bereaved native converts in Uganda, and also that the blockading operations on the East Coast of Africa may not be a hindrance to the spread of the Gospel in those parts.

Meetings were also held during the week at Exeter Hall, Mildmay Conference Hall, Wandsworth, and various parts of South London.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

By general consent, the Week of Prayer this year has been more largely attended, more solemn, and accompanied with a deeper sense of blessing than any of its predecessors. Its close was marked by an event of most happy omen, the beginning, let us hope, of a time when Christians, will be filled with a spirit of true unity and love for all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. It has been usual for some years past to close the week with a meeting for prayer on Saturday evening. This year Canon Hoare sent an invitation to the committee of the local branch of the Evangelical Alliance, inviting all to close the solemn gatherings of the week by meeting round the table of the Lord at Trinity Church, and there partaking of the emblems of his dying love.

No more fitting close of a week of united prayer can be conceived, nor could there be any more affecting symbol of oneness in the Lord of all his believing people. Canon Hoare's address on "Christ, full of Grace and Truth," was very solemn and touching, and all left the church with grateful hearts for a week of blessing, and its most appropriate and happy close. It is understood that this was the first united Communion, and that another year the invitation will come from one of the Nonconformist churches.

A CEYLON ORPHANAGE.

ACCORDING to a statement by Rev. S. Langdon, Haputalé, Uva, Ceylon, the number of orphans and destitute children in Ceylon is immense. Many who do not die of starvation are brought up to a life of vice and crime. The ranks of the dangerous classes are largely reinforced from these neglected children. A great need exists in Ceylon for the establishment of Orphanages and Homes, where such children can be trained to habits of honest industry, and have their consciences educated in the fear and love of God.

It appears that something, though comparatively little, is being done in this direction for girls. Mr. Langdon has been moved to endeavour to meet the needs of the boys. He has started at Uva an Industrial Home and School for orphaned lads, with accommodation for some seventy. The Government has granted a reserve of land surrounding the school, in order to train the inmates in agricultural and other industrial pursuits. Mr. and Mrs. Langdon are also arranging for a similar Home and School for Girls at Badulla. Children of all classes and creeds are to be admitted. Mr. Langdon writes to us making an appeal that British Christians should support this effort, which for some years at least cannot be in any degree self-sustaining. We cordially second his appeal. There are many in this land who have business connections with the island of Ceylon, and to them the claim of the neglected orphan comes with a peculiar weight and force.

BOLEYN MISSION AND SCHOOL, EAST HAM.—By this agency the young are disciplined intellectually, and instructed in godliness, while endeavours are also made to commend the Gospel to all men. Open-air preaching and tract distribution are carried on; likewise temperance work and mothers' meetings. Moreover, the poor are befriended, and the needy helped. The hon. superintendent of the Mission is Mr. J. Comley Page, Queen's-square, Upton-park, E.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

THE notorious parish of St. Giles' presents a somewhat altered face now from what it wore a few years ago. Despite, however, the efforts of Board of Works' improvers and social iconoclasts, the needs of its packed population are about as urgent as ever. A public-house does not now occupy each of the seven corners of "The Dials." Many rookeries have disappeared before the march of improvement; but the poor people are still there in apparently undiminished numbers, so that St. Giles remains a fruitful corner of that mission-field which is the world.

The successive murders of a number of unhappy women at the East-end has naturally produced a panic among the class to which they belonged; there has been more or less of an exodus of women from the dreaded purlieus of Whitechapel to other parts of London, St. Giles being one centre of attraction. Perhaps, at such a time, these poor creatures are more than usually amenable to Christian influences. Mr. George Hatton saw there would be rare opportunities in the way of reclamation. That, however, would mean the institution of a new department in the St. Giles's Mission, and a large expenditure of additional funds. Was it not singularly providential, that a Christian friend in the country should perceive the crisis, and the opportunity it brought, without any appeal being made to him? He saw that the cold of winter had set in early, that one class of misguided women were "having a terrible and perhaps a wholesome scare." Thinking that Mr. Hatton's band of workers in St. Giles might take the opportunity of reaching and reclaiming such subjects, if extra supplies were forthcoming, he sent £100 for the purpose. A little later a similar idea occurred to a lady in the north, and she also sent £100 for the same object. Coming in that way, and with such letters as accompanied the gifts, the money was at once a call and a stimulus to action. Mr. Hatton was not the man to lag behind God's leading.

"The Dials" represents the most commanding situation in St. Giles'; and to secure a house there for a mission-station has been the dream of years. At last a quondam public-house and penny-gaff has been secured on advantageous terms in the best possible position. Although a considerable outlay will have to be incurred before the premises can be used, it will be a great acquisition to the work in general, the little theatre being well adapted for an assembly-room. At all events a place of vicious amusement will be transformed into a Christian lighthouse.

On New Year's Day still larger premises were secured in Drury Lane, which will henceforth be used as a temporary Refuge for women. The house is so admirably adapted for the purpose in view that probably fifty beds will be provided, and in case of emergency, a hundred may perhaps be made up at both stations. The spacious old house in Drury Lane belongs to a London company, which favours the work, the terms being thus more advantageous than might otherwise have been the case. In the good providence of God this place of refuge will open a door of hope to many an erring woman who might otherwise yield to despair.

Of course the opening of a Refuge in the very heart of St. Giles, where the class of women sought so thickly congregate, also necessitates another costly provision—a Home in the suburbs where the most hopeful cases can be received, and where temporary employment will be found for them. The girls will be fitted for service, or they will be taught some useful trade.

We are not speaking of the beginning of a work among the particular class of women in question; the house of refuge and the quondam gin-shop of "The Dials" have not been secured merely to try an experiment; the work, which represents a third department of Mr. Hatton's mission, has really been carried on for some time past with very much of encouragement to those engaged in it. Some of the cases have no doubt turned out badly; but numbers are doing very well, by giving satifaction in the situations which have been found for them. It is altogether an enterprise which offers unusual opportunities of reclaiming numbers of unhappy girls. The need of £1000 at the present moment is most urgent, for the purpose of adapting the houses in St. Giles for their new requirements, as well as for the preliminary outlay in connection with the new suburban Home. In a marvellous way good will be brought out of evil, if a crisis which a provincial friend calls "perhaps a wholesome scare" is not allowed to pass without its providential opportunities being seized and turned to account.

Mr. Hatton's address is 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

THIRTY YEARS AMONG THE POOR.

"AFTER labouring for over thirty years among the poor of the East of London, starting and sustaining, with my own money and that of a few personal friends, several religious and philanthropic agencies, their claims have now become so onerous that I am compelled either to leave the work undone, or—for the first time in my life—to make an appeal to the public for help."

Such is the plaintive note with which Mr. G. Hamilton opens his report of work done in connection with the Free Gospel Mission, of which he is the superintendent. It is impossible to gauge accurately the direct benefit which has accrued during all these years to the recipients of aid—bodily and spiritual—from this excellent mission; but it is certain that if it were not for this and others like it, the condition of the East-end poor would be far worse than it is.

Those who live at home and at ease may have little conception of the abject misery with which men like Mr. Hamilton are brought daily face to face; but they may rest assured that their charity will be wisely disbursed, if entrusted to his care.

The principal feature of the work is the free night shelter for women who cannot afford even 4d. for a night's lodging. No bed is provided. A room, a fire, some wooden benches, and the bare boards, constitute the shelter; a cup of tea the refreshment; a slice of bread and butter is added if funds are flourishing. Yet so great is the demand for this scant accommodation that landlord and neighbours complain of the "nuisance." This has led to the securing of a suitable place in Duke-street, Spitalfields, which will be opened as soon as the necessary alterations are complete.

In connection with the work medical treatment also is given, which greatly adds to its efficiency and value. We have not space to record even a few of the heartrending cases which come before Mr. Hamilton—cases of honest misfortune and of decent poverty, as well as of the results of lives of sin. But a perusal of Mr. Hamilton's leaflet will reward the reader. His address is 59, Mile End-road, London, E.

A STIRRING LITTLE GOSPEL BOOKLET has been written by Mr. J. Townsend Trench, entitled. "Compel them to come in" (1d. each, 6s. per 100. Partridge & Co.), the proceeds being devoted to the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, of which the hon. sec. is Captain J. Kearney White, Dublin. The last "Occasional Paper" of this Society draws an historical sketch of England's relationship to Ireland, and pleads for the aid of English Christians to give the word of life to their brethren and sisters in the "Emerald Isle."

FACTORY GIRLS IN MARYLEBONE.

Shaftesbury Institute, Harrow-st., Lissongrove, N.W., is the home and centre of many and vigorous operations for God and humanity, carried on under the direction of Miss Meredith Brown. On Tuesday afternoon a large number of friends assembled, and celebrated the anniversary of the opening of the Institute. A look around in the region was enough to convince any Christian of the great need of efforts such as Miss Brown and her helpers are putting forth. The account rendered at the meeting amply showed that results of a very cheering character have crowned the loving labours of the workers. The chair was occupied by Sir Owen Burne, who, in opening the proceedings, spoke in warm terms of the unselfish devotion of Miss Brown, and commended the Institute to the hearty support of the benevolent public.

Miss Brown described the work in detail. The agencies are many, and devised and conducted with the definite object of winning the weak and erring for Christ. The Home, wherein destitute girls are trained for domestic service, first received attention. Since last January, twenty-two inmates have been received, and some of them are already doing well in situations. What anxieties and disappointments, however, with respect to some who have sought shelter and care! It was most painful to listen to some parts of the story; but, on the other hand, there were also proofs of workings of Divine grace, subduing unruly natures, which delighted all who heard their recital. The message of God has been sympathetically delivered, and the most boisterous and wild have been brought under restraint, and in some cases reduced to that meekness which characterises the new and better life. The Bible-classes are highly appreciated. The girls have often avowed their deep interest in the teachings of Holy Writ, saying, "We never heard the Bible before." Sunday evening meetings are a great success, as are also mothers' meetings, and the regular gatherings of little children. The lads of the district, having nowhere to go when not at work, for a time amused themselves by disturbing the work of the Institute, but afterwards they asked that something should be done for them. The result was the establishment of the Lads' Club, in separate premises adjoining the Institute. There are already sixty members, among whom encouraging Gospel work is also carried on. Miss Brown went on to say that a Working Lads' Institute is a distinct need, and the sooner it can be founded, the better it will be for boys and girls alike. In conclusion, Miss Brown appealed for funds for this good project, as well as for the Institute.

Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser heartily commended the work, and expressed a hope that it would continue to be greatly blessed. Dr. Barnardo followed with some words of congratulation and encouragement. He pointed out that many factory girls need home surroundings at once decent and comfortable. If, in addition to this, ladies can use Christian influence, then a great social want will be met. The meeting was a hearty one, and we trust the outcome will prove very helpful to the work.

FRANCE.—A Protestant place of worship has been opened at Baigne, Charente. The town was first missioned about a year ago by Pasteur Duproix, who has now had the pleasure to establish religious ordinances, which will be supported by a body of earnest witnesses for evangelical truth.

FRENCH FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The January issue of the Journal des Missions Evangéliques hails 1889 as "the year of departures." And such it may well be styled in view of the greatly increased activity of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions. The year will, if the Society's purposes are all realised, see the departure of more missionaries than any previous year. Altogether, in the space of a few months, seven workers will leave for the foreign field—six for different parts of Africa and one for Tahiti.

AT DAWN.

Isa. xxxiii. 2.

Be Thou, my God, mine arm this day,
I am but weak and Thou art strong;
Clouds hang above the winding way,
The road is rough, the road is long.

The road is rough, the road is long,
Be gracious, Lord, I wait for Thee;
The journey through let thy new song
Cheer my faint heart and comfort me.

Cheer my faint heart and comfort me
With promises as vast and wide
As thy great love that, like a sea,
Sweeps round my life a boundless tide.

Sweeps round my life a boundless tide,
Whose healing waters still increase;
So shall I safely by thy side
Pass through the wilderness in peace.

Pass through the wilderness in peace,
Without a fear of any ill;
And every trouble find surcease
Within the circle of thy will.

"BRADFORD'S HOUSE," NORTHAMPTON.

Our readers will doubtless recollect the courageous protest against the election of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh for Northampton, made by Rev. Henry Bradford, of that town. Mr. Bradford's action was resented by a portion of his congregation, with the result that he had to leave the church and congregation in Princes-street. Many friends, on the other hand, showed him sympathy and help, and a new Union Church was erected, of which Mr. Bradford now holds the pastorate. It was then suggested that a residence should be built and presented to this fearless champion of Christian truth, as a recognition of his fidelity, and as a set-off to the loss he had incurred through his outspoken testimony.

This house has recently been finished and formally handed over to Mr. Bradford. With the site, it has cost some £1500, a great part of this sum having been raised by Lady King Hall, whose late husband, Admiral Sir William King Hall, was deeply interested in the Northampton struggle associated with Mr. Bradford's name. We learn that there is yet scope for the practical sympathy of those who appreciate Mr. Bradford's course of action. Any such may communicate with Lady King Hall, The Elms, Sutton Bonnington, Loughborough, Leicestershire.

"THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS."—After a Sailors' Tea, in the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's reading-rooms in Ratcliff Highway, on Thursday last week, a well-attended meeting was held in the adjoining chapel, under the presidency of Mr. H. W. Maynard, to inaugurate the above movement. Rev. G. J. Hill explained that, at the request of many workers, it had been decided to band together seamen and their friends for the purposes of aggressive Christian and temperance work in London and other ports. The aim of the members would be to "shine as lights in the world—holding forth the word of life," so that they might lead sin-imperilled souls to Him who "is a hidingplace from the wind and a covert from the tempest." At the close of the meeting, many enrolled their names as members, including the chairman and Mrs. Maynard, of Wimbledon. An after-meeting was held, at which several seamen were led to the Saviour, and a goodly number signed the temperance pledge. Two new Sailors' Rests have been opened, a steam-launch sustained, and new mission boats have been purchased during the past few months. This increase of expenditure, together with the decease of some of the Society's supporters, has left the Mission very short of funds, which it is hoped will be replenished by charitable Christians.

PERSECUTION IN RUSSIA.

We have already announced the publication of this book, eagerly anticipated in many quarters. Those who know anything of Mr. Stead's keen receptive intellect, and his phenomenal enterprise as a journalist, expected, of course, that he would turn to good account his flying visit to Eastern Europe in the early summer of last year; they have been in no wise disappointed. Readers of The Pall Mall Gazette have had the opportunity of reading a good deal of the matter that makes up his intensely live and readable narration. It does not fall within our province to comment upon the description given in these pages of the present political aspects of European affairs. The writer is a politician of necessity, and has very pronounced views on the questions that bear on the international relations of all the European peoples, as well as the home politics of each. But he is much less a party man than a cosmopolitan and a humanitarian, and that makes his testimony all the more valuable.

That division of the book which deals with the probabilities of "War or Peace" has a very special and immediate interest. Britons may deem themselves pretty secure in the prospects of peace on their sea-girt isle; but they cannot, in any case, contemplate without dismay such a dread eventuality as another European conflict, in view of the tremendous armaments now at the disposal of the Great Powers. We would earnestly second Mr. Stead's appeal to British journalists and statesmen to avoid writing or saying anything that might needlessly "exasperate national animosities and influence prejudices that can only be slaked in blood." If England has it in her power to act to any extent as the peacemaker of the world, nothing could be more criminal on her part than, by unwise alliance or hasty rhetoric, to forfeit such a blessed function.

The section of Mr. Stead's volume that interests us most deeply is Book vi., entitled, "The Shadow on the Throne." It is a very powerful impeachment of the ecclesiastical rulers of the Russian Empire for their persecuting intolerance towards all who do not meekly subscribe to the creed and formularies of the Orthdox or Greek Church, which is the "established" system of religious faith in the realms of the Czar. According to the author, the man who is chiefly responsible for this barbarous régime is M. Pobedonestzeff, "the procureur of the Holy Synod." His influence "overshadows the throne." In the matter of religious freedom and liberty of conscience, Mr. Stead does not hesitate to attribute to this dignitary some of the worst characteristics of Diocletian, Torquemada, and Archbishop Laud. The chapter in this record of intolerant oppression that will excite the greatest attention in England is "The Story of the Pashkoffski." They are the band of evangelical believers of which Lord Radstock is described as the founder. It includes M. Pashkoff, Count Korff, and other persons of good social position in St. Petersburg. Simply because these friends held little prayer-meetings and Bible-readings, and distributed Gospel literature among the people, both the Russian gentlemen we have named were ultimately banished from the country, without opportunity of defence or explanation, and Lord Radstock was forbidden to enter it again.

Mr. Stead terms it "persecution naked and unshamed," but proceeds to show, from the history of the past, the utter futility of this method of suppressing the truth. The Christian Church surely owes a debt of gratitude to the writer of this book for having shed the light of wide publicity on such a discreditable page of contemporary history. It is to be hoped that all who can in any way influence the action of the Russian authorities will seek to instil into them some of the elementary principles of the faith they profess to hold.

We must reserve some remarks on the closing part of Mr. Stead's most interesting book, which deals with the extraordinary teachings of Count Tolstoï, the Russian novelist and revolutionary.

* Truth about Russia. By W. T. Stead. 10s. 6d. Cassell & Co., Limited.

M. FOURNEAU has completed an evangelistic tour in the south-east of France. He spoke forty-seven times in forty-three days, addressing about 12,000 people, Protestants and Catholics, in fifteen different places. In some towns there were distinct indications of revived spiritual activity.

Evangelistic Notes.

Pandy, Monmouthshire.—Mr. H. Bray, of the Evangelisation Society, is conducting united mission services here with evident success.

Mr. H. Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, is holding meetings at Castle Carey, which are well attended. Deep interest is shown, and it is hoped that many conversions will be the result.

Gospel meetings were held each evening during the past fortnight in the Methodist Church, Coleraine, by Mr. James Dixon, a converted soldier, and were well attended, and resulted, it is believed, in blessing to many.

Major Whittle has terminated a most encouraging period of Gospel service in Limerick. The closing meeting in the Theatre was crowded, and many professed to accept Christ. The evangelist labours next at Tralee.

Misses Smith and Bax held a mission at Chichester last month, which was owned of God to the conversion of many. Prayer is asked of our readers on behalf of a mission being held at Tunbridge Wells until the 28th inst.

Mr. J. Knowles, Iron-room, Shoreditch, writes:—Not a year passes but God gives us to see the fruit of our labours. Besides the standing fruit, owing to being kept to "the Word," are shining lights—their neighbours' workshops.

Mr. Henry Smith, Jun., will complete his three weeks' mission at Wingate on Sunday, Jan. 20. He commences a three weeks' mission at Haswell, Sunday, Jan. 27. The meetings at Wingate have been crowded, and many have confessed Christ.

Galashiels.—Evangelistic service were conducted during three weeks in December, by Rev. T. W. Lister, of Leslie, and were largely blessed. During the meetings nearly sixty persons professed conversion, a goodly number of them being children.

Special services have been held at Marlborough Baptist Chapel, for ten days, by Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, assisted by the pastor, Rev. G. F. Owen. The meetings were well attended, and there is every prospect of lasting good being accomplished.

Armscott, Stratford-on-Avon.—A time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord has been experienced by the Methodists here. A mission, conducted by Mr. T. Hickling, of Sheffield, has been greatly blessed, many penitent ones having been brought to Jesus. Now not a few young, middle-aged, and very old people, who were formerly without hope, are rejoicing in the truth.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has held a very successful mission at Jackson, Michigan, U.S.A. The "good-bye" meetings lasted the greater part of an entire day, children as well as grown-up people being addressed. At the close of the evening meeting, all the audience, especially young converts, were invited to cross the platform for a hearty hand-shaking, which Mr. Hammond described as "a rotation inquiry meeting." Occasionally, while this was proceeding, Mr. Hammond stopped young converts, and asked them to relate their experience.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith's mission at Exeter Hall continues to be greatly blessed. Th meetings are largely attended; on Sunday eve ing, several hundreds of people had to be turned away from the doors. As the interes grows, so is the power of God more distinctly recognised in the progress of the mission. The young men's Bible-class has been the means of convicting many of sin, and affording needed light as to the way of salvation. The inquiry-rooms have been filled night after night, and those who have helped have shared the great joy of the evangelists themselves.

Mr. George C. Needham's meetings at Merrion Hall, Dublin, have been largely attended all through, and there has been manifest blessing. For a month Mr. Needham held Gospel meetings every night in the hall (except Saturdays), and in the afternoons gave Bible-readings in the Friends' Meeting House, Eustace-street. These meetings were all richly blest. The meetings for the soldiers and police have been very happy ones, and we believe there has never been one held without evident tokens of the Holy Spirit's work. During one week last month the evangelist held a mission for the R. I. Constabulary. Many of the young men have professed to trust Jesus. Mr. Needham desires prayer that the remainder of his time at Dublin may be even more markedly blessed.

St. Stephen's, Cardiff Docks.—During the past two months special efforts have been made to evangelise the thousands of poor in this desolate part of the town.

Mr. Peek, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, held during last week a successful series of meetings in the Methodist Church, Donoughmore, co. Down. The meetings were well attended, and some were led to the Saviour.

Gospel meetings were held in connection with the Central Presbyterian Association, in Assembly's Hall, Belfast, each evening last week, and were addressed by Revs. Drs. Hamilton, Watts, Robinson, Rogers, and others.

Dr. Pentecost's meetings in Berkeley-street, U.P. Church, Glasgow, are being well attended, and much blessing received. The Sabbath evening meetings are in the large St. Andrew's Hall, and the daily Bible-readings in Free St. Matthews.

Mr. George Clarke.—A correspondent, writing from Melbourne on Nov. 27, says:—We are just having the finishing addresses here from Mr. G. Clarke; his work has been greatly blessed; most wonderful meetings have been held in Melbourne and suburbs.

Evangelistic services, extending over a period of three weeks, have been held in the Methodist Church, Creagh, co. Fermanagh. The meetings were addressed by Revs. E. C. West, W. J. Russell, and Thomas Moran, and a good number professed conversion, and nobly confessed Christ.

Mr. Richard Weaver was to have conducted a mission at the Orphan Home Hall, Glasgow, in connection with Mr. William Quarrier, on week nights, and in the large City Hall on Sabbath nights; we regret to learn that an attack of bronchitis has prevented his fulfilling the engagement.

Restitution.—One of the peculiarities of the Gospel in its effects upon men, when once they have accepted Christ, is that it makes them honest in their dealings man with man. We have been particularly impressed with this in following Mr. Moody's work for twenty years or more. The Gospel is having this same power in the meetings on the Pacific coast, where Mr. Moody is now. Chet. Terry, of opium-smuggling fame, was converted not long since at Victoria, and since then his conscience has been so smiting him that, in order to make restitution, he deeded to Mr. Moody, so says the evangelist, two lots in Port Townsend, valued at 5000 dollars, the result of his illicit work. In return, Mr. Moody will deed them over to the Government.—Chicago Record.

Presbyterian Missions.—A circular letter has been addressed to all the pastors in the London Presbytery, offering the assistance of the Special Committee in conducting evangelistic work in churches or mission halls during 1889. It is now generally considered desirable to have, each year, in every church and mission hall, a series of special evangelistic services. Fully forty ministers connected with London Presbyteries have given their names as willing to conduct either the whole or part of such a series within the bounds of these Presbyteries during this year. Already during this winter there have been special services at Aldershot, Alderney, Kentish Town, Edenbridge, Victoria Docks, Regent-square, and Silverhill, St. Leonards; arrangements are in progress for services at St. John's Wood, Kilburn, Hoxton, Chatham, Canterbury, Haverstock Hill, Wimbledon, Woolston, Forest Hill Mission Hall, and Warrior-square, St. Leonard's.

Mrs. Evered Poole's engagements:—Bishop Waltham, Jan. 25; Christ Church, Kennington-road (Rev. N. Hall's), Jan. 29; Sidcup, Jan. 30, 31, and Feb. 1; Barnstaple, Feb. 8—10; Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill, Feb. 19—25.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following Missions have been arranged for the month of January. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken: to Jan. 21, St. Silas', Liverpool. Revs. W. Hay Aitken and Jas. Stephens: Jan. 26 to Feb. 11, St. John's, Waterloo, Liverpool. Rev. C. I. Atherton: Jan. 20, Exmouth; Jan. 23 to 27, Braunton; Jan. 28 to 30, Berrynarbor; Jan. 31 to Feb. 1, St. Mary Magdalene, Taunton. Rev. R. Catterall: Jan, 19 to 29, St. Anne's, Brindle Heath, Pendleton. Rev. W. E. Cleworth: Jan. 27 to Feb. 4, Maidstone. Rev. J. Cullin: Jan. 20 to Feb. 4, Maidstone. Rev. A. R. D'Arcy: Jan. 19 to Feb. 3, Holy Trinity, Aldershot. Revs. H. Armstrong Hall and W. E. Cleworth: Jan. 19 to 29, Christ Church, Battersea, London, S.W. Rev. R. D. Monro: Jan. 19 to 23, Wick; Jan. 23 to 28, Westwood, Bradford-on-Avon. Rev. Dr. Morris: to Jan. 21, Stapleford, Nottingham; Jan. 26 to Feb. 12, Silloth, Cumberland. Rev. Jas. Stephens: to Jan. 23, Somerby, Oakham. Rev. F. S. Webster: Jan. 19 to 29, Bushbury, Wolverhampton.

OBITUARY.

FATHER GAVAZZI.

THIS eloquent Italian patriot, preacher, and reformer died last week at the age of 80. He was present and spoke briefly at the Pan-Presbyterian Council in Exeter Hall last summer. He was an ardent Romanist for about half of his life, but the reactionary programme of Pope Pius IX. led him to renounce his allegiance. Henceforth he devoted his great rhetorical powers to the advocacy of the Protestant faith, and especially to the building up of the Free Italian Church. We hope soon to give a portrait and sketch of his life.

ED. PETITPIERRE, NEUCHATEL.

M. Edouard Petitpierre, pastor of the Free Church of Neuchâtel, died on the 4th inst., at the good old age of 84. In early life a friend of Ami Bost and Felix Neff; he did excellent service during some years as an evangelist. Since 1836 he has laboured mostly in and around Neuchâtel, where his influence has been great and good. He was a warm worker in connection with the Evangelical Alliance, and an ardent advocate of the cause of evangelisation in Spain. Among his literary productions may be named translations of the biographies of Mr. George Müller and the Brothers Haldane. The Journal Religieux speaks in very high terms of the work and character of the late pastor.

MRS. MORGAN, ROME.

We much regret to learn of the death, on Thursday, last week, after a trying illness, of some weeks' duration, of Mrs. Morgan, a lady well known in the Italian capital as an ardent evangelical worker. In 1883 Mrs. Morgan founded an orphanage in Rome, which two years afterwards was transferred to Farfa. After she opened the institution in the latter place, the work was the object of perpetual persecution by the Romish priests, and about twelve months since it was ordered to be closed at their instigation. This, however, was not carried out. Mrs. Morgan's was a life of constant self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of Christ, and the evangelical work not only in Rome, but in all Italy, has in her removal, says a correspondent, suffered an irreparable loss. She leaves a blank not easily to be filled; but she, being dead, yet speaketh, and her works do follow her.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, JAN. 20.—Gen. IV.

WE notice: The contrast between two different kinds of worship.—Cain deliberately refused the Divine appointment of sacrifice, instituted in Eden; and brought fruit which, however fair and ripe, was only a confession of the Divine creatorship; and failed to acknowledge that he was a sinful man, needing sacrifice, atonement, and forgiveness. Abel, on the other hand, realised his sinnership, and brought the goodliest of his flock, confessing, as he did so, that he deserved to die; but pleading for forgiveness in virtue of the lamb's shed blood, emblem of the richer blood, which was one day to bedew the world (Heb. xi. 4). Still the distinction holds; the Rationalist may profess religion, but it is the religion of Cain, without blood. How contrary to Heb. ix.

The genesis of sin.—When Cain saw the descending fire burn on Abel's altar, the evil of his nature flamed out, for he was of the wicked one. Self-will led to disobedience, that to hatred and jealousy, these to murder, murder to lying, and the imputation of harshness and injustice to God. Beware of the first beginnings of sin; they are like the first drops of an ocean trickling through a sandbank.

The cry of a covered sin.—Abel's blood spoke. It cried to God, as all innocent martyr-blood cries, "How long, O Lord, holy and true" (Rev. vi. 10). And sin, which has not been confessed to God, always cries to God for vengeance; nor will that cry cease till the sinner has fled to the blood of Jesus, which cries for mercy in sweeter, louder tones (Heb. xii. 24). Shelter yourselves under that blood.

The beginning of the division between the world and the Church.—Cain founded a city, where arts, and music, and all that pleased the taste began to flourish. These were the chief objects sought by his children and their descendants. This was "the way of Cain," brilliant but godless, out of the presence of the Lord (ver. 16).

MONDAY, JAN. 21.—Gen. V.

In this chapter we are permitted to walk over one of the cemeteries of the old world, and look at the time-worn monuments on which we can still decipher the ancient names, and the age at which they died. But only the good people are buried here, those of the line of Seth, who in some degree took the place of the martyred Abel. It is sad, however, to notice, that though they were clearly divided from the Cainites, yet they were all tinged with Adam's sin, and its results. Adam was made in the image of God, but he begat Seth in his own likeness, after his image (ver. 3), and so was propagated that bias and tendency towards evil which has passed to every twig in the great tree of humanity. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh."

Mark the monotony of death.—Eight times the bell tolls out the solemn words, "And he died." However long the life, it always succumbed at last to the scythe of death. Methuselah himself at last must follow the generations of his race to the darkness of the grave. And there is one reason, amply sufficient, death passed on all, because all sinned (Rom. v. 12). It is appointed unto all men, and to you, once to die. Prepare to meet thy God!

The possibilities of faith (Heb. xi. 5).—It enabled a poor, weak man, like ourselves, to walk with God, and please Him, for three hundred years, amid the growing darkness and impurity of his times. And if he could, surely we can. Why not resolve henceforth to agree with God, bringing our thoughts and ways into harmony with his (Amos iii. 3). Then let it be the aim of our life to do always those things that please Him, and the Father will never leave us alone (John viii. 29); we shall walk with Him in holy and delightful fellowship (1 John i. 3); we shall be able, like Enoch, to give a bright testimony to the world (Jude 14); and we shall be ready to be translated, so as not to see death, if so be that Jesus comes before we die (1 Cor xv. 57).

The disappointment of human hopes.—An aged pair clasped in their arms an infant boy, and called him Noah (rest); but it was premature, the Deluge was soon to sweep over the world of men. And the weary generations were yet to wait till One should say, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." Our rest cannot come from within, but from above.

TUESDAY, JAN. 22.—Gen. VI.

God only hastened the results of sin.—Many terms are used to indicate the virulence of the disease (vv. 5, 6, 11, 12). So bad was it that ultimately it must have swept the world of men, as small-pox some fair isle in the southern seas. Was it not better to hasten the inevitable result in one sudden act of judgment than let it run out its dismal course of agony? It is kind to forestall the last stages of rabies. Yet how virulent is sin that it could send its poison across the flood in a selected household.

Every means was taken to divert man from his evil way.—God's Spirit strove with man, and though a limit was put to his tender pleadings, yet He plied men with yearning remonstrances, turning away disappointed and grieved at heart (ver. 6). There was also considerable delay; for 120 years the long-suffering of God waited (1 Pet. iii. 20), as it waits for you, though it will not wait for ever; there is a limit (Luke xiii. 9). And in the meanwhile the Ark was a-preparing, and Noah was preaching righteousness (2 Pet. ii. 5).

The character of Noah shines out for our admiration. Just towards man, perfect in wholeheartedness towards God, walking step by step in heavenly fellowship, and yielding implicit obedience to each command (vv. 9, 22). This is the man to whom God tells his secrets concerning coming doom, with whom a covenant is established, and who is permitted to pass over into the world of resurrection; saved himself, and a means of salvation to others. Let that character be thine!

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 23.—Gen. VII.

What a flood was this! They climbed to the highest storey of their towers in vain, then to the hills, but the greedy waters followed them in their flight, and hemmed them in, driving close together into smaller groups men, women, children, and wild beasts that crouched with fear, or fought for the highest crag, till this also was covered, and all was still, as the last cry was lost amid the moan of the breaker and the pitiless downpour of rain.

Equally certain and unexpected shall be the final judgment which shall close the present age.—"As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the Son of Man" (Luke xvii. 26). In those days there was no sign of a millennium, sin and lawlessness held undisputed sway, one faithful heart alone beat true to God. Nor shall the Son of Man find it otherwise when He comes. His advent shall startle the children of the world in their wine-parties, their balls, their brilliant theatres, their studios of art and music. Men think it cannot be; they argue from the unbroken course of nature. But the course of nature was broken once by the baptism of water, and it shall be again by the baptism of fire (2 Peter iii. 7).

The safety of the inmates of the ark.—God said, Come in: He was inside. The invitation included all Noah's household. God does not wish us to be saved alone. Seven days before the Deluge came they entered, amid the loud laughter and mockery of the world, to which Noah had often preached. But no one, not even of the builders, went with them. And the Lord shut the door behind the last that entered. And when once the Master has shut the door there is no further hope of entrance, neither shall any surge of trouble or judgment break through, though the roar of the billow be heard without (Rev. iii. 7). Are you inside God's Ark? If not, make haste. What saved Noah? The ark, or his feelings about it? Certainly, the ark. So are we saved, not by our feelings about Christ, but by his free grace. And in the ark the mouse was as safe as the lion.

THURSDAY, JAN. 24.—Gen. VIII.

Traditions of the Flood are found in every land, from the tablets of Babylon to the rude carvings of the Aztecs. Nothing has ever left so profound an impression on the heart of man as this stupendous act of judgment, and the universal tradition attests the truth of Scripture. Never since then have men been ignorant of the mind of God against sin.

The mindfulness of God (Ps. cxi. 11).—"God remembered Noah." The floods have been descending on your life, but He has not forgotten you, nor can He. He sees the peril, and counts the tears of his saints. Though He tarry long, He will interpose and deliver (Isa. xliv. 21; xlix. 15), and the tossing ark shall at last come to rest.

The mission of the birds.—Noah's window looked upward only for fellowship; it had no outlook on the world, so he sent forth the winged couriers to bear him tidings. The interval of seven days marks a Sabbath-keeping even in the ark. Surely if they kept it there, it is possible anywhere. The unclean raven found its food and home amid the débris of the flood. But the gentle dove found no rest in such scenes, and in this recalls the renewed heart which sighs for rest in vain, till the hand of Jesus takes it in unto Himself.

The descent on resurrection ground.—Through the waters of death and judgment Noah sailed in the ark, and finally, when the face of nature emerged, green and smiling, beautiful as when Eden lay under the blessing of God, he stepped out into a new heavens and a new earth, in which dwelt righteousness. Then, of the clean animals, which, for purposes of sacrifice, he had taken in larger numbers (vii. 2), he offered a burnt offering. We who believe in Jesus have in Him travelled across from the old world that lies under God's curse, the world of the flesh; we have passed to the windward of the storm; we are the children of the resurrection. Let us live as such.

FRIDAY, JAN. 26.—Gen. IX.

It is very remarkable to meet here (ver. 4) the clear prohibition against the use of blood in food which is so often afterwards repeated on the page of Scripture (Lev. xvii. 11, and Acts xv. 35). And the reason is clearly given, that the blood is the life. Is not this what we mean when we speak of the precious blood of Jesus Christ—that He laid down his life for us? The blood maketh atonement for the soul.

The value of human life (ver. 5).—If an ox gored a man, or any beast of prey slew him, it was to be killed. The brother of a murdered man was to require the blood of the murderer. The lower creation might be freely used for food (ver. 3), but human life was surrounded by the most solemn sanctions. This would correct any thought begotten by the destruction of the Deluge that God was prodigal of human life.

The covenant (ver. 11).—How much grace there was in it. It depended on no condition from man's part, but originated and was maintained in the unmerited mercy of God. Its sign was the rainbow. When you see a rainbow, recall God's pledge, so that you may think the same thing as God; then think of another covenant, true of the spiritual seed of Abraham (Is. liv. 9, 10). We see only half here, but the rainbow in heaven is a complete circle (Rev. iv. 3).

Noah's sin reminds us how weak are the best of men; liable to fall, even after the most marvellous deliverances. The love of drink will drag a preacher of righteousness into the dust. Let us only drink "to the glory of God," then we shall be delivered from this temptation, and not tempt others. And if our brethren sin, let us not parade or tell their faults, but cover them with the mantle of Divine love. Hating the sin, but seeking to save the sinner (Gal. vi. 1).

SATURDAY, JAN. 27.—Gen. X.

It is very necessary to read this chapter carefully, in order to understand the references to foreign nations made in after Scriptures; and it will well repay the earnest student to trace the spread of mankind over the world, with aid of Bible dictionary and map. Over the whole, let us write, "God loved the world."

Gentiles cannot but find a deep interest in this first mention of their name (ver. 5). And, in these old terms, learned ethnologists have found traces of much that exists around us still. Gomer is Celt; Javan is Greece; Tubal is Tobolsk; Ashkenaz probably Saxon; Tarshish is Spain; Kittim may even be the British Isles. These are those "other sheep" of which the Good Shepherd spoke; and it is sweet to feel that God keeps a list of his prodigal children.

In the enumeration of the children of Ham, we meet the first mention of Nineveh, and specially of Babylon. From this place to Rev. xviii. this name continually recurs, and it is always hostile to the people of God. She is Satan's counterfeit of the Church of God. She exists still in the world around us; and Babylonish garments tempt us, as they did in the days of Achan; whilst many of God's children are betrayed into worse than Babylonish captivity. Note in 16—18 the progenitors of the seven nations of Canaan, so often referred to in Joshua. Nimrod, the mighty hunter, probably hunted men, the forerunner of the terrible slave-drivers of Central Africa.

But the main interest centres about Shem and his children, because there we strike the origin of that marvellous line of witnesses for the truth, which gave to the world an Abraham, a Moses, an Isaiah, a Paul, and, above all, Jesus Christ, as to his human nature. (Rom. ix. 4). F. M.

HEALING THE LEPER.

MARK i. 35—45. GOLDEN TEXT: MARK i. 42.

THE previous day had been one of unceasing and exhausting toil for the Saviour, but ver. 35 tells how the following day began. "In the morning."—This was the Lord's time for prayer. The days were too busy, the throng too soon pressed upon Him and demanded his attention; but prayer was not crowded out. Rest and refreshment after previous labour could be found, not in prolonged sleep, but in early prayer. McCheyne's advice to meet with God before having intercourse with men needs repeating. Our Lord began the day thus (Isa. l. 4). "A desert place."—"One of the bare and barren spots stretching away north or west from Capernaum."—Morison. He felt the need of a secret place of prayer, such as He has recommended to us (Matt. vi. 6). Free from the thronging crowd, in a spot where interruption was unlikely, He found his place of prayer. There is no lesson more worthy our attention than that suggested by our Lord's habit of prayer. What He was, and what He did before men, was intimately connected with his communion with God. He worked much because He prayed much. His own spirit was kept in freshness and vigour because contact with men was always followed by prolonged contact with God. "He spake as never man spake," because He prayed as never man prayed. It was his praying the disciples noticed so particularly, hence their desire (Luke xi. 1). Let every teacher imitate Him in his habit of prayer.

The work of another day began early (36—39). "Simon," already to the front, led Andrew, James, and John, "they that were with him," in search of Jesus. "All men seek for Thee." Though so early, the crowd had already gathered. Peter's estimate of the value of this crowd was very different from the Lord's. Jesus did not mistake popularity for true success. Note: (1) How the conduct of Jesus was determined.—"To this end came I forth" (38). He never lost the consciousness that He was sent on a Divine mission, and He kept in view the end for which He had come. He was thus free to disregard the voice of the crowd, because He was obedient to his Father's authority. To itinerate, preaching the word, not to make Himself popular, was the Lord's work. Note: (2) The important position assigned to preaching (38, 39).—"Casting out devils" is secondary. A mere miracle-worker may excite the wonder of a gaping crowd, but does not necessarily leave any permanent blessing. Miracles were only signs by which the Lord's Divine mission was authenticated, and were intended to secure hearers for his word. He still has "the words of eternal life" (John vi. 68). To receive his words by faith is to possess eternal life (John v. 24).

The miracle of healing the leper is particularly important and instructive. The disease in its severest forms was most terrible and loathsome. "The symptoms of white leprosy are sufficiently described in Lev. xiii. When the disease is decided in its character, it is either rapidly cured, or else spreads inward. In the former case there is a violent eruption, so that the patient is white from head to foot (Lev. xiii. 12; 2 Kings v. 27); in the latter case the disease progresses slowly, and the symptoms are equally distressing and fatal, ending in consumption, dropsy, suffocation, and death. No remedy was known for the disease itself; the leper was declared unclean, and excluded from intercourse with all other persons. He had to wear the prescribed mourning garment (Lev. xiii. 45), but was permitted to associate with other lepers. Their abodes were commonly outside the city walls (Lev. xiii. 46; Num. v. 2); but they were allowed to go about freely."—Lange. To heal such a disease was a miracle of mercy, and our Lord properly included it among those evidences of his Messiahship sent to John the Baptist (Matt. xi. 5). As Lange also points out, "This kind of healing especially has a symbolical character. In the Old Testament leprosy was an image of sin, and purification from leprosy a type of the forgiveness of sins." We must not lose sight of its symbolical character in studying this incident.

Valuable lessons are suggested by—

(1) The leper's approach to Jesus.—He came reverently. "Kneeling down" (40); Matthew says, "worshipped"; Luke, "he fell on his face." Was it not becoming that one physically and ceremonially unclean should be conscious of his unworthiness? But remember that sin is spiritual leprosy, of which the physical disease is only a type. With equal humility let us draw near. He came earnestly—"beseeching Him" (40). He was deeply conscious of his wretched and loathsome condition, and was in earnest in desiring its removal. Listless seeking obtains no spiritual blessing. Regard salvation from the leprosy of sin as all-important, and seek for it "as for hid treasures" (Prov. ii. 4, 5). He came acting the faith that he had. It was not perfect, yet it was no light thing to be able to say, "If Thou wilt, Thou canst." To believe that Jesus was able to heal such a disease was to attribute to Him Divine power. So, believing that He could, He threw himself upon the will of Christ. Do that in seeking spiritual cleansing. Act the faith you have, and you will find reason for trusting Him further. But leave out the "if" in seeking pardon, for we know that "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7).

(2) The act of healing, 41—42.—"Moved with compassion." This was the feeling excited by this loathsome disease, and this equally moves Him in saving sinners. Our hope lies in that He is "full of compassion." Even those who loathe themselves and are loathed by others may be sure of His compassion. He loves, therefore He saves. "Touched him"—only He could do so without being defiled. It brought Him into contact with the disease, which fled from His touch. Has He not "touched" us as sinners—becoming still more closely identified with our sin? He even bore it—(2 Cor. v. 21)—and though He died beneath the burden, yet thus He put it away. "Saith unto him," &c.—By his word the cleansing was effected. The leper was healed the moment he received the Saviour's word. Precisely so does He save from sin. His compassion led Him to die for us, but the salvation is communicated to us only through his word. Between receiving his word and being saved there is not a moment's delay.

(3) What followed the healing? (43—45).—"Straitly charged him."—R.V. says "strictly," and margin "sternly." Our Lord claims authority over those He heals; and, though the command was contrary to the man's own idea, yet he would have helped the Saviour by obedience to it. To be silent for Jesus is as important under some circumstances as to speak for Him under others. "Show thyself to the priest." This was according to the Divine ordinance (Lev. xiv.). Every appointment of God was deemed holy by Jesus. He came not to destroy, but to fulfil (Matt. v. 17, 18). An example for imitation by those who are saved. There are ordinances appointed for his people—do not neglect them. "Was without in desert places" (45).—The man's mistaken zeal hindered the Saviour's work. We need re-straint, as well as con-straint. Love must not only inspire us with zeal, but his word must wisely direct our service, otherwise we may prove hinderers.

Sunday Afternoon, January 27.

FORGIVENESS AND HEALING.

MARK ii. 1—17. GOLDEN TEXT: PS. ciii 3.

EXPLANATORY.—"Capernaum" (1), called by Matthew "his own city," because He lived there with his mother and his brethren (Mark iii. 31, 32). "The house"—probably either that in which He lived, or Peter's (i. 29.) "Not so much as about the door" (2).—If the house was of the humbler class, it consisted mainly of one apartment, into which the door directly opened, so that the crowd by the door would see and hear the Saviour. "Uncovered the roof" (4).—Morison says: "The cottages of the mass of the people are very humble, low-roofed, one-storied residences... With a little agility, and, if need be, with some simple appliance far less elaborate than the application of a ladder, there would be no difficulty at all in getting on to the flat roof." Dr. Robinson describes the roofs as consisting of large beams, then joists, and across these small poles or brushwood, and earth or gravel rolled hard on the top." In this case tiles seem to have been used in place of the brushwood (Luke v. 19). Dr. Thomson says: "The roof is only a few feet high; and by stooping down, and holding the corners of the couch, they would let down the sick man without any apparatus of ropes or cords to assist them." "Bed" (ver. 4), a mat easily folded up and carried (vv. 11, 12); or Thomson says: "A padded quilt." "Scribes" (ver 6). See Luke v. 17. They were there as spies, not as learners. "Levi" (ver. 14), called Matthew. He became an Apostle, and was the writer of the first Gospel. Probably the name was changed when he became a disciple of Jesus, as was the case with Simon. "Receipt of custom" (14), "place where custom was levied, toll-house, custom-house, collector's office."—Lange. "Sat at meat" (ver. 15), reclined. "His house," i.e., Levi's. "Publicans and sinners" (ver. 16). The mention of the two together shows how publicans were regarded. It was a degrading, but lucrative calling.

LESSONS are many and valuable. Learn—

(1) From the friends of the palsied man.—They were men of faith (5). Their confidence in the healing power of Jesus prompted their action. Faith worked by love. They could not heal their friend, but they could carry him in his helplessness to the great Healer. Our faith can only help others by working to bring them into contact with Jesus. Their earnestness and perseverance are deserving of all praise. Finding no access by the door, they defied all propriety, and made an entrance by the roof. Neither the fear of interrupting the Saviour's teaching, nor of annoying the people who heard, deterred them. For those whose spiritual distress needs the Saviour let us learn to do a similar work. We have not done what we could, unless we have brought them within sound of the Saviour's word.

(2) The man himself.—Helpless with palsy, he was also distressed in mind because of sin. Hence the Saviour's first word, "Be of good cheer" (Matt. ix. 2). He perhaps saw some connection between his sin and his disease, and so was eager not only for healing, but for pardon. He was probably young, as the Saviour calls him "child" (ver. 5, R.V., margin). His faith was included in ver. 5, and was probably not less than his friends'. Their earnestness and perseverance were no doubt inspired by his. A youth, consciously guilty and needy, coming to Jesus, is an example calculated to help our scholars.

(3) The Saviour's power to read the secrets of the heart.—"He saw their faith," not only what was done, but why. He saw behind the physical disease to the mental distress on account of sin, and recognised the desire for pardon. He saw also the thought in the heart of the Scribes (ver. 8). How important to remember Heb. iv. 13. Every thought is known to Him.

(4) Forgiveness of sins.—The importance of this blessing above even bodily healing. It is better to have a saved soul in a diseased body than a sinful soul in a body full of health. Seek first this blessing of the kingdom (Matt. vi. 33). The inability of man to forgive sins is suggested by the Scribes' complaint. They were right in saying that a mere man would be blaspheming if he pretended to forgive sin. No man, no priest dare arrogate to Himself this Divine prerogative. Sin is committed against God, and only He can pardon it. Priestly absolution is a snare. Divine forgiveness alone can satisfy. The power of Jesus to forgive sins is proved by this miracle. He accepted the Scribes' challenge. To say either sentence in ver. 9 was easy. But if the Saviour heals by his word, then He proves Himself possessed of Divine authority to speak the word of pardon. The forgiveness of sin was an invisible work, what proof had they that He had not spoken empty words? The proof contained in the miracle that followed. Thus the healing of the palsied man served many purposes. It was not only a physical blessing to the man himself, but accredited to him the forgiveness Jesus had previously spoken; while it was enough also to convince the adversaries of Jesus. Let it not be forgotten that the power to forgive sins then was in view of the atonement which was to follow. God is righteous, even in exercising mercy (Rom. iii. 26). Note also that the pardon is communicated by the word of Jesus. The written word now, as the spoken word then, gives us the assurance of pardon. Hence to us, as to the paralytic, the blessing comes by faith (Acts x. 43).

(5) The call of Levi suggests that Jesus finds his followers among all classes. None were deemed less worthy, none were more despised and hated, yet more than one honourable disciple of Jesus had belonged to that class. The disciple is to "follow Jesus" (14), John xii. 26. Faith that does not lead us to imitate Him will not satisfy Him. We are saved the moment we believe; we evidence our salvation by following Him.

(6) Levi's ready response (ver. 14) is worthy of our imitation. "He arose and followed." And he was ready to confess the Saviour too. Was not the feast which followed, and to which Jesus was invited as a guest, a bold act of confession? And was it not also a laudable attempt to bring some of his fellow publicans into the same salvation?

(7) Our Lord's word in reply to the Scribes and Pharisees is most encouraging: "Not the righteous, but sinners." Consciousness of guilt does not disqualify us, but is a necessary qualification for coming to Christ. Don't try to make yourselves good in order to come to Him. Your sin, not your righteousness, is the point of contact between you and the Saviour.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. A. H. Kelk, of the London Jews' Society, reports the baptism of three Israelites in Christ Church, Mount Zion, Jerusalem, on October 28, and the baptism of an Artouf Jew on Christmas Day.

The bishops who attended the Lambeth Conference last summer have now nearly all returned to their dioceses. Dr. Thornhill Webber, Bishop of Brisbane, was one of the latest to leave. Before his departure, a farewell service was held in the church of St. John, Red Lion-square, London, of which parish he was for many years the vicar.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

John G. Whittier reached his 81st birthday on the 17th ult. Many friends and neighbours called to pay him their respects, and a large number of congratulatory telegrams and letters were received.

English Friends will learn with regret that Henry Stanley Newman has been obliged to suspend for a few months his vigorous and successful work in America on account of poor health. He is expected home this week, but hopes to return in the spring and resume his greatly appreciated and useful services among the American Friends and people.

On the 4th inst. the new Friends' meeting-house was opened in Cardiff. It is a handsome structure, capable of holding about 500 people, and will be well used. The opening meeting was well attended, and successful. Joseph Storrs Fry, clerk of the Yearly Meeting, gave a most appropriate and able address, and local Friends also spoke. Wm. W. Brown, the chairman and treasurer, intimated a debt of £250 or so, which Friends are anxious to clear off. Frederick Sessions has since given two lectures to very interested audiences on "The Teachings and Work of the Society of Friends," and a successful adult school tea-meeting has also been held.

METHODIST.

Cheering news has been received from the Bible Christian missionaries in China; several Chinese converts have recently been baptized.

Wesley Chapel, Leeds, says The Methodist Times, is to become at once the centre of an earnest evangelistic movement. The authorities of the chapel have decided to make strenuous efforts to reach the population that encircles the building.

In the Brixton-hill Circuit, London, the first number has appeared of a local Wesleyan magazine. The Wesleyan is to be a monthly devoted to the interests of the churches of that Connexion at Brixton-hall, Roupell-park, Streatham, and West Norwood.

At the last Quarterly Meeting of the Wesleyans at Shepton Mallet, Somerset, a letter was read from Rev. J. B. D'Aguilar, vicar of Ashwick, Bath, referring to the good work done by the Methodists in his parish, and enclosing a cheque for ten guineas as an annual subscription to the circuit funds.

The new steam-launch for the use of the Primitive Methodist missionaries on the West Coast of Africa has been despatched from Liverpool. The name of the launch is La Paz, the Spanish for "Peace." The use of this steamboat will save the missionaries much exposure and danger on the West African coast.

A blessed work for God is going on at New Surrey Chapel. Souls have been converted every week since it was opened. The pastor, Rev. B. Senior, gave a welcome to thirty new members into the church on Sunday week. The Wednesday midday prayer-meeting and the other special meetings are full of blessing.

Glowing accounts of the work in West London, under the direction of Revs. Hugh Price Hughes and Mark Guy Pearse, continue to be published. A report of a recent Sunday evening service says:—"At night St. James's Hall was densely crowded, and the power of God was present to heal. There were several conversions of special interest."

Many Wesleyan circuits are coming to be affected by the "Forward Movement," and everywhere methods are being adapted to the surroundings. In important centres large halls are being occupied with surprising results. Unwieldly circuits are being divided, and in rural districts places which have been abandoned for years are being reopened.

Evangelism is being actively promoted throughout the United Methodist Free Churches body. Rev. Alfred Jones reports that four evangelists are already employed by the Connexion, and a fifth is about to be engaged. The reports of missions held are of a most encouraging character; the churches have been greatly revived, and a large number of conversions have taken place.

Speaking at a recent meeting of Mission Bands at Great Queen-street Chapel, London, Rev. Thomas Champness, in the course of a rousing speech, said that when he thought of the drunkenness, uncleanness, and gambling of this world, he said to himself, it was time they had singing bands for Christ. In their methods of adaptation they must endeavour to imitate the organisation of the wicked one. "It is," cried Mr. Champness, "more difficult to get into a chapel than into the public-house. Is it to be easier for a man to go to hell than to heaven? Never, if I can help it! Let not politicians exceed us in enthusiasm."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill will be inducted at Regent-square Church on February 28.

Rev. Dr. Mathews, the general secretary of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, has settled at 25, Christ Church-road, Brondesbury, London, N.W., which for the present will be the office of the Alliance, where all communications should be addressed.

Rev. William Wright, D.D., of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has undertaken to conduct, for the present, the Sunday services in Belgrave Presbyterian Church, Halkin-street West, and will give a course of evening lectures, made specially interesting by illustrations drawn from his personal knowledge of Bible lands.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist last week announced that this week they will commence a symposium upon the subject of "The dead: where are they?" The first contribution will be by Dr. Culross, and will have special reference to "the dead in Christ." Dr. Clifford and other well-known writers will follow.

A church has been formally constituted at Primrose-hill, Huddersfield, as the result of a mission carried on for several years by the church at Lockwood. Rev. John Longson, who has had charge of the station for five years, was appointed pastor; 110 members were transferred from the parent church, and on Sunday six were baptized.

The Oxford correspondent of The Baptist reports a remarkable season of revival at Littlemore, one of the mission stations in connection with the New-road Baptist Church, Oxford. At Headington, another station, a similar movement is in progress. A special effort has also been made at the St. Thomas's station, in the lowest part of the city, where the Lord's hand has been manifest.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Frederick Hastings, of Tolmer-square, London, has decided to accept the invitation to the pastorate of the Congregational Church at North Adelaide, South Australia, where the late Rev. Samuel Hebditch, formerly of Clapton, for some time ministered.

The annual meeting of the congregation of Mount View Chapel, Stroud Green, N., was held last week. Rev. E. D. Braimbridge, the pastor, said that though the church had been formed but eight months, it has 150 members, while nearly 300 children are receiving Scriptural instruction in the Sunday-school.

Rev. Charles Phillips, of the London Missionary Society, late of Apia, Samoa, has accepted a call to take charge of the church at Graaff-Reinet, Cape Colony, and purposes to set sail for South Africa about the end of February. The church was founded by the London Missionary Society, but is now self-supporting.

Rev. Stanley Rogers, in his New Year letter to Westminster-road Church, Liverpool, declares that there has been a vast reformation in that city during the last ten years, especially in regard to intemperance. He proceeds: "All the churches of the city are more or less catching the new spirit of aggressive effort which has lately been excited amongst us."

The Congregational Church at Carnforth, Lancashire, a town with a population of a little over 1000, seems, says The Christian World, to be blessed with a very energetic pastor, Rev. J. Harrison. Connected with it are two mission stations. During the past year, although for one month his labours were interrupted by illness, he has delivered 179 sermons and addresses, and made 1112 pastoral visits.

At Argyle Chapel, Bath, on December 30, Rev. T. Stephens preached from 1 Cor. vii. 29—31, and incorporated in his discourse passages from a sermon preached from that text by the late Rev. Wm. Jay fifty years before. Mr. Jay mentioned on that occasion that he had taken the same text thirty years previously. A new departure in the services at Argyle Chapel is a short sermonette to children, lasting five or ten minutes.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

At the Female Bible Mission, Kilmarnock, all the speakers bore testimony to the good work steadily and quietly done by Miss Glover, who has been employed for many years in carrying the Bible message to the homes of the poor, the sick, and the dying. She also conducts mothers' meetings and working girls' classes.

Rev. W. J. Dawson has held a series of services for young men in Glasgow, which have excited widespread interest, and have resulted in much good. St. John's Wesleyan Church was crowded on each occasion. The congregations consisted mainly of young men, including all grades, from artisans to University students.

On Friday evening last the annual meeting of the workers, in connection with the Cowcaddens Free Church, was held. Rev. William Ross, pastor, said that there were 404 workers engaged; forty-five more had been added during the year. Their Sabbath-schools were doing splendid service, and in the Bible-class there were 412 on the regular roll.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

All the ministers of the Irish Presbyterian Church were expected to preach in their respective churches last Lord's Day, on the subject of Systematic Beneficence.

Mr. J. Townsend Trench contributes a valuable article on the "Greek Tenses in Bible Teaching" to the current issue of the Irish Christian Advocate. He shows that the various shades of meaning involved in the different tenses of the Greek verb have much to do with a proper understanding of the teaching of the New Testament.

Mr. George Clarke's visit to Belfast, next month, is looked forward to with great interest, and, already, vigorous preparations are being made for his coming.

Interesting meetings for prayer and praise were held each day last week, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Belfast, and were well attended by ministers and members of the various Protestant denominations.

DEATHS.

At Dublin, Rev. Alfred Hackett, late incumbent of Strokestown.—At Armoy, co. Antrim, suddenly, Mr. J. Moore Knox, an attached member of the Presbyterian Church.—Rev. C. J. F. Morton, vicar of Goole, Yorkshire.—Rev. J. Sidney Hall, until lately minister of the Congregational Church in The Grove, Sydenham, Kent.—Mr. James Lauchbury, superintendent of the Chorlton-on-Otmow Mission Station, in connection with New-road Baptist Church, Oxford.—Rev. F. Silvester, pastor of Bethel Chapel, Elmgrove, West Norwood.—Mr. William Pretty, sen., of Ipswich, a gentleman well known in Methodist circles as a Christian merchant and philanthropist.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

It is stated that there are 4000 pledged abstainers amongst the 14,000 cabmen in London.

All the inspectors in Aberdeenshire have reported most favourably of the effects of the Early Closing Act.

Five English brewers who died last year left fortunes amounting to considerably over a million and a quarter of money.

In London between the closing of "theatrical" and the opening of "market" public-houses there is but a single hour.

A drink map of Manchester, published by the Manchester Guardian, shows that there is one house licensed to sell liquors for every twenty-five families throughout the city.

The Congregational Abstainer, the new monthly organ of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association, is bright and attractive. We wish it health and long life. A good likeness of the late S. Morley adorns the title page.

The Edinburgh Committee of the British Women's Temperance Association has forwarded to the London Secretary for Britain, of the World's Women's Temperance Union, 15,086 women's signatures, inhabitants of Edinburgh, to their petition for the total prohibition of the liquor traffic. They have also forwarded smaller petitions from various other places, in all 17,686 signatures.

Mrs. Maclagan, wife of the Bishop of Lichfield, has been speaking against the so-called moderate drinking of some female members of the Church of England Temperance Society. It requires, she said, an effort of self-denial to be an abstainer, but the advantages are incalculable. She was fifty-two years of age, and thought herself a pretty good total abstinence advertisement. There was, she added, no woman in Lichfield slept better, or did more work.

FOREIGN.

The International Temperance Convention at Melbourne was an enthusiastic success.

The diminution of the spirit traffic with the Niger territories consequent on restrictions enforced by the company has been more than made up by an increase in trade in useful manufactured articles.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., recently delivered an address at Calcutta in which he severely criticised the Indian excise laws. He declared that the increase in the revenue was undoubtedly due to a greater consumption of alcoholic liquors, and not to a better system of collecting the duties.

APPLEDORE, NORTH DEVON.—In September last a Sailors' Rest was opened here. It met a much-felt want, and has since been the means of blessing to many seafaring men. Drunkards have been induced to leave their old ways, and in other respects great good has been done. The local police have observed the improvement in public behaviour, and reported that during the past Christmas holidays the place enjoyed an unusual tranquillity.

IRELAND.—A correspondent writes:—"We hear of a willingness on the part of the Roman Catholics in Ireland to hear and receive the Word of God such as perhaps there has never been before. Missions are being held all over the country, with manifest tokens of blessing. One cannot but feel that if Christians, irrespective of political prejudices, would unite in prayer for Ireland, we should soon see the result in the extension of vital Christianity, and with it a change in the moral and material condition of this stricken land." Another well-informed correspondent writes:—"The Roman Catholic movement in Ireland is wonderful. I have been investigating. The day of her visitation in mercy is nigh. My heart is cheered with such grand tokens of coming good."

The People's Bible Union, 1889.

BRANCH FOR MEN, YOUNG MEN, AND WOMEN.

This Union is arranged in short passages especially adapted to the capacity of our working people; and is an attempt to get them into the habit of daily Bible Reading. It is suitable for members of Men's, Young Men's, and Women's Bible Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Sunday Morning Schools, and Domestic Servants. Will those interested in any of the above who would like to have a specimen Calendar, containing the Daily Passage and Practical Notes upon the Passage, send a stamped envelope, with address, saying which Branch is required, to

The Rev. HERBERT H. DIBBEN,
THE RECTORY, BRIERLEY HILL, STAFFS.

Last year was our first year of issue, and we enrolled over 700 members, and started over 40 Branches, and received many testimonials of the benefit and need of this Union.

In order to meet the convenience of many desirous of visiting his Institutions,

DR. BARNARDO proposes (D.V.) to be AT HOME every TUESDAY AFTERNOON during this Winter, between the hours of 2 and 6 o'clock, when anyone can see him and inspect the Homes without making a previous appointment.

THE STEPNEY HOMES are also open for inspection on the afternoon of every other week-day (except Saturday, when no one can ever be admitted). But Dr. Barnardo hopes it will be remembered that the great pressure of the work in his hands compels him to announce that he cannot personally see visitors on any other day, except Tuesday, save by appointment, made and confirmed beforehand.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made, by which Visitors, calling at Stepney on the afternoon of any week day (except Saturday) can not only see the Boys Engaged at Work at their various Trades, but may also inspect "HER MAJESTY'S HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN," in Stepney Causeway, "THE LABOUR HOUSE FOR DESTITUTE YOUTHS," in the Commercial Road, "LEOPOLD HOUSE HOME FOR LITTLE BOYS," in the Burdett Road, and "THE EDINBURGH CASTLE MISSION HALL AND COFFEE PALACE." A private Omnibus will convey Visitors (free of expense) to any or all of these Branches from Stepney, situated only a few minutes' distance from each other.

THE STEPNEY HOMES are easily reached from any part of London, thus:—By Train from Fenchurch street, or North London Railway Stations to Stepney Station; By Omnibus from Charing Cross and the Bank to Stepney Causeway; Or by Metropolitan Railway to Aldgate, thence by Poplar Tramcar (yellow) to Stepney Causeway.

C. J. VAN HOUTEN & ZOON.—WEESP-HOLLAND.

RHEUMATISM AGAIN.

A FEW weeks ago we considered the enquiry, "Is Rheumatism Curable?" and facts were quoted which abundantly proved its amenability to Magnetic Treatment. Since writing, the following remarkable testimony has been voluntarily confirmed up to date, and, with a brief preface, it will tell its own story.

Mr. W. Noakes, Mucking, Essex, had suffered 8½ years from Sciatica, and failed to obtain relief from hospitals or private practitioners. Through the influence of a friend he sought Mr. Garratt's advice, and after a few months' treatment he reported improvement to an extent which enabled him to follow a light employment. A year later he furnished an account of his progress, saying:—

"I am much better than I have been for a very long time. I am able to follow my occupation on the farm, and can work as well as other men. Harvesting tried me considerably, but I got over it comfortably because I could rest when I got to bed, whereas formerly rest was impossible. Doubtless had I sought your advice before my complaint got so severe, I should not have lost a single day's work through it."

Subsequently, Mr. Noakes laid his sister's case before Mr. Garratt. She had been suffering eight years from chronic Rheumatism, and could not walk across a room unaided. All other remedies having failed, Magnetism was tried as a last resource. Mr. Garratt did not give much encouragement, but after eleven months' treatment the following came to hand:—

December 2, 1887.—"I have recently seen my sister, and am pleased to find that she is able to praise your treatment highly. She hasn't had a bad attack at night such as she used to have since she has worn your appliances, and she is able to get about. She is faithfully carrying out your instructions, and no doubt this will lead to further improvement in time. I thankfully report continual progress; I am like a new man, and all last summer, and during harvest, I was not troubled in the least by my leg. I can now walk several miles where formerly I could scarcely walk at all."

Then, after a year's silence, this report was confirmed as follows:—

December 26, 1888.—"I continue to gain great benefit, and I know you will be pleased to hear that I am even better than when I last wrote, for I notice an increase of strength every day. The appliances have done well—they have been literally a God-send to me, and I bless God that I ever heard of your Treatment.

"One word about my sister. She is ever singing your praises, for your Treatment has done all we could wish for, or even think of, in her case. Our thankfulness is beyond our power of expression, but we recommend your Treatment, and hope all who come to you may profit as we have done."

Sufferers are cordially invited to lay their symptoms before Mr. Garratt, who will gladly and gratuitously advise in any case.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, JANUARY 14, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

LESSONTO.—Mr. Ed. Jacottet, of this South African Mission, writes to the Journal Religieux that he and his family are enjoying good health. The work is steadily progressing, and the converts, by enduring hardship, are showing themselves good soldiers of Jesus Christ. The Romanist propaganda, with its many concessions to paganism, is not proving dangerous to evangelical effort.

NEWFOUNDLAND.—Sir,—A very earnest appeal from Rev. C. F. Hubbard, a clergyman of the Reformed Church, has been received by me from Trinity Bay, Newfoundland, for help in their present distress, in what he describes as "a fast-growing corner of the vineyard." The chief wants seem to be clothing and books. If any of your readers will assist, I shall feel grateful in adding to a grant which I have sent.—Yours, T. HUBAND GREGG, The Rectory, Southend, Essex.

The "British Weekly" says:

"This is a song worthy of praise, words and music alike being good. The Andantino passage is sweet and taking. It is often difficult to get pretty music with words that are not too sentimental or stupid, but here is just the thing for those who have found this want."

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 20,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

The Shivering & Suffering Poor

Sympathising friends are heartily thanked for contributions toward giving Food, Coals, and Clothing to the Poor of a very poor London parish. For each 10s. forwarded, 15 adults or 20 children can be provided—by a local Committee—with a substantial meal.—A. STYLEMAN HERRING, Vicar St. Paul's, Clerkenwell (nearly 30 years in London), 45, Colebrooke-row, N.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS has accommodation for 700 patients. The present income enables the Committee to receive not more than 600. 150 applicants are earnestly seeking admission by election. Many of these must be disappointed unless funds are forthcoming. Contributions are urgently required. Ample provision made for private cases on payments regulated by the Board of Management.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

By REV. R. GILCHRIST of Shotts.

I. "CHRIST LIFTED UP" upon the Cross.
II. "CHRIST LIFTED UP" in Glory.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"Right well has the author done his work in this charming book. In the first part he exhibits 'CHRIST LIFTED UP' on the cross; and deals in an inexpressibly sweet and tender manner with the words and spirit of Jesus while nailed to the tree. In the second part, Christ risen from the dead, and exalted to the right hand of the throne of God, is evidently set forth before our eyes. In both sections there is much sound exposition, and the book from beginning to end sparkles with fresh, and beautiful, and inspiring thoughts."

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

NINE Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year nearly 4,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mrs. J. BUDDLE, of PRESTON, near WINGHAM, KENT.

After a short course of medicine obtained from me, Mrs. Buddle writes me on July 3, 1888:—"I wish to thank you very much for the great good your medicine has done me. I was in a very bad state, but now I feel like another person. My cough has gone, my chest feels strong. I can now walk nine miles, on Sunday, I take my class in the Sunday-school again, and lead a class in the afternoon, besides attending the other services. My husband and I feel thankful to you, and shall recommend your medicine whenever we can."

This patient has since given away medicine to several poor persons, "as a thank-offering to God (she says) for benefit received."

I heard from her again Nov. 2 last. She says:—"I have been better since my recovery last July than I had been for a long time before. I am very thankful I heard of you. My husband often says he does not believe I should have been with him now had I not heard of you. I can do much walking and attend to my Christian work with very little fatigue. Make what use you like of my case."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION

RESCUE WORK

AMONG THE

LOST WOMEN OF ST. GILES'.

We have been engaged for some weeks past in a special Rescue Work among Fallen Women: several midnight meetings have been held in different parts of St. Giles' with promising results, and we have secured admirable premises on exceptionally low terms for a Rescue Home and Night Shelter.

THE RESCUE HOME

is one of the large corner houses in the well-known Seven Dials, and within a step or two of the dens in which many of the women live. £550 will purchase the remainder of the lease, nearly thirteen years at a ground rent of £30.

THE WOMEN'S NIGHT SHELTER

is also a large corner building situate in the worst part of Drury Lane, and again within a stone's throw of a large colony of fallen women. It will give sleeping accommodation to a great number of applicants, and will be leased to us by the Mercers' Company very cheaply.

By special permission of the Chief Commissioner of Police, tickets will be placed in the hands of the constables on duty in the immediate neighbourhood through the night, and any really destitute woman found in the streets will be given an admission order. The cost of alterations and fitting up would be about £450, so that if £1000 can be raised at once, we can proceed with what is on our hearts, and we have been so distinctly guided in the matter that we doubt not that the money will soon be forthcoming.

Donations will be thankfully acknowledged, if sent to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C., or to yours sincerely,

GEORGE HATTON,
Superintendent St. Giles' Christian Mission.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Dr. Singleton, of Melbourne.

There are at present 110 students under training in the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions—the largest number reached since its establishment in 1873.

We are thankful to hear of one at least brought into the joy of simply trusting Jesus, through reading the "New Year's Resolve," by Mrs. Evered Poole, in our first issue of 1889.

We observe with satisfaction that several theatrical lessees have been convicted in the police courts, at the instance of the School Board, of employing children under the age of ten in connection with pantomimes. If this method of dealing with the subject is steadfastly pursued, it may remedy a crying evil.

A play, entitled "The Conversion of England," has been prepared in ten tableaux, with dialogue. There are forty performers, the leading characters being assumed by clergymen. This is a clever and subtle scheme, not to reconcile Church and Stage, as unofficial observers suppose, but to convert, or rather to pervert England back to Rome. Christianity is made synonymous with Popery. This dramatic departure will doubtless have further development.

It is surely very desirable that the vexed question of international copyright should be settled in a manner satisfactory alike to America and England. A discussion on the subject in recent issues of The Athenæum has led to unkind words and mutual recriminations. One English author writes:—

> America does not yet stand within the morals of civilisation; to give up slave-trading and to continue to pirate English books is equivalent to saying, "I will not break into houses, but I must stand at the street corners, and pick pockets."

It is much to be regretted that there should be any ground for such a serious charge as is implied in these words. The sooner an honourable understanding is arrived at, the better it will be both for America and England.

A friend writes:—"I was in the city of Glasgow several Sundays ago, and though, as you know, it is one of the most drunken places on earth (and it was the Old Year Sabbath), I never saw one drunken person. I heard like testimony from another gentleman. This fact is a strong argument for Sunday closing (they close there all Saturday). Had there been the least hesitancy that some objections spoil the case, there would have been some drunken people about; but not even in Argyle-street, among tens of thousands of people, did I see one." If this be the usual condition of Glasgow on Sunday, it is indeed a mighty argument for Sunday closing.

The growing desecration of the Lord's Day is a matter for grave consideration at the hands of all those who are interested in the welfare of the country at large, for it may safely be assumed that when great laxity in this direction is permitted there must necessarily be degeneration and decline. It is far from unusual now to observe the announcements of entertainments at various clubs on Sundays, and recently one has been started at which there is a dancing party every Sunday night. If this meant nothing more than the Sabbath-breaking of the subscribers themselves it would be sufficiently serious; but, unfortunately, it involves the employment of a large number of people who are paid only six days' wages for seven days' work, and whose bodies and souls have to suffer loss for the selfish and sinful enjoyment of others. This makes the question essentially one for the thoughtful consideration of working-men.

As will be seen by our American Notes, the demoralisation caused by the Sunday newspaper is a serious element of the social life across the Atlantic. The evil already exists among ourselves, but we notice with deep regret that a projected new London morning daily—which will virtually be an English edition of an American paper—is to be published on Sunday the same as on other days. We strongly protest against this aggravation of the wrong-doing. We cannot see why the laws that restrict the transaction of business on the first day of the week should not apply to the sale of newspapers. They are surely not a necessity of life, with a teeming press at work all the week through.

Rev. T. Richard, who has recently returned from Japan, states that the educational work in that country is simply surprising. Japan wishes to be "westernised," he says, though China does not, and that the labours of the Christian missionaries are regarded with sympathy by all classes of the people. He concludes:—

> If things go on as they do now, the main work of the foreign missionary will be accomplished by the year 1900, i.e., only twelve years hence. Not that Japan will be all converted by that time, but then, with the aid of the missionaries in the field and other Japanese Christians, there will be enough to go on to the completion of the work.

No more pressing subject can be brought before united meetings for prayer than that of the reposition in Uganda, to which we again advert. King Mtesa was a professor of missionaries; his son Mwanga is weak, vain, and cruel; and it seems beyond doubt that at his door lies the murder of Bishop Hannington. The tyrant is himself now a fugitive, and the Arabs are supreme. Their intentions are threefold—to root out Christianity, to establish Islamism, and to extend the horrors of the slave trade. But for faith in God the outlook would be dark. He, however, works for the deliverance of the oppressed in unexpected ways, and Mtesa can even now, under Him, become the means of deliverance from the most inhuman of oppressions.

Charles Kingsley once wrote, "The fault of most preachers seems to me to be that they apply their medicines to the people without deigning to take the least diagnosis of the case." Dr. Parker, by his new departure of inviting working-men to the schoolroom of the City Temple, where, at noon on Mondays, they may come in their working-clothes, eat their dinners, if they so choose, and smoke, is acting on this method. Barring the last indulgence, about which there will be a difference of opinion, the attempt to understand working-men by friendly intercourse, and to talk with them as between man and man, might be as useful to preachers as to the men.

On all accounts we may welcome efforts for the people that begin with respecting them. The attempt to win intelligent workmen by amusing them have been as offensive to them as it has been degrading to Christian teachers. Equally abortive have been descents to Sunday secular lectures. The working men do not respect these compromises. They have a higher thought of Christ than they once had, but they have hard thoughts of Christian professors, of the icy atmosphere of churches and chapels, and have hold of half truths in relation to scientific and social questions which are harmful. Friendly, unassuming, and uncompromising intercourse with them, on the part of Christian men, would go far to remove the lamentation over their irreligion.

Dr. Parker's first congregation of working men, last Monday, had too many backs covered with broadcloth to please him, but his remarks were probably as applicable to these as to the wearers of fustian. He defended preachers from some mistaken charges popularly levelled at them. In the course of his address he said:—

> Let them contradict him, and ask him questions; but let them do it in a right spirit. Let them ask only their own questions, and not be duped into playing cat's-paw for some infidel. He wished there were far more cross-examinations of ministers than there were. Personally, he should like to have questions asked at every service. There were some who thought that ministers were too busy with the next world to have any time for the affairs of this, but he had never met such a man, and he did not want to. He contended that a man did not know how adequately and wisely to treat a part until he grasped, with some measure of complete comprehension, the whole. Unless he got right hold of eternity he could not handle time in the proper way. Let them clearly understand that there was nothing in Christianity opposed to the true use of the present world.

We expressed our regret last year at the absence of lucidity in the papers read at the Islington Clerical meeting. No such complaint can be laid against the papers and free addresses of the meeting of last week. The subjects chosen were singularly timely, and were treated with a fulness, clearness, and vigour, that left nothing to be desired. Canon Bardsley spoke of "God's Word, the sole and sufficient authority in things spiritual"; the Bishop of Liverpool on "The teaching of Scripture respecting the Lord's Supper"; and Canon Hoare on its "Teaching respecting holiness of heart in life." The three addresses which are printed in extenso in last Friday's Record, form a powerful Protestant manifesto. They are very valuable, and go to the very roots of modern controversies. The attendance of the clergy was large, and the meeting deserved to be called "an emphatic success."

Bishop Ryle's paper was full of timely teaching, and, though couched in kindly terms, was uncompromising in its fidelity to evangelical truth. The Bishop expressed the belief that the principal causes of the "present distress" are: The gradual departure of many of the clergy from the old Church of England doctrine that the Bible is the only rule of faith; the extravagant spirit of liberality and toleration which prevails among laymen in the upper classes about matters of doctrine; and the desire of many Churchmen to get behind the Reformation, and as near as possible to the Church of Rome. In the course of some parting words, the Bishop truly said with regard to his own efforts:—

I have tried in my poor way to fight the battle of evangelical truth for forty-five years, and cannot expect to fight much longer. But, looking back on that long period, I thank God that I have never changed my opinions. I take you to record this day that I am not ashamed of the flag under which I have fought.

The Bishop's paper also contained some manly counsel to young clergymen.

Mr. Tallack, the well-known secretary of the Howard Association, in a letter to The Times, has put forward a practical plea for the further enlistment of the services of women in criminal and pauper administration. He points out that some of the abuses lately exposed with regard to police cells are more the result of the insufficient employment of women as matrons than of structural defects, and he justly urges that in the custody, control, regulation, and reclamation of female offenders in general, and of the fallen in particular, in dealing with pauper women and children, in visiting boarded-out children, and the like, the active co-operation of women is absolutely essential to success. We cordially agree with Mr. Tallack in setting a high value upon women's aid in such practical offices as these, "which require a combination of shrewdness, sympathy, and sense."

We certainly owe a large Blue Book to the Royal Commission upon the Housing of the Poor, but beyond that it may be doubted if anything of moment has resulted from the costly and cumbrous inquiry. By and by, doubtless, the Commission will sit again, and proceed "inquiring"; but in the meantime men and women are dying in slums and fever dens, and children are growing up stunted and diseased, in entire districts of our large cities and towns.

It is satisfactory to find, however, that various societies of philanthropic and benevolent people are calmly working away with the view of quietly improving a condition of things very discreditable to our nineteenth century Christianity. "The Mansion House Council on the Dwellings of the Poor," assisted by our twenty committees in various districts of the Metropolis, is endeavouring to enforce existing laws in regard to the houses in which the poor are compelled to crowd together, and during 1888 they have enforced the law in at least 3000 cases. We learn that all the workers employed in the duty are unpaid, and it is gratifying to find that these sympathetic persons at any rate are not content to allow things to go on as they are.

Scarcely a week passes without furnishing some apt but painful illustration of the contrast between the little runnel of charity and the full-flowing stream of luxury. In one column of the daily press we read of a sumptuous ball, estimated to have cost £7000, whilst another informs us that the poor people of Lambeth have asked the Prince of Wales by his presence among them to help them to raise £4000 for the purchase of an open space of eight acres for their little ones in the heart of their crowded streets. In the face of such abuses the "levelling up" schemes of Socialism are scarcely to be wondered at, though it is not in that direction that the true remedy is to be sought. What is needed is a fuller and more general recognition of the Divine principle, that the greater the wealth, the greater the responsibility to Him whose are the silver and the gold.

The case as to the custody of a child, claimed by the Romanists from Dr. Barnardo, again came before a Judge in chambers last Monday. The adjournment had been made with a view of extracting from the Doctor information as to the whereabouts of the girl, who is now beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. The first matter dealt with, however, related to the personal fitness of the proposed guardians, and on this point Dr. Barnardo had no difficulty in producing incontestable proof that they are persons whose character totally unfits them from having the care of a girl of tender age. Foiled on this issue, the applicants completely shifted their ground, and submitted the names of certain conductors of Romish conventual institutions who would be willing to receive and train the girl. Dr. Barnardo again declined either to agree to that arrangement, or to disclose the whereabouts of the child. Ultimately an order was made by the Judge requiring Dr. Barnardo to produce her in Court on April 30. Whether under such circumstances the order ought to be complied with, is a question open to grave consideration.

As we stated last week, this case forcibly illustrates the unworthy tactics of the Roman Catholic priesthood. They leave the destitute children of their own communion to grow up as a burden and a source of danger to the community. When any of these children have been rescued from positions of moral and physical danger by such institutions as those of Dr. Barnardo, the priests suddenly discover that they are worth looking after, and instigate the parents or legal guardians to take action to compel their return. If Dr. Barnardo should unfortunately come into collision with the Bench on this question, we feel sure he will be heartily supported by the Christian community in his endeavour to bring the law into conformity with principles of equity and the best interests of our neglected child population.

We direct attention to the further contribution from Mr. A. S. Dyer, on a succeeding page, to the history of the Patna case. It would appear that the authorities in India are beginning to recognise the gravity of the situation. The Times' correspondence of Monday states that the High Court at Calcutta has granted a rule in the Patna Mission case, directing the magistrate to show cause why the order should not be set aside. The Court will decide whether the girl is retained for an "unlawful, mean, and immoral purpose," and the matter will be fully argued. This information is by telegram, and appears to show an entire departure from the action described in the article we have quoted (p. 9) from The Bombay Guardian of January 5. It would seem that if the magistrate had obtained permission from the Bengal Government to prosecute Mr. Dyer, the tables are now turned, and the magistrate's own decision is to become the subject of investigation.

Further intelligence from China describes the famine in the northern provinces of the empire as "a widespread national calamity." It is due in some places to inundations, in others to drought, and the regions affected are very thickly populated. In order to make known the sad state of things, the February issue of China's Millions has been published unusually early. We are glad to learn from its pages that the workers of the China Inland Mission are doing something for the starving millions. Mr. J. J. Coulthard has been engaged in relieving the sufferers from the Yellow River disaster, and Mr. W. S. Johnston and Mr. D. J. Mills are now making a survey of the inundated district to the east and north of Chau-Kia-Kéo. We extract the following from China's Millions:—

For the relief of the sufferers by the famine of 1887—8 about £8000 was sent through the China Inland Mission. Contributions for the relief of those now suffering will be gratefully received by Mr. B. Broomhall, secretary of the China Inland Mission, 2, Pyrland-road, Mildmay, London, N., and telegraphed to China without delay. If, as estimated by Dr. Nevius, of Chefoo, "a halfpenny a day, or fifteenpence a month, will, in addition to what the people can do themselves, support life," it is within the reach of all to do something to alleviate the distress which, whatever may be the combined efforts put forth to meet it, must prevail for months to come to an awful extent.

We have received the following letter:—

The following extract from a letter just received from my nephew, Mr. J. J. Coulthard, refers to the suffering caused by the Yellow River disaster. It is dated Cheo-Kia-Kéo, Honan, Nov. 21, 1888:—

"The contributions will supply the need for a short time, and are most valuable. I write to express our thanks and to appeal for further help. We hope to support 3000 families, say 15,000 souls, during the winter months, at a cost of about £700 per month. We find that in the villages about eight or ten miles away from here there are very many who are glad to get a little help, and if we do not supply it they must try to subsist upon leaves and bark."

Referring to the destitution in the above Province, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor says, in a letter dated Shanghai, Dec. 12, also received this morning:—"So far as our tidings go, the needs of Shan-Tung are incomparably greater, and the Government help far less." B. Broomhall.

"JOYFUL NEWS" MISSION.—Rev. T. Champness published in last week's Joyful News a brief report of his mission work during 1888. Mr. Champness received last year for his Joyful News Mission a total sum of £4,184 14s. 8d. The cost of the English work, including the expenses of the Rochdale Training Home, was £3,423 4s. 4d. The cost of the foreign work was £712 14s. 4d. Mr. Champness has now seventy-three evangelists, including a native agent in India and a Spanish lady in Barcelona. He has taken a large hall in the neighbourhood of Rochdale for his future home, and he now asks his friends to pray that he may secure one hundred devoted evangelists who, at home and abroad, shall spread in the most economical manner the tidings of salvation.

LIFE, LOVE, AND WORK.

THE wings of the living creatures kissed each other (Ezek. iii. 13, mar.). They were joined one to another; they did not overlap; they were always in contact, and it was the contact of harmony and peace and love. This is a beautiful and eloquent picture of Christian service according to God's ideal. Of the living creatures it is testified that where the Spirit was to go they went; thither was their spirit to go. Therefore they never went where they were not wanted; and they always went where they were wanted. They turned not aside as they went, but to the place whither the Head looked they followed it. And there was power with them, for there appeared in the cherubim the form of a man's hand under their wings.

In painful contrast with every feature of the Divinely drawn picture of the living creatures are many of the methods of modern mission work. They go where they are not wanted; we hear of a village of 1200 inhabitants, where ten denominations are represented. They do not go where they are wanted; for there are numerous villages and hamlets where the Gospel is never preached. There are districts in London where the wings of the workers not only touch, but overlap each other, and their contact is one not of co-operation, but of competition; and at best little better than an armed peace.

There is great need of brotherly and prayerful conference on this subject. The icy isolation and independence one of another is not thawed by a yearly or even a monthly gathering. The hindrances to Christian work are not in the world so much as in the Church. There is little power because there is little unity. The living creatures went and returned like a flash of lightning. A week of Christian work, characterised by the immediateness, the swiftness, the directness, the effectiveness, of lightning flashes, would stop the mouths of all the infidels, and would answer the taunting question of the world, "Where is their God?"

The living creatures went and returned. There are some workers who went whither God sent them, and did the work; but they have settled down there, and have not returned to their place of waiting on God for another service. There are zealous and godly workers treading on each other's heels, whom the Spirit might send from Samaria unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem to Gaza, which is desert; or to whom visions might appear in the night of men saying: "Come over into Macedonia, and help us." But they are too much absorbed in their own work: possibly, alas, too much engaged in holding their own against the competition of some other worker: to have an ear at leisure to hear or a heart at leisure to obey the still small voice of the Spirit; or the entreaty of Ethiopia stretching out her hands unto God; or the cry of Southern Europe for the help of those to whom God has committed a dispensation of the Gospel.

Life is short; it is the seed-time of eternity; as we sow we shall reap. If it is painful to contemplate the awful abuse of human energy, is not the misuse, the non-use of spiritual power, by God's living ones, still more sorrowful?

We are very far from undervaluing the individual, voluntary, and often unpaid labour of many who are doing some of the very best work for God in the whole land; but there is a want of harmony and co-operation almost everywhere, which must give place to that kind of self-denial which denies self, if the work of God is to prosper.

M.

THE PATNA CASE.

(From "The Bombay Guardian," January 5.)

ON December 24, the Hon. Secretaries of the Gospel Purity Council for India addressed a letter to Sir Steuart Bayley, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, of which the following is the substance:—"This Council having been informed, in answer to communications to the Viceroy, that the Bengal Government was occupying itself with the case of the girl Luchmin at Patna, we are requested on behalf of the said Council to inquire what action has been taken in this matter. The Council has been privately informed that this girl has been removed from Patna, and it feels that the public who have been so deeply interested in this case, should be informed as to the steps, if any, which have been taken on her behalf."

On January 3, Rev. H. C. Stuntz, Bombay, received answer from the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal that:—"His honor, as at present advised, does not propose to take any further action with regard to the order passed by the magistrate." The day this explicit intelligence was received that the Government of Bengal, to whom the Government of India relegated the matter, does not intend to lift a finger to save the girl Luchmin from the horrible fate to which she has been consigned, Mr. Alfred S. Dyer sent the subjoined telegram to several of the leading Christian women of England:—"The Indian Government is leaving the poor girl Luchmin to perish. Will the Christian women of Great Britain appeal to the Queen-Empress on her behalf." The following is an amplified version of that message:—

SHALL SHE PERISH?

Twenty-nine days have passed since the Christian girl Luchmin was consigned by a British magistrate at Patna to a life of shame. Twenty-eight days have passed since an appeal was made to the Government of India to annul the prostituted authority of this magistrate, and to save the girl. So far as effective action is concerned, the appeal has been made to deaf ears, although if Lord Lansdowne's or Sir Steuart Bayley's dog had been mutilated by an official at Patna, it would not have taken twenty-eight hours to have intervened on the dog's behalf.

The Government Press in India has been publishing carefully worded statements, designed to remove from the Government the responsibility of Luchmin's continuance in the hands of her immoral custodians, and to place that responsibility upon the private individuals who have espoused her cause. This will not deceive the friends in England of outraged womanhood in India. The responsibility for the position and life of that girl rests upon the persons who have the power to save her by a stroke of a pen.

Instead of the girl being saved, a wronged man appears upon the scene! Who is he? The Bombay Gazette exults in being able to record the news that the magistrate at Patna whose illegal and brutal decision and assault upon the rights, the liberty, and the honour of a Christian girl, are becoming the subject of indignant comment wherever the English language is spoken, "has received the permission of the Bengal Government" to prosecute the Editor of The Bombay Guardian, who has dared to make public the tale of Luchmin's wrongs. If this news is true, thanks be to God the day is at hand when such an outrage as that at Patna shall be impossible in India, and Indian womanhood shall be delivered from the hands of its official oppressors. Those who refuse to hear the cry of the perishing, will fall into pits of their own digging.

India is ruled in the name of a Christian woman whose high character and sympathy with the poor and oppressed, and not least with her fellow-women, is known throughout the world. The Viceroy and the Government of India having refused to do justice to the poor girl Luchmin, it has now become a duty to appeal to the Queen-Empress. And who can more fittingly appeal on her behalf than the Christian women of Great Britain—that noble army of women who have successfully fought against the degradation of womanhood by legalised sin—the Christian women of England who are represented in the persons of Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, Miss Ellice Hopkins, Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas, Mrs. Eva McLaren, Mrs. Percy Bunting, Mrs. Edward Backhouse, Mrs. Margaret Tanner, Mrs. Henry Richardson, Miss Eliza Wigham, Miss M. Priestman, and a host of others whose honoured names are household words in the British isles. This poor Indian girl is ignorant of these elect women, but they will not love her the less, nor be less solicitous and active to save her on that account. In her ignorance, however, she knows that there is a Queen-Empress, and doubtless wonders how a poor girl can be so cruelly treated by the great Sahibs in a land over which she rules.

We do not doubt the sympathy, the courage, and the persistence of the Christian members of Parliament to whom we have made known Luchmin's case, but let the Christian women of Great Britain do their part also.

BIBLE-CARRIAGE WORK.—During the past twelve months one hundred and forty-three villages and towns have been visited; much precious seed has been scattered, and numbers have heard the words of eternal life. Nearly 20,000 Bibles and Testaments, over 44,000 Gospel books, and about 86,000 tracts, Scripture cards, leaflets, &c., were circulated during 1888. We want to purchase and stock a Bible-carriage, especially for Yorkshire.

NORTHCOTE WILLY.

Cambridge-avenue, Chapeltown-road, Leeds.

BETHESDA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—The seventeenth annual report of this well-known Mission is a record of much earnest labour. Effort takes various approved forms, visitation from house to house among the poor being one of the most important. Through lowness of funds, it has recently been found necessary to give one of the missionaries notice to leave. There are debts on the mission-halls amounting in the aggregate to £700, and efforts are now being made to clear these off. The superintendent of the Mission is Commander B. H. Key, Downham-street, Edward's-road, Southsea.

BLACKHEATH Y.M.C.A.—Two former members of this Association, Mr. E. C. Aspinall, of Tierra del Fuego, and Mr. Graham W. Brooke, recently returned from the Soudan, delivered addresses on mission work at a meeting held a few days ago. They both related their experiences in heathen countries, and called upon Christian young men to consecrate themselves to the work of taking the Gospel to those who know it not. The earnest words of the missionaries went straight to the hearts of many present. Prayer was offered that God would take Messrs. Aspinall and Brooke safely back to their spheres of labour, and prosper them in declaring the truth as it is in Jesus.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

IX.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

THEIR EQUIPMENT.

UNDER the heading of THE MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION' we have placed, in the beginning of this work, parts of Matt. x., Mark vi., and Luke ix. and x.* Herein are contained Christ's instructions for his missionaries. The fullest text is in Matt. x.; but it is by viewing these passages together that we perceive their grand sweep and full meaning. They were given first to the Twelve; but, that they might not be supposed to pertain only to the Apostles, they were repeated in substance afterwards to the Seventy. Thus their obligation upon all bearers of the glad tidings is indicated. If a clause occurs in one passage which seems to limit their application, they may be read in the parallel Scriptures without any limiting phrases. We claim that herein are outlined the true character of the missionary, and the exact legislation as to his equipment, deportment, and work, which are of perpetual obligation. To show their perpetuity is of the first importance, and will be undertaken further on.

It is now for us to consider this missionary constitution. If we purpose accepting it, we must decide upon the reversal, as far as we may be concerned, of that order in missionary operations now in the ascendent. The world's subtle spell has been thrown about the Church's most sacred things, and its spirit has legislated for her work for the Lord. In these instructions we are confronted by the opposite of all that this world's wisdom and this world's pride dictate. The right eye, by which we walk by sight, must needs be plucked out before these holy lessons may be read. The right hand of human cunning must needs be cut off and cast from us. It is better for God's Jacobs to have Him touch the hollow of their thigh, even though thereafter they go limping through life, if thereby they may learn to hang upon Him and become Israels, spiritual princes, having power with God and men.

The Lord Jesus called his disciples that they might follow Him, and become adepts in the holy art of winning men. For nearly two years and a half He had been fully exhibiting to them its ministry of healing, and teaching and impressing them with its outward form and circumstances. The time had now come for them to begin practising those object-lessons. After the lapse of little more than another year He would be taken from them. Then, without his bodily presence, they must go forth into all the world to preach the Gospel. It was well that they should stretch their pinions for a short flight while yet their Lord was with them, to correct mistakes and encourage their growing faith. But, as He teaches them to plume their wings for this, did He mean that other methods should come into play in their future and longer flights? Did He mean that we in this distant time should have other supports to bear us up upon the yielding air of this spiritual service? By no means.

By reading the context we also see that the Lord Himself could now no longer personally overtake the work. In the chapter preceding Matt. x., the fullest record of these instructions, one scene of busy service succeeds another. He saw the multitudes, and had compassion on them. He bade the disciples pray for labourers, for the harvest truly was plenteous. He then calls them and gives them power, and sends them forth to preach, and heal, and cast out demons, and so answers the prayer He had put into their mouths. In doing so He gives them the exact instructions we are about to examine.

Our first concern is with THEIR EQUIPMENT. He tells them HOW they are to go. "Take nothing for your journey. Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves; for the workman is worthy of his meat; and salute no man by the way." He begins by stripping them of those very things which worldly prudence would put at the head of the list, and that this same worldly prudence, having usurped the place of faith, does now so put. He first of all separates them from the great world-power—gold. It is this that dominates the minds and hearts of men. It is this that holds all but universal sway. It is this that the nations worship. His messengers who go to break the shackles of this slavery of gold must have none. They must exhibit faith which eschews that after which the Gentiles seek; must avoid that the ownership of which brings in a host of hurtful cares; must flee, not only the love of money, but its possession.

Next, they were to take "no scrip for their journey." This was the ordinary wallet for carrying food and other articles, which one may see slung at the side of Orientals to this day. These heralds of salvation were to be unhindered by impedimenta. Long lines of carriers, with guns, ammunition, beads, wire, cloth, provisions and camp equipage, would be quite out of their line. Also they were not to provide "two coats, neither shoes." The simple garments necessary for nature's covering must suffice. Changes of raiment were forbidden. No stock or store of anything was permitted. A staff only was allowed, the sign of lowly pilgrimage. By this they were removed from all ease and accommodation in travelling. Their sandalled feet were to bear them from place to place.

Finally, there were to be no salutations. These, so formal and prolonged in the East, were to be sacrificed to the pressing haste of their message. They were not to go from house to house making friends. No speeches were to be prepared to ingratiate themselves with rulers or governors when apprehended. By these last three prohibitions they were separated from supplementing their helplessness and defencelessness with the aids of human friendship. They were deprived of all those resources to which the weakness of human nature ever betakes itself. The beggar might bestow the coin he received in his purse, or carry with him the food the pity of the people had given; but not these whom Christ sent forth. The birds could hie them to their nests and the beasts to their dens; but they, like their Lord, had not where to lay their head.

THESE FIVE THINGS (THE PURSE, THE WALLET, RAIMENT, COMFORT IN TRAVELLING, THE MAKING AND RETAINING OF FRIENDS), FROM WHOSE HELP THEY WERE DEBARRED, STAND FOR THOSE APPLIANCES BY WHICH THE WORLD IS APPROPRIATED AND ENJOYED BY THOSE WHO LOVE IT. As the hand lays hold of what the heart desires, so all that is in the world, morally and materially, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, and that which gratifies them, are gained, and used, and retained, by means of these five items. Money, possessions, raiment, travelling, and friends and acquaintances, is it not these that administer to the senses all that man lusts after? Here is the right hand to be severed from him who aspires to the high and perilous office of proclaiming by lip, and illustrating by life, "the love of the Father," which stands opposed to "the love of the world."

These deprivations were expedient, because they made them the embodiments of that faith and disinterestedness and giving up of all to follow Christ, which they went forth to preach. BUT THEY ALSO GREW OUT OF THE NATURE OF

* This sentence refers to the book form in which it is proposed to publish these articles.

THINGS. They were sent "as sheep among wolves." They were told to "Beware of men," and forewarned that they would be "hated of all for his name's sake." Foes would arise in their households, and their death be sought by their nearest kindred. There must be far more than the giving up of the trifling accessories of life which were interdicted; there must be the losing of life itself. The Lord foresaw that, as his messengers invaded one province after another of the kingdom of darkness, all the powers of hell and earth would league for their defeat and destruction. Any expectation they might entertain of earthly ease or human consolation was better dispelled at the outset.

Cape Horn was to be doubled by those intrepid mariners, and it was but kindness to lead them to expect tempests and headwinds, for in that region the sea is never calm. As one has well said, "He spoke plainly unto them, and said, If ye have not a heart for the extremes of human suffering, and a soul above the fear of man, ye need not undertake this work—more perilous than war, more adventurous than a voyage to regions of thick-ribbed ice, and more important to earth than the most sacred legation which ever went forth on behalf of suffering and insulted humanity."

Although the Lord despoiled them of all expectation from human channels, and forbade their commerce in those things which occupy the rest of men, yet He left them not void of hope. Far from it. THOSE HEARTS AND LIVES HE THUS EMPTIED OF THE CHOICE THINGS OF EARTH HE FILLED WITH THE PRECIOUS THINGS OF HEAVEN. Faith supplied what sight lacked. Hope of heavenly bliss burned brightly as the desires of earth expired. The temporal faded from their view that the unseen and eternal might replace it. Earthly motives receded before heavenly incentives. Faith in some leads them to claim and receive much from God. Faith in others leads them to surrender all to God, and in deep emptiness of heart and life to trust Him for all. One is receiving Christ into the boat, while the other is going to Him on the billows at his call. The one is passive; the other active.

Both of these phases of faith are united in perfection in the character of these model messengers. As to the little food they needed, no fear must stir their souls. That the Father made his care. It would be supplied to them by those to whom they were sent. "The labourer is worthy of his hire" is the law of the kingdom in this regard. Even a cup of cold water given to one of them would be rewarded. Those who received the homeless ones received also both the Son and the Father who sent Him, and raised themselves to the pinnacle of honour. Those who despised them despised Him, and those who despised Him despised Him that sent Him. The "Son of Peace" went before them to prepare for the reception of both their message and their persons. That city or house which rejected them was placed beneath the ban of the Most High. The Spirit of their Father would speak through them when brought before the great ones of earth. If they are called Beelzebub, they may strengthen their hearts by the recollection that so also their Lord was called. They need not fear those who kill the body. God alone was to be feared by these unearthly ones, whose very hairs were numbered, and who in the very act of losing their lives would gain them.

Thus their hearts are fortified and their spirits nerved and emboldened for their high undertaking. With a quiet power, not of earth, they move among the sons of men. No applause elates them. To curses, ridicule, and witticisms, they are invulnerable. "Away with such fanatics from the earth!" says one; "Leave them to perish in their foolhardy undertaking," says another; "Lay hold on them, they are beside themselves," says a third. But the Father's smile plays upon their hearts, and the mighty arm of the God of Jacob is beneath them. He causeth them to go forth in victory, and causeth them to triumph everywhere. Happy missionaries! The poor and lowly bless them. Their names are written in heaven. They are also written down in the chapter before us by the Holy Ghost, as those who thus went at their Lord's bidding. God still delights to write down the names of those who follow his Son in his service and suffering.

The details of this missionary legislation are but the details of those conditions under which Christ Himself came in his earthly ministry. They are but an expansion of the pregnant word, "AS the Father hath sent Me, so send I you." The twelve were first brought into this fellowship with the service of the Son of Man—the Father's model and example in all things. Afterwards it was enlarged to include the seventy. After Pentecost it was entered into by all the multitude of God-ordained missionaries, of whom the Holy Ghost selects Paul as an illustrious example. They are God's eternal principles. They apply now in the end of the dispensation as in the beginning. The Holy Ghost but awaits those who will come under them to fill them again as at the first.

We will next consider the directions of this missionary constitution as to the deportment of these messengers in the varied scenes of service in which they would be led.

A MISSIONARY.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN IRELAND.

ON Wednesday evening, last week, an hour before midnight ended the mission which for nine days has been conducted at Tralee by Major Whittle and his son Charles. The afternoon meeting of each day was held at the Protestant Hall, accommodating from two to three hundred persons, the addresses being mainly directed to the confirmation of weak believers and the instruction of the stronger. They were from the first well attended, and much appreciated by an audience of all the denominations.

For the evening meetings the Protestant Hall was too small, and a new departure was made in securing the County Court House, which was kindly lent by the High Sheriff for the purpose. It was nightly crowded by a mixed gathering of Protestants and Catholics quietly listening to the grand old gospel. Thus we were given to see in a measure an answer to the prayers of years for this unhappy country, and the earnest of great things to come, when the many, as now the few, will lend a willing and respectful ear to the preaching of Jesus and the resurrection.

An after-meeting for men and boys was nightly conducted by Mr. Charles Whittle and Mr. McCann, of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., the effect of which was shown when Major Whittle, on the last night, requested those of them who were conscious of having received good during the week to stand up. Certainly half of those present did so.

Major Whittle's after-meeting was conducted in the Court House, and night after night might be seen hands held up in desire for prayer, or in expression of blessing received, from all parts of the building by the most prominent of the town's-folk down to those of the lowest rank, alike accepting the reproach of the name of Jesus, and alike, let us believe, accepted by Him to share his glory.

His labours were not confined to the public work, for, as a man of God in truth, he gave himself in the intervals to personal dealing, whether for the reconciliation of Christians who had become estranged from one another, or to bring anxious souls to peace with God. It is a pleasure to record the indications of true union by the presence at the meetings of Rev. Oliver Park, Methodist; Rev. Mr. Becher, Episcopalian; and the Rev. Mr. Gailey, Presbyterian.

On Monday evening, the 14th, Major Whittle's only half-holiday, a large meeting was gathered at Ardfert, a village six miles from Tralee, when, following what was perhaps the most striking address of the series, upon the words of Romans iii. 22, "There is no difference," sixteen or seventeen persons openly expressed their desire to become Christians, or boldly confessed that there and then they "had received the Lord Jesus." The evangelists have now left for Clonmel, with many requests for their early return, and many prayers following them in their labours.

A numerously and heartily signed requisition has been sent from Edinburgh, inviting Major Whittle to revisit that city. He has accepted the invitation, and commences a month's mission on February 10. His former visit in 1880 was productive of widespread blessing, and to it could be traced the commencement of the work among the University students that was afterwards carried on by Messrs. Stanley Smith and C. T. Studd, and Professor Drummond. The committee ask the prayers of our readers on behalf of the approaching services.

FINSBURY PARK Y.M.C.A.—The Bible-readings for young men, now being conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, are times of great spiritual refreshing. Earnest prayer has been offered with reference to these meetings, and God has graciously answered and blessed the effort.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XIV.—IMPOSSIBLE TO RENEW TO REPENTANCE.

HEBREWS vi.

THE sacred writer enumerates four fundamental principles. Repentance from dead works, which in the old dispensation was symbolised by divers baptisms, or washings. Faith toward God, typified by the laying of hands on the head of the victim-sacrifices. The resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. And then he proposes not to lay them again, but to leave them. There is no thought, however, of deserting them. The great principles on which God saves the soul are identical in every age, and indispensable.

We can only leave them, as the child leaves the multiplication table, when it is well learnt, but which lies at the root of all after-study; as the plant leaves the root, when it towers into the majestic shrub, which draws all its life from that low origin; and as the builder leaves the foundation, that he may carry up stone on stone, and leans on the foundation most heavily, when he has left it at the furthest distance below him. And we are taught the reason why these principles are not laid afresh. It would be useless to do so; it would serve no good purpose; it would leave in the same state as it found them those who had apostatised from the faith. And so we are led to one of those passages which sensitive spirits have turned to their own torment and anguish; just as men will distil the rankest poison from some of the sweetest flowers.

I. HOW FAR WE MAY GO, AND YET FALL AWAY.—These apostate disciples had been enlightened (ver. 4). They had been led to see their sin and danger, the temporary nature of Judaism, the dignity and glory of the Saviour. Other Hebrews might be ignorant, the folds of the veil hanging heavily over their sight, but it could never be so with them, since they had stood in the midst of the Gospel's meridian light, and had been enlightened.

So may it be with us. Not like the savage, crouching before his fetich, or roaming over the wild; not like the follower of Confucius, Buddha, or Mahomet, groping in the twilight of nature, or religious guess-work; not like myriads in our own land, whose hearts are as dark as the chaos into which God commanded the primeval beam to shine; we have been enlightened. We may know that we are sinners; we may have learnt from childhood the scheme of salvation; we may be familiar with the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, into which angels desire to look; and yet we may fall away.

These Hebrews, here referred to, had also tasted of the heavenly gift. What gift is that? I hear a voice, which we know well, speaking from the well of Sychar, and saying: "The water that I shall give shall be in thee, springing up into everlasting life." It is the life of God in the soul; it is Christ Himself; and He is willing to be in us, like a perennial spring, unstanched in drought, unfrozen in frost, leaping up, in fresh and living beauty, like some warm spring that makes a paradise in the arctic circle.

But some are content not to receive it, only to taste it. This is what these persons did. They sipped the sweetness of Christ. They had a passing superficial glimpse into his heart. Like Gideon's soldiers, they caught up a few drops in their hands from the river of God, and hastened on their way. So we may have some pleasure in thoughts of Christ. His sufferings touch; his beauty attracts; his history moves and inspires. But it is only a taste; and yet we may fall away. They had also been made partakers of the Holy Ghost. It is not said that they had been converted, regenerated, or filled by the Holy Ghost. The expression is a very peculiar one, and it is used because the sacred writer could not affirm any of these things of them, and yet was anxious to show that they had been brought under his gracious influences. For instance, He had convinced them of sin, had striven with them, had plied them with warning and entreaty, with fear and hope. And they had so far yielded to Him as to give up some of their sins, and assume the outward guise of Christianity.

Moreover, they had tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come.—The first of these is obviously the Scriptures, and the second is the usual expression for the age in which we live, and which, with all its spiritual forces, was beginning to thrill the hearts of men when these words were penned. They liked a good sermon, the Bible was full of interest and charm, they had heard the prophets, and seen the Apostles of the Pentecostal age. All these had been analysed, weighed, and counted, and yet they were in peril of going back. Let us, therefore, beware!

II. WHAT IS IT TO FALL AWAY?—It is something more than to fall. The real child of God may fall, as David, or as Peter did, but there is a vast difference between falling and falling away. This latter experience can no more come to a real believer than a second flood of waters to the earth; but it will certainly find out the counterfeit and the sham.

To fall away is to go back from the outward profession of Christianity—not temporarily, but finally; not as the result of some sudden sin, but because the first outward stimulus is exhausted, and there is no true life beating at the heart, to repair or re-invigorate the wasting devotion of the life. It is to resemble those wandering planets, which never shone with their own light, but only in the reflected light of some central sun; but which, having broken from its guiding leash, dash further and further into the blackness of darkness, without one spark of life, or heat, or light. It is to return as a dog to its vomit, and as a sow to her filth; because the reformation was only outward and temporary, and the dog or sow natures were never changed through the gracious work of the Holy Spirit. It is to be another Judas; to commit the sin against the Holy Ghost; to lose all earnestness of feeling, all desire for better things, all power of tender emotion, and to become utterly callous and dead, as the pavement on which we walk, or the rusty armour hanging on the old castle's walls.

III. WHY IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO RESTORE SUCH TO REPENTANCE.—Notice, there is nothing said here of what God can do. The only question is as to the limits of human power, and the ordinary methods of influencing human wills. Also notice, we are not told that God could not save those who had fallen away; but that it is impossible to hope that a man who has passed through the experiences just described, and has nevertheless apostatised, can be reached or touched by any of those arguments or motives which are familiar weapons in the Gospel armoury. If the mightiest arguments have been brought to bear on the conscience in vain; if after some slight response, which gave hopes of better things, it has relapsed into the stupor and insensibility of its former state, there remains nothing more to be done. There is nothing more potent than the wail of Calvary's broken heart and the peal from Sinai's brow, and, if these have been tried in vain, no argument is left which can touch the conscience and arouse the heart. If those people had never been exposed to these appeals, there would have been some hope for them, but what hope can there be now, since, in having passed through them without permanent effect, they have become more hardened in the process than they were at first.

Here is a man dragged from an ice-pond, and brought into the infirmary. Hot flannels are at once applied, the limbs are chafed, every means known to modern science for restoring life is employed. At first it seems as if these appliances will take effect, there are twitchings and convulsive movements; but, alas! they soon subside, and the surgeon gravely shakes his head. "Can you do nothing else?" "Nothing," he replies; "I have used every method I can devise, and if these fail, it is impossible to renew again to life."

This passage has nothing to do with those who fear lest it condemns them. The presence of that anxiety, like the cry which betrayed the real mother in the days of Solomon, establishes beyond a doubt that you are not one that has fallen away beyond the possibility of renewal to repentance. If you are still touched by Gospel sermons, and are anxious to repent, and are in godly fear lest you should be a castaway, take heart; these are signs that this passage has no bearing on you. Why make yourself ill with a sick man's medicine? But if you are growing callous and insensible under the preaching of the Gospel, look into this passage, and see your doom, unless you speedily arrest your steps.

IV. THE NATURAL ILLUSTRATION (ver. 7).—Behold that field, well-situated, prepared by careful culture and arduous toil, the good seed is scattered with lavish hand, the rain comes oft upon it, the sunshine kisses it, the seasons, as they pass, woo it to bear fruit. At first it would appear as if it were about to answer the expectations freely entertained. But see, the show of green that covers its face turns out to be a crop of briars and thorns. The owner, for whom it was dressed, comes to visit it. "What," cries he, "have you done all you could—this and that and the other?" "All," is the reply. Then the decision comes back, stern and sad, "It is useless to expend more time or care. Leave it to its fate. Let no fruit grow on it henceforth and for ever."

We may resemble that field; and yet, whilst there is a spark of devotion, a thrill of holy longing, a sigh after a better life, a yearning to be penitent and holy, there is still hope. The great Husbandman will not cast us off so long as there is one redeeming feature in our condition. He will not break the bruised reed, or quench the smoking flax. He will not fail, nor be discouraged, until He has made the desert into a garden, and the wilderness like the paradise of God.

HIS MISSIONARY TRAVELS IN AFRICA.

No. II.

ENTERPRISING TRADERS.

PASSING on, I reached Bihé. The country there is inhabited by a very active tribe of Africans. They are greatly devoted to trade, and most enterprising. They carry on a large commerce in ivory, rubber, and other things. They have become very useful to us as porters, and as guides into the far interior. I rested for some months at Bihé, where the Americans have an interesting and successful mission. Then I proceeded to the coasts to Benguela, where I received letters from home, and was able to take some things for the return journey. Money is a very cumbersome thing in Africa. It takes the shape of cloth, beads, &c., for barter, and has all to be carried on the shoulders of porters. I reached Bihé a second time, and then passed into a country that had been almost entirely unknown. However, it proved to be very healthy and enjoyable; I should think it is about 4,000 to 5,000 feet above the level of the sea.

After entering into that country, we came on a tribe that were somewhat troublesome. They go about armed to the teeth, anxious to bring on a disturbance, so that they may get the best of it, and secure plunder. They gave us a good deal of anxiety, at first, but we managed to get safely through, and we went on, day after day, until we reached their capital. The chief came to see me, dressed in his royal robes. His custom is to levy very heavy blackmail. We had several things to talk about, however, as he found to his astonishment. Our conversation began about three o'clock in the afternoon, and it went on and on, with the chief seated in a chair and all the people gathered round. The man had never heard of these things before, and he was deeply interested. Towards evening and sat in his native costume. We went on discussing these matters, he listening intently and asking questions, till ten o'clock at night. At last he said, "You have explained everything to me; you are very reasonable. I understand your explanation very well, but I have one question to ask you before you leave, and I do not think you will be able to answer it." I said I would do my best to answer, if he would tell me what it was. He said, "Why do you think of going past my town and my people, to those in the far interior? We are just as ignorant of the things you speak of as they are." I confess I was not able to answer that question, and I told him so. I said I would not forget his request, and would represent it to others.

We went on towards the east, and found ourselves among a very industrious people. As we passed along we came to a chieftainess who was very helpful to us. She was a very powerful woman, and was the mother of several chiefs. From the first she proved a true friend to me. Before reaching her town my porters were every day getting more and more discontented. They were getting homesick, and would run away to get back to their wives and families, leaving their loads. At last they all came to a standstill, and struck work. I could only leave the matter in the hands of the Lord. The field is the world, and all we need is God's guidance. I was perfectly willing to remain there if it seemed his will that I should do so. As I sat, I looked up in the direction of the camp, and saw that there was a stir among the men. I noticed that one by one they lifted their loads, and, without any more talking or disputing, they rushed off, loads and all. At first I could not understand it, but at length I found the whole camp swarming with little black creatures that sting like wasps. There I saw the men going off holding the loads on their shoulders with one hand, and with the other picking off these little creatures from their bodies. I had to follow on behind as quickly as I could. On they went without a word, but at the next camp they had such a laugh about the way in which they had been "done for," and they were completely restored to good nature and to discipline. So God came to our help in that wonderful way.

THE SLAVE TRADERS' WORK.

We had now reached an important stage in our journey. Some of the men said they were not willing to go further, as the country beyond was almost entirely deserted, and they did not want to run any risk of being starved to death. I may explain that this region of country is deserted because of the ravages of the slave traders in former years. There are large clearances where villages had been, but now the place is overgrown, and all the people have been either captured or shot down.

The chieftainess came to my help, and supplied me with carriers to go with me the remainder of the journey to the Lualaba river. We went on by forced marches every day, but we were greatly impeded. We had to cross large rivers where there were no bridges, and the country was overgrown with jungle bush. At the end of twelve days the men were utterly exhausted. They had struggled on bravely, but they became leaner and leaner, and on the morning of the twelfth day they were all lying down in camp with no heart to get up and continue the march. I said they had better take a little longer rest, and I would go on ahead. As I started, I lifted up my heart to God in prayer that He would send us some relief. The work was his, and these men were in his employ. Up to that time we had not found any game; but that morning I came across a fresh trail of wild pig. Going on through the long grass, we came upon a clearing, where we found the animals all in a group. I crept forward and shot two of them. The men who were with me ran back to the others in great glee. On they came, and they all had a meal, which enabled them to start off next morning. What a happy journey they had, shouting back to one another: "After all we did not make a mistake in coming with the white man. You remember how we talked about him and his God, and here He has filled our bellies with pig meat." And so in a little while we reached the Lualaba river, which is really one of the main sources of the Congo.

MESSAGES FROM MOSHIDE.

Resting there, I sent on two messengers to the court of Moshide, who is the ruler of that great district of country. They sent out messengers to meet us. Each day they came with cooked food in baskets and everything ready for us. So much did they bring that we could not eat all, and we had to collect the people from the surrounding country to share in it, as we went along. At last we reached the capital, and the chief was very glad to receive me. He had never met an Englishman before, but he had heard the Arab reports about them, and these reports were very bad indeed. At that time some Arabs were with the chief, and they did all they could to persuade him that I was a rascal, and that he ought not to receive me. One day the chief turned to me and said: "Well, I do not know this man; I have never seen an Englishman before, but one thing I know—I know you Arabs." So he was content to suspend judgment concerning me, since he knew very well the character of the men who spoke against me.

In order to satisfy these people, I had to go into a kind of quarantine for six days, so that they might test whether my heart was as white as my skin. The doctors and medicine-men went through their ceremonies, making decoctions with a certain kind of bark in it. If they found each morning that the wood was sound, that proved that the heart of the visitor was sound. If the wood proved to be rotten, that would show that the heart of the visitor was rotten. Happily it turned out in my favour, and the order was given that the people should gather and give me a grand reception. Three days were occupied in gathering the people together. Then I had to march down through them and receive a military salute. In the centre of the court was the chief Moshong, surrounded by his five hundred wives, and the reception was very imposing and impressive.

OFFICERS OF STATE.

In connection with these wives, I may say that the chief has divided his large empire into so many sections. Each section is presided over by a minor chief, and this chief is ruled over by one of his wives. They are really officers of state, and all transactions are made through them. In this way, without books, and without archives, the chief holds the empire in his hand, and his name is feared everywhere. He was glad to receive me, and to hear that I thought of remaining with him. He provided me with men to send back for the loads I had left, and he also enabled me to start off a few men to go to Bihé, and await the arrival of expected helpers from England.

He did not receive me with his eyes blinded as to my true mission. It was one point for which I sought special grace from God, to deal faithfully and personally with him, so that he might not have me speaking smooth and pleasant things to him at first, and afterwards find out that there was deception on my part. I took every opportunity of speaking to him as plainly as possible. At one time I made a remark to him, the same as I had made a year or two before to the great chief of the Barotse Valley, which so enraged that chief against me that he ordered me from his presence and would not allow me near his country for nearly two months. What I said was this: "You great and mighty chief here in Africa amongst your own people are no greater in the sight of God than the poorest man in your empire." I did not know how it would turn out for a few moments; it was a very hard thing to have said to him in the presence of his courtiers. At last he replied with an effort, "It must be so; yes, it must be so. If God is so great as you say, and so high above us all, we must be all the same in his sight."

So this great chief made the wonderful confession before all his courtiers, and it had a great effect. Ever since he has taken every opportunity to come to my house. In the midst of the stress of business he would steal out in disguise and come as I explained to him some of the precious passages in God's Word. I cannot say, of course, that the man is truly a Christian, but he has opened his ear to God's word, and is willing to listen. That is one of the things that give us so much encouragement in Africa—the people are willing to listen to us. They are not bound up with any ingenious system of false religion, as they are in India and China. They have handed down to them from their forefathers a great accumulation of traditions and superstitions that really when examined have no connection the one with the other, but which have fastened themselves on the people. There they are weighted down by this agglomeration, and they groan under the burden. As we explain something of the grace of God, that will free them from all this, how earnestly they strain after it. There, as at home, we are dependent on the Spirit of God working with us. We find that no amount of reasoning or of wise words will make them wise. We can explain everything to them, and they intelligently understand all we have to say, but it is the power of the Holy Spirit that we need, to fall upon those who have heard the word. Especially do we need that you should bear us up in your prayers, that God would be with us in power. The one great thing that opposes the Gospel in Africa is not the systems of religions they have; it is their own degradation of heart, their love of sin and wickedness. One truly feels that the power of God is needed there to save these people out of such a mass of corruption as they are buried in.

AND SIT FOR HOURS WITH ME,

REINFORCEMENTS.

Mr. Swan, from Sunderland, and Mr. Faulkner, from Canada, arrived in the Garanganze country in 1887, and we had the pleasure of being together for some months. I have left them there for a time, going on grandly with the work. Although Mr. Swan had only been two years in the country, he could preach freely. Mr. Faulkner has a wonderfully warm heart for the children. We have had thrust upon us many little children, so as to save them really from cruel deaths. The youngest that came to me was only nine or ten months old. We were compelled to receive them, and to care for them. It is beautiful to see Mr. Faulkner, sitting, sewing little shirts for them, and acting the part of a mother to them in many ways. Let us bear these two brethren up in our hearts before God. They are going through many trials you at home know nothing about, but God is sufficient. The one thing they need is grace from God, and He is able to do far more than we can ask or think.

The object I had in going to Africa, viz., to establish a station in a healthy part of the interior, was accomplished after seven years. Although I travelled without a white or even a black companion, and with no body-guard or show of arms, I never received any ill treatment. Guns were carried by some of the party for hunting purposes, but I was generally careful to keep them out of sight during the day, a fact which the natives were not slow to notice. Repeatedly they expressed their joy and satisfaction at the way I had treated them by coming amongst them with "open hands." Difficulties, of course, arose from time to time by the way. My porters sometimes got me into trouble, and mistakes were often made by myself; but every difficult case that arose I referred to their own native tribunals, demanding justice from them; and without a single exception I received nothing but just and fair treatment. Let me also add, that from the Portuguese at Benguela I invariably experienced gentlemanly consideration. Though tariffs are heavy at their port, I yet found traders always moderate in their charges.

As the result of seven years' experience, I would say that you can go anywhere in Africa, if you only go in peace and love. I pray that God may thrust forth many more labourers into poor, dark Africa.

EVICTIONS IN LONDON.—The slackness of work has told severely upon many occupiers of "model" tenements during recent weeks. This has in many cases involved eviction, with much consequent misery and pain. Parents and children, with their little "lumber," are turned into the road, because the rent has not been paid. In Bow and East London generally, there are hundreds of poor families asking whose turn it will be next. Among these the workers of the North-East London Gospel Mission are engaged in ministrations of love and mercy. Only a few days ago they helped a poor evicted widow, whose family had lived for twenty-six years in the same house. The superintendent of the Mission is Mr. William Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

AT ATHERTON, NEAR MANCHESTER, an excellent work is carried on in connection with the mission-hall and ragged school. During 1888 many persons found peace in believing, most of them heads of families, who will, it is hoped, train up their children in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord." The missionaries conduct evening classes, at which the poor are taught to read, and, with increased intelligence, moral and spiritual advance is frequently observed. The inmates of the workhouse hear the Gospel from the lips of the mission workers, who also pursue a diligent course of tract distribution. The district is a very needy one, and Mr. James Rawlinson, the director, will be glad to hear from earnest Christians able and willing to assist in one or more of the many ways possible.

MR. J. DENHAM SMITH.

A FRIEND writes:—A few days back I called to see that dear old warrior of the Gospel, Mr. Denham Smith, who for so many years has delighted in preaching the grace of God. He has been laid low for some time past, and, as he puts it, is "still kept waiting at the gate." I found him very weak, having passed a most trying night of pain and coughing.

These are some of his words: "I am looking at Him. If I look at the past, I see nothing but the cross; if I look at the present or within, it is wretchedness; if I look at the future, there is heaven, God's delectable garden, God's paradise, glory—but I am looking at Christ; I keep looking at Him. God has been telling me from his own Word why He is keeping me here so long. One reason is that I may know his love more. 'Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth.' Another is that He may purge away the dross. 'He sitteth as a Refiner and Purifier.' Another, for the trial of faith. He says to me, 'You have been trying for fifty years to get others to believe. Now do you believe? The trial of your faith being much more precious,' &c.; and a fourth reason is that I may have little intervals in which to tell Him how good and how precious He is to me."

I was truly delighted to be with him, and hold intercourse with one who seems so near the pearly gates.

"NO WORK TO DO."

ON Thursday night, last week, Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle was the scene of an immense gathering of "unemployed dockmen," for whom an admirable programme was provided. They were a quiet, almost listless, throng. The average age of the majority appeared to be 35 or a little over. Scarcely any were under 25, while very many were men of 60 and over. An abundant meal was served by the lads of the Labour House, and during dinner music was supplied from the ample resources of the Homes.

After the protracted meal had come to a close, Dr. Barnardo found the opportunity of a "straight talk" to his guests. Having proferred some opening words of sympathy, he glided into a little disquisition on want of work. He advised them to make up their minds that the public-house should not have a penny of their money, particularly seeing that times are so hard. "We have got too many men in London," he continued, "and there are some parts of the world where they have not got enough." His advice was that the young, the strong, the healthy, and the unencumbered among his audience should "Go west." Where there is a will there is a way, and if such a recommendation can dispel the apathy of too many of our workless workers, good results may yet follow to the labour market and to the labourers.

Ned Wright and Charles Inglis followed with a pair of pithy Gospel appeals. There was still a long evening left, and Rev. Walter J. Mayers turned it to instructive use with an admirable series of dissolving views, with a tender Gospel commentary interspersed with solo singing. It may be added that personal inquiries disclosed the fact that, in addition to ordinary dockmen, over forty different trades and callings were represented amongst the gathering, among whom were not a few educated men who had fallen so low in life that only the dock gate remained to them as their sphere of casual labour.

"COLONEL" AND MRS. BOOTH-CLIBBORN have been addressing meetings at Neuchatel, convened by personal invitation. The principles and methods of the Salvation Army have been set forth in detail, and altogether without outside molestation.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

EXETER HALL, with which so many memories are associated, lends itself to a great variety of agencies in the interests of the young men of London. Never, during the entire course of its history, has it been put to a better use than now—a climax of usefulness having been reached by the special mission conducted by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith.

The evangelists are young men, and also young men's men, by special endowment of nature and grace. Mr. Fullerton is a man of a chaste spirit and of rare mental gifts, with a felicitous style of speech. He can hold any audience, night after night, without any decline of interest. His coadjutor, Mr. Manton Smith, is, in many important respects, his complement, and their dual ministry is perfect. With a unity of purpose, they are agreed as to the exercise of their special gifts, and each holds the other in the highest esteem.

Aiming at the immediate decision of their hearers for Christ, everything is concentrated upon that one object. They look as regularly for anxious inquirers at the close of every service as the farmer for the reaping at the harvest moon. The daily prayer-meetings have been crowded, and an earnest spirit of prayer has been manifested. Bible-readings, on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 3.30., are conducted by Mr. Fullerton. These are of intense interest, for Mr. Fullerton has a deep acquaintance with Bible truth. On Saturday evenings, song services are given and are attended with most blessed results. They are really evangelistic addresses illustrated throughout by sacred songs.

The evangelists have had a choice band of workers for the inquiry-meetings, foremost amongst them being Mr. E. J. Kennedy, the active secretary of the Y.M.C.A. There have been inquirers after each service, and many have found peace in believing. How great a change will be effected in our houses of business if a goodly number of young men become converted it is impossible to say; but the committee of the Y.M.C.A. have this issue in view, and thereby justify the large expenditure of the mission. Twenty pounds per day appears to be a large sum, but the committee are assured of general sympathy with the undertaking, and confidently hope that friends will enable them to discharge all liabilities, and to send a thankoffering to Mr. Spurgeon's Society of Evangelists, in recognition of the services of Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. C.

SOUTHSEA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—The fifth annual report gives an account of earnest efforts in many directions. Among the many operations, the one most prominent just now is that of reaching the unemployed and needy by means of free suppers. This is in continuation of a plan which has been followed for some years, and has been attended with much blessing. Temporal benefit is the way to the ears and hearts of many, and inclines those who would otherwise be unfriendly to listen to the Gospel. Communications respecting the work should be addressed to Mr. John Denning, Ebenezer, Saxeweimar-road, Southsea, Hants.

SWALWELL, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.—The blessing of God has rested upon several missions held in this village during the past year, so that a number are now rejoicing in new-found peace. The converts are almost entirely from among the young men and women. There is no provision for our young men in the shape of reading-rooms or coffee-rooms, &c. I have seen them hanging about the streets in rain, sleet, or snow, and I have long desired to provide some place of refuge for them. We have now started a branch of the Y.M.C.A., and in a few weeks forty-four members were enrolled. New premises will be ready, we hope, shortly, but we need help to furnish them very plainly. Will your readers remember our colliery and working lads this wintry weather, and help us to provide a comfortable room for them?

(REV.) W. R. THOMPSON.

Centenary-house, Blaydon-on-Tyne, near Newcastle.

For the Young.

TO ENGLISH BOYS AND GIRLS.

DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,

How you would have enjoyed Volrent, and how often I longed to show you the people and their ways; but, as that was not possible, I must tell you about them instead. Volrent is built on the side of a hill so steep that you go downstairs from one street to another. There is just level ground enough for one street on the hill-top, where are the school in the ancient chateau, the Catholic chapel, and the "Place." The "Place" is just a wide thrashing-floor, with a huge crucifix set up in the middle of it. Sometimes the "aire" was heaped with sheaves of barley, sometimes of sainfoin, but all went on as if it were not there. I never could get used to it; but no one seemed to notice it, and the sculptured form on the cross looked straight into the always open door of the café.

THE LAVENDER HARVEST.

It was Saturday evening when we arrived, and the first sound we heard on Sunday morning was a drum beating almost under our windows. Every village has its "Maire," and he gives his orders by beat of drum. This time it was to announce that the lavender harvest was postponed for three weeks. Did you ever hear of the lavender harvest? We were high up on the shoulders of the mountains, and the mountain top belongs to the Commune, so, to give every one an equal chance, no one was to begin before the others, and no one was to cut it before it was ripe. The people in the village are very, very poor, and this harvest is, above all others, the harvest of the poor.

It seemed a very pleasant harvest; the heat was over, and the wide mountain slopes were blue—the strange grey blue of the lavender spikes; and how sweet and pure the air was you cannot imagine. One woman told me she had cut 150 lbs. weight in a day, and she would sell it for 2s. 6d. per 100 lbs. The women came down laden with their fragrant burden, and all the village was soon sweet with lavender. It was piled in heaps, spread out on the "aires," and night and day the lavender stills were at work to make the lavender oil.

It was sad, when all was so sweet and healthful out of doors, to find and so many sick. I can hardly say I was very sorry for this, as sickness opens many doors which would otherwise be shut to a Protestant. One dear Christian woman was helpless and paralysed. She could not speak at first, but looked delighted when I opened her well-read Testament; by degrees, her power of speech came back, and she was disappointed if a day passed without a visit. How glad we were to be there just when she needed us!

Then a poor old man, almost close to her house, was far more to be pitied. Crippled with rheumatism, he could not even turn in bed; his wife was out at work all day long, and he had recently become totally blind. There was so little one could do for him. It seemed a great comfort to him to tell out his troubles, but when I read or spoke of Jesus he seemed to pay no attention—he only begged for a bit of chocolate or an egg. Poor man! With a sick woman across the ravine it was very different; she seemed to drink in the Gospel message. But the Curé got hold of an "Evangile" which I had given, tore it up, and told them they would

GO TO HELL IF THEY READ PROTESTANT BOOKS

Don't you think the Curé is the most to be pitied of all? What must God think of one who not only rejects his Word himself, but forbids others to read it? One old man, also Catholic, came one day to ask if I could give him some medicine. I could do little for him but tell him of what Jesus had done and could do. I never saw him again; his door was locked when we passed his house. His wife was in the habit of locking the door when she left him at home, and one Sunday evening when she came home she found him dead. He had got out of bed and was kneeling by the table, his head resting on it. I am glad, even now, to think that no one was there to disturb that last prayer.

Now I must tell you of a young Protestant girl who has greatly excited our sympathy. She lives in a hamlet an hour's distance from Volrent. It is just in another parish, and between the two pastors poor Rostan had been left out of sight. The people went to hear the Ancelon pastor when he came to Volrent, as their own pastor lives two and a half hours' away, and neither pastor knew of this poor girl. We found her upon a rug, and leaning against the wall; her lower limbs are paralysed, and have been since she was six—only think what a life! She can drag herself across the floor, and has somehow learned to sew; and it is she who has cared for her little nephew of three, who looks healthy and well looked after. Father and mother dead, and no one ever taught her anything—not a letter, or a hymn, or a text.

I wish you could have seen her when I gave her a Gospel, and told her that when anyone came to the house she could ask them to read her a verse or a chapter. I never saw a Gospel give so much pleasure. She seems very intelligent, and if she were near us she would soon learn to read, and it seemed to me she was all ready to accept the Saviour for her own. She is just twenty. Will you think of her weary life, dear young friends, and thank God for yours?—Yours affectionately,

S. R. GELDARD.

THE CHRISTIAN'S WAR-SONG.

THE battles of our God
Are ready for the fighting;
Then gird your armour on,
Nor fear the foemen's smiting.
Himself, the Lord of Hosts
Will lead his children on,
Till every foe is vanquished quite,
And every triumph won.

The harvests of our God
Are ready for the reaping;
Then let us hasten forth,
Nor linger longer sleeping.
Until the harvest-home
Shall bring our toil's reward,
Oh, let us reap the golden ears,
And bind them for the Lord.

The cross of One who died
To give our sins remission,
Is waiting to be borne
In patience and contrition.
Oh, take his easy yoke,
And bear it through the night,
Till on your pathway streams at last
His own eternal light.

Then, bearing Jesu's cross,
And fighting Jesu's fight,
Let us go forward still
In his unfailing might.
Till, when the day shall dawn
That bids our conflict cease,
Our earthly battle-cries shall change
To heavenly hymns of peace.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOME.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S Home for Destitute and Deserted Children, Clayton House, Epsom, has now attained its majority. Through continued illness, Miss Mittendorff was not able to write the report for the year just ended. It has, however, been drawn up by Miss Macgrath, who has for many years nobly and faithfully laboured in connection with the institution.

Though Miss Macgrath is acting superintendent, the Home still enjoys the heartfelt interest and prayerful sympathy of Miss Mittendorff, who will be glad, when sufficiently recovered, to attend drawing-room meetings, and recount the Lord's dealings with her in the inception and continued support of the work. During the year there was both ebb and flow in the affairs of the Home, but supplies never failed. There were seasons of anxiety, but never of doubt that the needs of the little ones would be met. Rich friends have died and others left the country, but others have been raised up, and praise has accordingly followed prayer to the God of all mercy.

The year was begun with sixty-eight children. Thirteen fresh ones were afterwards received, while six left the Home, three of them for service, and three to reside with their friends. The Home is continued on the same lines, as heretofore, of dependence upon God. Communications should be addressed to Miss Macgrath. Friends desiring to help in special ways may learn from the report how they can best assist.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—The London Association in Aid of Moravian Missions has issued an appeal, asking for funds to meet present pressing needs. It seems that, though the total expenditure last year was carefully kept within that of the previous twelve months, there was a deficiency of more than £3,000. Among the negroes of Surinam, South America, the Hlubi tribes in Kaffraria, South Africa, and neglected populations in the British West Indies, the Moravians have operations which should on no account be allowed to languish. The Leper Asylum at Jerusalem is another important undertaking, to assist in the proper maintenance of which many Christians would willingly make personal sacrifices. Copies of the appeal may be had from the secretaries, 29, Ely-place, Holborn, London, E.C.

THE LATE REV. THOMAS TRUSCOTT,

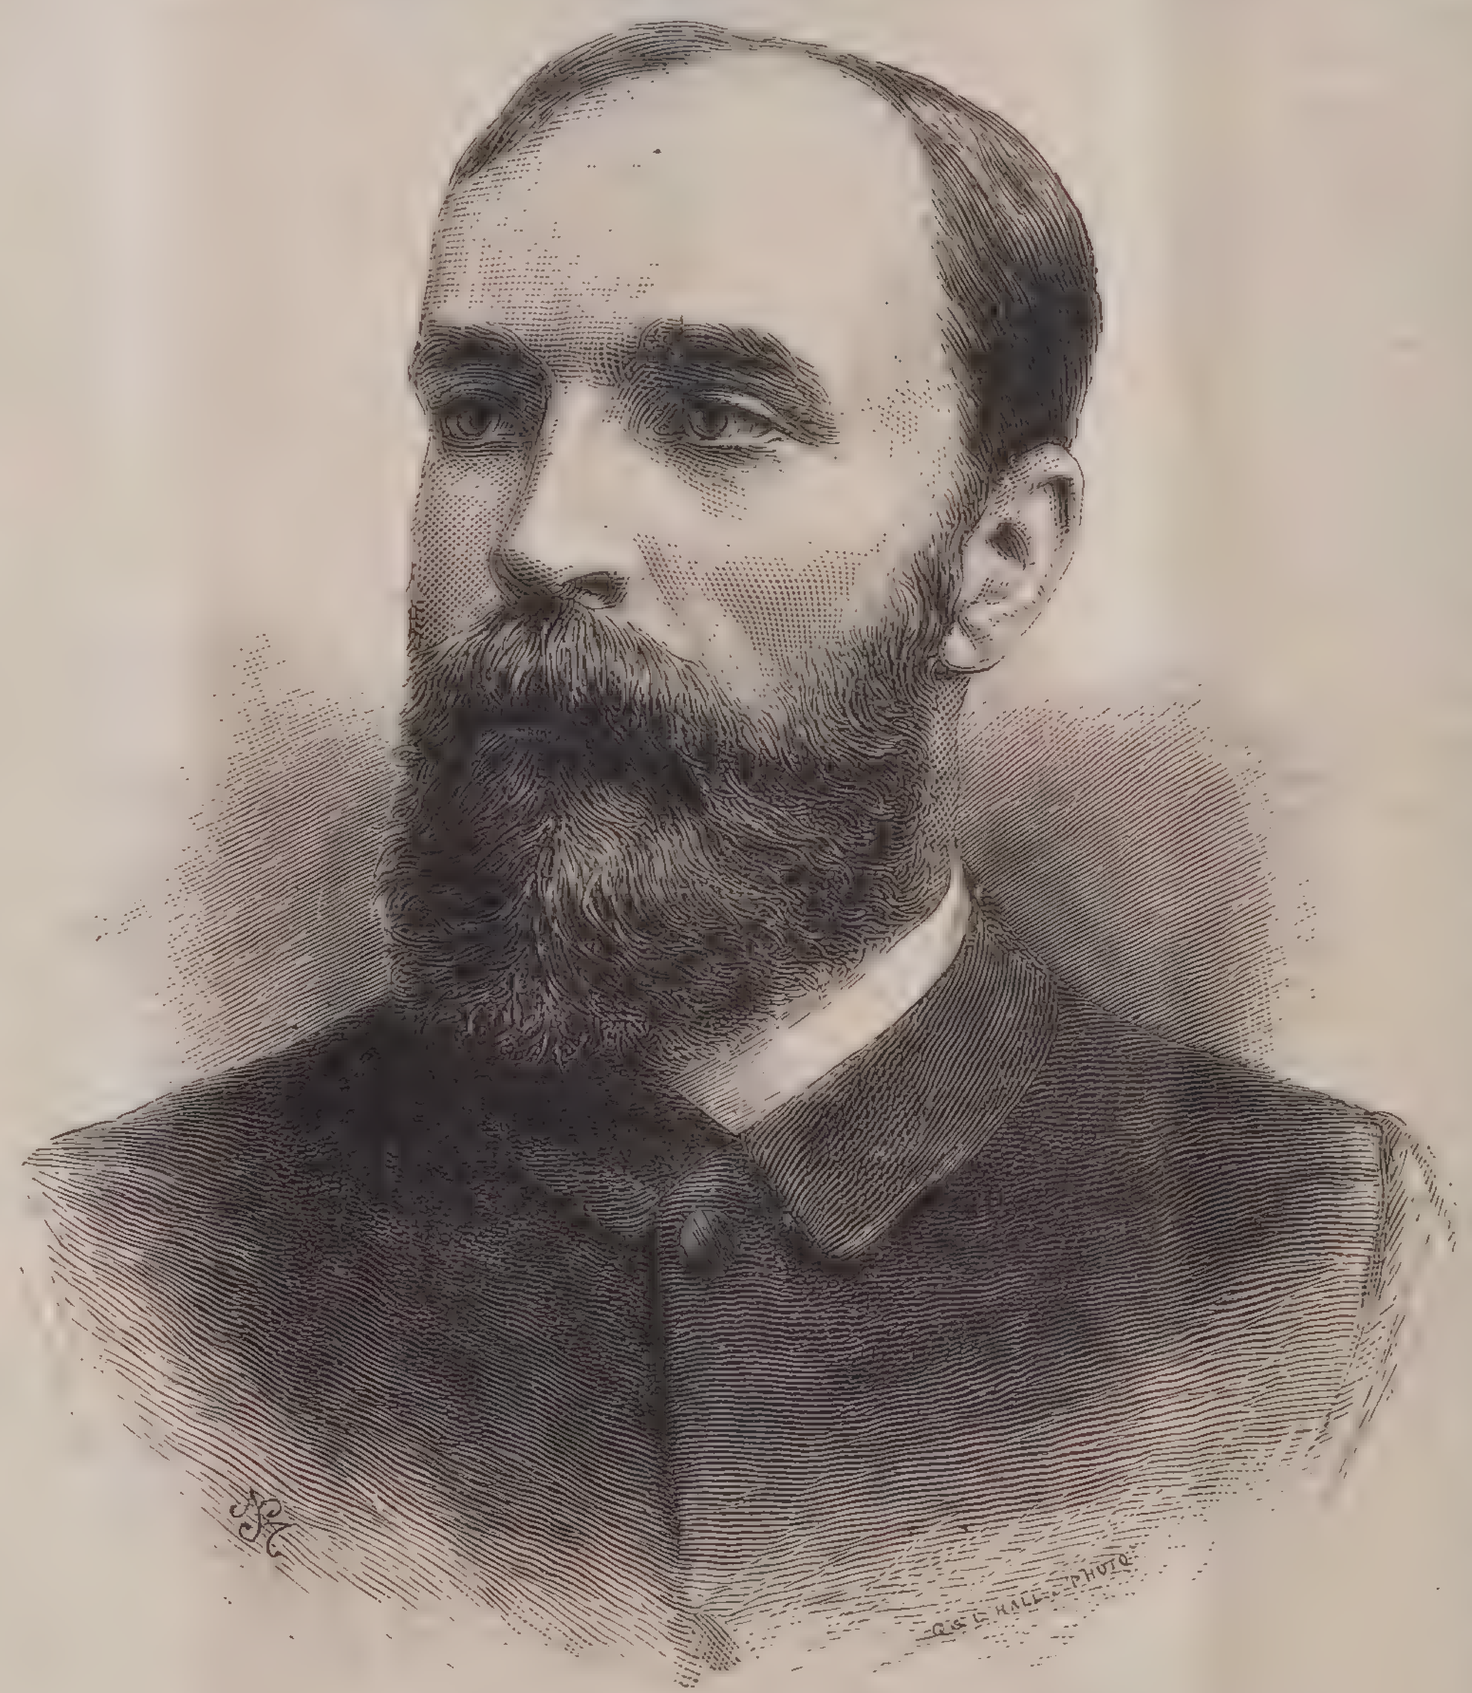
United Methodist Free Church Missionary, Sierra Leone.

ON the fifteenth of last November, news was telegraphed to England of the death of this devoted missionary. In his own denomination—the United Methodist Free Churches—the tidings were received with something like consternation, and they excited the deepest regret wherever his work and his worth were known.

Much, humanly speaking, depended on his life. Difficulties had been surmounted which had baffled some of his predecessors. He was on the very crest of a wave of useful schemes. The foundation stones of a new chapel, to replace the old "Samaria," had to be laid on December 4. A visit to the interior, where he had established a mission, was in contemplation. His hands were full of work. Despite the dangers of the climate, no special grounds for apprehension were known in this country when the startling tidings of his death arrived.

THOMAS TRUSCOTT was generally supposed to be a Cornishman, but he was born at Lifton, in Devonshire, on April 17, 1848. As his father was a local preacher amongst the Bible Christians, Thomas received his earliest training amongst that simple and warm-hearted people. While he was yet a boy, his father removed to the parish of Linkinhorne, in Cornwall; and, finding no church of his own denomination there, he joined the Free Methodists in the Liskeard Circuit, attending with his family the chapel at Caradon Town.

The conversion of the son, Thomas, occurred when he was eleven years of age. As he had been piously brought up, and was brought to the knowledge of the truth at so tender an age, it is probable that no very striking phenomena could be recorded. After his conversion he joined the fellowship of the Church, and soon began to engage in Christian work. He served in the Sunday-school, and, ere he was out of his teens, he began to call sinners to repentance. At an early age Thomas Truscott was placed on the local preachers' "plan," and preached in the towns and villages of that part of Cornwall "the words of this life." His talents, his zeal, his usefulness, evidently fitted him for a higher sphere.



For a year or two he laboured as an evangelist. For this position he was eminently fitted. The fervour of spirit which was one of his most marked qualities, made his ministry one of power. At a later period, when his entrance on foreign mission work was unavoidably delayed, he engaged, with happy results, in special services for the awakening of men. Indeed, his work in this sphere was so much owned of God that some, who rejoiced in his success, questioned the wisdom of his foreign appointment. On this matter, however, Mr. Truscott had himself no doubt or question. It was in his heart to live or die for the sable sons of Africa.

In due time Mr. Truscott entered the itinerant ministry of the United Methodist Free Churches. His name first appears on the printed minutes of the Annual Assembly of 1872, where he stands for Tunbridge. As a matter of fact, he had served as a supply for that circuit during a considerable portion of the previous year; the circuit having become vacant through the resignation of a minister. From Tunbridge he proceeded to Bristol South, where he continued for three years, and where he formed a circle of loving friends. His next appointment was to the Farsley and Yeadon Circuit, a group of important churches in the cloth-manufacturing district near Leeds. Here also Mr. Truscott laboured three years. His next appointment was to the Todmorden Circuit; his place of residence being at Cornholme, a pretty village in the valley which runs from Todmorden to Burnley. Here he continued for one year only.

At the end of that year the current of his life was entirely changed. He seemed to have fairly entered on the itinerant life of the Methodist minister, but its course was interrupted by the deep conviction that the foreign field was his providential sphere. The Free Methodists had possessed a mission in Sierra Leone ever since 1859. It was a very important mission, numbering in 1880, 2817 members, with 489 candidates for membership, 16 chapels, 88 local preachers, and 127 leaders. In that year a superintendent was wanted, and, after prayerful consideration, Mr. Truscott said to the Missionary Committee, "Here am I; send me." His offer was accepted, and in 1880 Mr. Truscott was appointed for Freetown, Sierra Leone.

We have already intimated that his entrance on this field of labour was delayed. The cause was a deeply painful one. Ere he could set out, his wife died after giving birth to a son. Their only other child had died six months before. This bereavement prevented Mr. Truscott's immediate departure, and he employed the time of his detention in holding special services for the revival of the work of God. Having made arrangements for the upbringing of his motherless child, Mr. Truscott desired to proceed to his chosen sphere. The Annual Assembly of 1881 again designated him for Western Africa, and he arrived at Freetown on October 25, 1881; being received with the demonstrativeness of the African temperament, which was not altogether to his taste. Indeed, he thought it right afterwards to repress, with caution, that extravagance both of joy and grief in which negroes are apt to indulge. We may here mention that the dear child he left behind lived only two years. Tidings of his death reached his father in Africa when he was preparing a sermon on our Lord's raising of the widow's son at Nain.

On his arrival Mr. Truscott found many things out of joint, and he at once set about putting them right. In the absence of an English minister, Rev. Philip Wilson, a venerable coloured man, had acted as superintendent; but he was aged and approaching his end. Indeed, he died a few days before Mr. Truscott's arrival. The latter entered upon his work with zeal and pursued it with assiduity. He did not love to see his name and doings in print, and there was no great effusiveness in his communications to the home authorities. But, though he sought for no fame and did not even court publicity, he ever lived as in his Master's sight, and his labour was not in vain.

The most marked quality in Mr. Truscott's mental or spiritual make was his fervour. "Fervent in spirit" would be a true description of him. He was eminently holy, yet there have been men of as deep devotedness to God as he, whose zeal did not provoke many as his did. There was something diffusive, magnetic, electric in it. His presence was an impulse, an inspiration. His fervour did not, when he preached or spoke, manifest itself by loud tones or violent gestures; it operated silently, but irresistibly. As heat raises the surrounding temperature, so, as you listened to him, you were aware of a strange kindling of heart and soul which put you in unison with the speaker.

Mr. Truscott's zealous labours, and the influence of the unhealthy climate, at length so told on him that he was brought almost to the dust of death. Indeed, but for the wondrous kindness of brother missionaries, his useful life would have ended some years ago. Wesleyan brethren had him conveyed to their mission house, and there they nursed him night and day. As the only means of prolonging his life, he was put on shipboard in an unconscious state. He was some days at sea ere he became master of his thoughts. He landed in England, and was present at the Annual Assembly of 1884, where he was received with enthusiasm. On his recovery he returned to the colony, contrary to the wish of many members of the Missionary Committee, who felt he was running enormous risks after he had been brought so low. But nothing could repress his burning zeal or deter him from prosecuting the work he believed God had given him to do.

He paid a short and unexpected visit to England in 1886. He had gone to the United States partly on grounds of health—for which occasional absence from the colony is essential—and partly to solicit help towards chapel-building projects which were important to the well-being of his mission. When there, the weather became colder than he could bear; and, as no vessel would sail to Sierra Leone for several weeks, he took the first ship for Liverpool. On his arrival he proceeded to the house of his brother, Rev. John Truscott, of Manchester, an esteemed minister of the same denomination. Thither his brothers and sisters came to meet him. It was a farewell gathering, although they knew it not. They saw him no more.

His last illness was very short. The rains had been very heavy, and when the dry season set in, it was accompanied by such intense heat that Mr. Truscott proposed to his English colleague, Rev. William Vivian, that they should seek a few days' rest and change at the farm of a friend, Hon. S. Doyle. Not finding the expected benefit at the farm, the two brethren returned to Freetown, and Mr. Truscott became violently ill. Two medical men were assiduous in their attentions. His colleague and other missionaries did all that love could prompt or experience could suggest, but in vain. On Thursday, November 15, he passed peacefully away. He died of the accumulated effects of the climate. As soon as his death was known, the street where he had lived was filled with crowds, who rent the air with cries—which Mr. Vivian sought in vain to repress. Hundreds visited the mission house to see the remains; and, with every token of respect and love, he was laid the next day in the house appointed for all living. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

HEBREW CHRISTIANS IN WHITECHAPEL.

ON a recent evening, the mission-hall in Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, was crowded with a number of earnest Christians, of Hebrew parentage, in response to an invitation from Mrs. Ehrlich, the wife of the missionary to the Jews in that quarter of the Metropolis. After tea a public gathering was held, presided over by Dr. Tyler, minister of Trinity Congregational Church, Mile End New Town. Outside there was a crowd anxious to gain admission, but the hall was already inconveniently crowded.

Dr. Tyler, remarking upon the fact that the district was getting more thickly inhabited by Jews every year, said the need for religious instruction among them was correspondingly on the increase. He could think of little more interesting than to see these descendants of an ancient people listening patiently to the Gospel, preached in a simple and humble way. He spoke of the need of more commodious premises, and trusted the missionary might be long spared to prosecute his labours in the district.

Addresses were also delivered by Rev. J. B. Barraclough, Rev. J. M. Eppstein, Rev. R. Dawson, Mr. Field, and others; the need of a larger hall was strongly urged.

A CEYLON CONVENTION.

CEYLON was visited in the early part of 1888 by two earnest evangelists, Rev. G. C. Grubb and Colonel Oldham. God blessed their visit to the conversion of planters and others. Shortly after the missioners left us, a Christian Union was started, and it was felt that it would be good to hold Christian Conventions from time to time. Two such gatherings have now been held, and both these have proved to be seasons of special blessing.

The second Convention lately held at Newera Eliya was felt, by those who attended it, to be one which will not be easily forgotten. We were fortunate in having the presence of Mr. George Müller of Bristol, who delivered three addresses on the Power of Prayer, the Power of Faith, and Holiness. The simple record of what God had wrought through him went straight to all hearts. In his three addresses Mr. Müller gave an account of his experience, his work, and his line of action, which was listened to with the deepest interest.

The Convention, which lasted three days, was a great success, for Jesus was kept "in the midst" throughout the meetings, and all minor distinctions were lost sight of. It is proposed to hold the next convention in Colombo, and it is hoped that large numbers may be able to attend it. The Holy Spirit is certainly working in the hearts of many in this island, both among Europeans and natives and we are praying for a still greater increase of true religion among us.

FRESH AIR FOR LONDON CHILDREN.—In The Queen, of last week, Lady Lamington writes a very pathetic plea on behalf of the movement for transplanting children from the over-crowded parts of the Metropolis to some country retreat in the summer time.

FRENCH IN KABYLIA.

OUTSIDE the rocky wall which encloses the Grande Kabylie proper runs the river Sahel, on both sides of which are scattered numerous villages of Kabyles, speaking the same language as those within the Jur Jura. A good many French villages are situated at the foot of the southern slopes of the mountains and on the borders of the Sahel. One of them is the village of Akbou, and above it are many villages of Kabyles.

Mr. A. S. Lamb, missionary of the North African Mission, lives at Akbou, and two Christian women have come to live near him in a Kabyle hut which cannot be very comfortable in winter. But, as Miss Collins and Miss Brunel love the people, and speak their language to some extent, they are willing to confront all the hardship and privation for the sake of bringing them to the knowledge of Christ. They depend on God's good providence to supply them with the means for their daily support. Mr. and Mrs. G. Pearse, of Algiers, know them both personally, and think highly of their zeal and devotedness, and will be thankful if their singular self-consecration will interest Christian friends in France and England, or elsewhere, to think of them and extend some pecuniary assistance, as they have no means of their own. The people have been won by their adopting two orphan children.

FROM CONSTANTINOPLE.

DEAR SIR,—My interpreter being laid by with the Kaukasian fever, and I myself having a slight touch of it, also the roads being blocked up with snow, and the communications in the Kaukasus being very difficult at this season, I was led to change my plans and to come apart for a little while to Constantinople. From Batoum we had a very pleasant passage, although at the same time it was very rough on the north shore of the Black Sea. We had a whole day on shore on Sunday, January 6, and I had happy opportunities for preaching the word to the Armenians at Samsoun. We entered the Bosphorus on Tuesday, and landed here in the afternoon of that day.

This is one of the world's great centres where every nationality is represented, and where there are great opportunities for bringing the Gospel to many nations. The Americans are doing a noble work in this city, and in the adjoining countries. They have their witnesses in Asia Minor, in Bulgaria, and in different parts of Turkey. Also the Free Church of Scotland has a good work amongst the Jews, of whom there are said to be 80,000 in this city. The Strangers' Rest, under Miss Armytage, is a place of refuge for many weary wanderers; the Greeks seem to be specially drawn to it, and happy opportunities are given for bringing them under the power of the word. "There is much land to be possessed" in this great thoroughfare of nations. One is brought in close contact with Europe and Asia.

The week of prayer is observed here in unison with Christians at home and elsewhere, and there seems to be a spirit of love and oneness amongst the various workers such as is not always seen in lands more highly favoured.

I hope to pay a short visit to Athens, and perhaps Smyrna, and then to return to Russia, and to continue my visits to the prisons. Permission has been given me again at Odessa for some public addresses in German, but at present Odessa is inaccessible by water, and I shall have to go by steamer to Sevastopol, and then by land to Odessa.

My address will shortly be Hôtel d'Europe, Odessa, where letters will reach me, God willing.

Yours sincerely,

F. W. BAEDEKER.

WORK AT COSTERS' HALL.

AT the present moment Costers' Hall, Hoxton, is as fine an illustration of the development of ragged-school work as London can supply. Mr. W. J. Orsman is virtually the pastor of a working mission church; the 135 volunteers who help in carrying on the aggressive Christian service in the neighbourhood are for the most part drawn from the people themselves.

At this season of the year some extra endeavour is made to infuse more gladness into the lives of the children in a way that such subjects will best appreciate. On Wednesday evening last week a Robin Dinner, for which Rev. Charles Bullock collects the funds, was given to 450 guests. This is always a notable occasion, at which Mr. E. Compton, Comptroller of the Post Office Savings Bank, usually takes pleasure in presiding. This week the annual distribution to about 750 Sunday-school scholars has taken place, the gifts, supplied by a number of friends, consisting of wearing apparel, toys, albums, books, seasonable cards, &c. In addition to all this and the soup kitchen, which on certain days of the week supplies a quart of savoury stew with a piece of bread for a penny, cocoa breakfasts are supplied on two or three mornings of the week to large companies of famishing little ones who attend the Board schools of the neighbourhood.

The general work of the Mission at Costers' Hall is carried on with that vigour which alone commands success. As each one who becomes associated with the main body is expected to do something, "the little one" of old Golden-lane of a few years ago may be said literally to have become a thousand. The work was originally intended to benefit street traders, and so successfully has this been effected, that the influence of Mr. Orsman and his staff is plainly visible throughout London. While the costers are still far from being reclaimed for Christ, they are yet a civilised class when compared with their ancestors of a generation or two ago. One of the most valuable reference books concerning the condition of London in the early years of our Queen's reign is Mayhew's "London Labour and the London Poor"; and we are glad to think that the change for the better which has come over what ought always to be a useful body of traffickers, is as remarkable as anything connected with the history of London. The seventh Earl of Shaftesbury repeatedly dwelt on this fact with delight; and while he was himself "K.G. and Coster," there were many poor persons associated with Costers' Hall that ranked among the good earl's personal friends. The periodical donkey and pony shows which this nobleman and Mr. Orsman originated, have in themselves done wonders for the men and the animals. Such a congregation of contented, well cared-for four-footed servants as were shown at the People's Palace last July, was in itself striking evidence of the fact, that when you benefit a body of men in a Christian sense you also benefit their hearts. The costers are as proud of their hall as if they belonged to a City guild; and it is an immense convenience to them to be able to hold their club meetings in warm, well lighted rooms, free of charge, instead of going to public-houses as used to be the case.

The Sunday services are held both morning and evening, Mr. Orsman, as a rule, himself preaching the evening sermon, Mr. C. Hart taking the morning. On the Sunday afternoon the hall is thronged with about eight hundred Sunday-school scholars, and as many more might be taken if there were available accommodation. The week-night services and classes are also a special feature, and they testify to the good that is being done quite as forcibly as the fuller meetings. Much is also done in the way of house-to-house visitation, so that the neighbourhood around the hall is well known and understood. So interested was the great Earl of Shaftesbury in what was going on, that he frequently went among the people himself. During the summer weather open-air preaching is carried on in front of the Royal Exchange and elsewhere, the summer quiet of many parts of the old City helping to make such efforts effective.

Thus, after looking at it from all sides, impartial observers will be bound to admit that London is all the better for this Golden-lane Mission. The costers have been reformed, they are still improving; and poor female street traders have often been started in a business by grants free of interest from the Emily Fund—the best monument that could have been raised to the sainted Countess of Shaftesbury. The costers have found that their Christian friends came to them laden with blessing in both hands, relating to this world as well as the next. Before very long we believe that they will have provided for them a large block of model dwellings, specially adapted for their requirements. G. H. P.

SALVATION ARMY SHELTERS.

THE scheme which Rev. W. Booth has recently drawn up for providing food and shelter at a nominal cost for the poor and outcast of London is by degrees being translated into practical Christian endeavour. On Wednesday, last week, another building was opened, designed to befriend destitute and unemployed men, with a view to assisting them to a higher life. The new Shelter is situate in St. John's-square, Clerkenwell, and provides sleeping accommodation for 250 persons, who will be supplied with bed, supper, and breakfast for threepence each. The institution includes a kitchen, where the poor of the neighbourhood may obtain cooked food at prices as low as those charged to the lodgers.

At the opening ceremony, Mr. Booth spoke of the undoubted success with which the Shelter at Limehouse has so far been carried on. During eleven months there have been 29,000 lodgers, no fewer than 595,000 meals having been supplied at prices ranging from a farthing upwards. Loving sympathy is cultivated, and reciprocated in the Shelter. Nineteen of the men who have used the place have professed to enter upon a life for God. Moreover, keeping people from the low associations of the common lodging-house, must be beneficial to them morally.

Mr. T. A. Denny having commended the project, Mr. Booth then gave some details of his further plans. He intends shortly to open a food depôt in Marylebone, and a Shelter for Women in Hanbury-street, Spitalfields, with a crèche and other agencies, such as poor and needy women will doubtless readily use. The Shelters are being fitted up from funds contributed by the public. If they are patronised to the extent which is expected, it is believed that they will afterwards pay their working expenses.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Within a fortnight after receiving the £100 sent by the Bishop of Exeter "as a pledge of unshaken confidence and affection," the C.M.S. also received the following sums, accompanied by warm expressions of sympathy and confidence:—"Gratitude," £1000; "A Canon's Reply to the Canon," £325; Rev. G. F. Whidborne, £100; Rev. Canon France-Hayhurst, £100; the congregation of St. Paul's, Leamington, per Rev. J. Bradley, £30; Rev. Canon Carus, £25.

SOUTHPORT.—Meetings were held here during the Week of Prayer in the reading-room of the Y.M.C.A. The meeting on Saturday evening was devoted to testimony and prayer, and some marvellous testimony to the power of prayer was given. One man attributed his conversion to the influence exerted by one of the prayer-meetings of the Week of Prayer in the same room last year. He came in partly under the effects of drink, and with no knowledge of the nature of the meeting, but the power of the Spirit reached him, and he left the meeting convinced of sin; shortly afterwards he found peace in believing. After the lapse of twelve months he thus returned to give glory to God.

"THE HALF WAS NOT TOLD ME."

1 KINGS x. 1—9.

"IT was a true report," said Sheba's Queen,
"I heard in my own land; there I was told
Of that magnificence I now behold,
But I believed it not. Now have I seen
Thy majesty, have heard thy wisdom, and Communed with thee of all the weighty things
Which lodgment found within my heart. O kings
Thou art the mightiest. The men who stand Within thy courts are blessed. Thy fame exceeds
All I had heard. The Lord who did delight
To make thee king, and clothed thee with his might,
Is God. O king, where'er I hear thy deeds,
Thy power, thyself, and thy great God extolled,
I shall reply, 'The half has not been told.'"

And I believed it not, O Saviour-King,
The fair report which reached my far-off land
Of all thy love. I did not understand
Such graciousness; nor did I dare to bring
To Thee my sin-stained soul with all its needs
But Thou saidst "Come"; and, coming, fears were stilled,
All wants supplied, and my sad heart was filled
With thy dear self. How far thy grace exceeds
All I had heard. Peace reigns instead of strife
No fears alarm, no doubts can now dismay,
For dwelling in thy love, learning each day
Some new, sweet truth of Thee who art my life,
I too can say, like Sheba's Queen of old,
"The half," thy love and grace, "has ne'er been told."

TEMPERANCE IN BIRMINGHAM.

THE Gospel Temperance Mission in this city whilst it has been co-operating with the Christian churches in the holding of more than 50 meetings, and enrolling some 4000 pledges, is endeavouring in a special way to lay hold of the poor women of Birmingham. This it does by organising and conducting weekly meetings in schoolrooms, &c., belonging to any church willing to lend buildings for that purpose. Five superintendents and eight assistants, most of whom have been for years voluntary Christian workers, are gathering together, week by week, more than 2000 women in these twenty "Happy Home" classes. Much effort and prayer, not only on the part of the conductors, but of the women themselves, have more than doubled the number of members during the last year. The results of these meetings are seen in hundreds of homes. In many of the classes scarcely a week passes without one or more openly professing to accept the Saviour, and becoming earnest workers in his cause.

In bringing together these women for a big tea-meeting in the Town Hall, on a recent evening, Mr. J. M. Goodchild, the secretary of the Mission, set himself a task which nothing but careful organisation and efficient help enabled him to carry through with complete success. After tea Mr. Richard Cadbury spoke some kindly words of welcome and advice. The motto, "Looking unto Jesus," which he gave them, will, it is hoped, inspire many to take heart and struggle bravely through the troubles of their daily lives. Desirous of showing grateful affection, the women presented beautiful bouquets to Mr. and Mrs. Cadbury. The chief speaker at the meeting was Mrs. Lewis, who gave her sisters very earnest counsel illustrated by incidents connected with her successful work in Blackburn.

AMONG EAST-END POSTMEN.

e have had many happy gatherings this New ar (writes Miss Macpherson from the Home Industry) of hundreds of our poor people, both and young — mothers, widows, children, s, young women, and stalwart costers. One st blessed meeting was that for postmen and ir wives.

After a substantial tea, Sir ARTHUR BLACKOD addressed them. He commenced with ne cheery words on the "service," its advanes and associations, and then took the portunity of speaking most lovingly and nestly of the Lord Jesus Christ. "It did heart good to hear you all sing, 'Be glad in Lord and rejoice'; for I am sure some of sang because it was the expression of your rt.

Many years ago I went to Chester to give address to soldiers. In the house was a yer from London, not a Christian. His was that at the best it must be rather a thing; that even if it does lead to heaven ast, it shuts one off from everything that kes life happy. Two days after I was surd by this gentleman's card being put into hand. He wished to see me; his face was nged. He said, 'Sir, I have come to tell that I have found Christ as my Saviour.' ell, how was it?' 'It was the happy faces of se young Christian officers,' was his reply. nk God, this gladness is a reality. When tells us to be glad, He is not like Pharaoh, told the people to make bricks without w. He gives us a reason to be glad. 'Son, f good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee.'

May I give you my practical experience? As ung man I drank deeply of all the so-called sures of life, but they left a bitter dreg in cup, for my soul had no peace with God. n there came the blessed day when I saw the precious blood of Christ was shed to me from my sins, and I know that it is er on before: 'Always more to follow.' se are not cunningly devised fables; it is imagination that takes a man out of the ible pit, turns him right round, and gives such joy. It is this joy I want you all to "

hen Sir Arthur spoke of the Christian Post e Association in its relation both to Chris- and to unconverted men. "It makes me leased to see so many here in the same vice'; but what we want is to see you all he heavenly service, with your names written he Lamb's book of life. I am not here as Secretary of the Post Office, but as a friend, ok you straight in the face, and beseech to be reconciled to God. Without Christ must go down; you cannot stand against world, the flesh, and the devil. Lay hold ternal life, and grasp that pierced, loving l that is stretched out still."

iss Edmonstone and Miss Synge then adsed the meeting. Miss Gibbons gave a ty invitation to the men to attend the ses, and Miss Macpherson closed with er.

INTENDING MISSIONARIES.—Mr. J. M. ment, secretary of the Missionary and Evange- Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., writes:— any of your readers would be willing to join a for the study of Hindustani, as a preparation missionary work in India, I shall be glad to from them. Should the number offering be ient, I think arrangements could be made for cher."

. HELIER'S, JERSEY.—A seamen's mission is place, which for some time has been carried ith much encouragement under the superinnce of Colonel Marrett, is, we regret to learn, to succumb through lack of public support. e is great need for Protestant testimony in the l, and we believe that guarantees of help, o Colonel Marrett, Westbourne House, Mont bbé, St. Helier's, will even now be in time to this lighthouse in its place.

SEAMEN AT PORT SAID.

MR. G. A. EOLL has published a report of the important work carried on by himself at Port Said, Egypt, during the four years ending April last. It is a modest statement, which those who best know the earnest worker and the great needs of the place where he labours, will be enabled most highly to appreciate. Mr. Eoll has been engaged, under conditions sometimes peculiarly trying, in making known the love of God to seamen and others from all parts of the earth, and his house has been a veritable well of water in a thirsty land to many a poor wayfarer and weary traveller.

Altogether nearly 1400 persons, speaking over thirty different languages, sought the help of the Mission, during the four years, in food, shelter, or clothes. Over 500 sick people of various nationalities were assisted, and the Scriptures were freely distributed. Many thousands of tracts and books were also given away. Ships passing through the Suez Canal have been boarded, and thus the truth as it is in Jesus has been scattered abroad.

Mr. Eoll refers with joy to the frequent visits received from missionaries on their way to foreign fields of labour, or on their return home. Owing to prostration he felt compelled, a few months ago, to come to England for rest and change of air. He is now restored to health, and intends, all being well, to return shortly to his much-loved work. Anything forwarded to him can be gratuitously sent from Cardiff if addressed thus: G. A. Eoll, Port Said, Egypt, care of Messrs. Cory Brothers, Bute Docks, Cardiff.

REV. JAMES JOHNSTON, secretary of the Missionary Conference, attended at the noonday prayer-meeting on Monday at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, and spoke briefly on the great increase of interest in missionary effort. On his recent visit to America he found widespread and warm sympathy with the work. The Report of the Missionary Conference, which he edited for the press, is already in its seventh thousand.

THE COLONIAL AND CONTINENTAL CHURCH SOCIETY supplies clergymen, catechists, and teachers, to British residents and sojourners in the colonies, on the Continent, and in other parts of the world. The report for the year 1887—8 gives deeply interesting details of the work, which has many earnest supporters, both at home and abroad. It also gives a list of missionaries and chaplains, with the principal places of worship and stations. Much other information will have special value to English travellers abroad. The Society's house is 9, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet-street, E.C.

ASYLUM FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.—There are 340 indigent deaf and dumb children in this Institution, some at the Old Kent-road branch, and the remainder at the Margate Asylum. They are fed, clothed, and educated free of cost, and at the end of the school period apprenticed to suitable trades. In a booklet, "The New Picture," by Mr. Joseph Hatton, an account is given of the work, with special reference to the new system of teaching, whereby the children are taught to speak, and to follow the utterances of others by watching the movement of the lips. Copies may be had from the offices of the Society, 93, Cannon-street, E.C.

BRITTANY.—The Trinitarian Bible Society, following the recent successful venture in connection with the Italian Bible, is about to publish the new Breton translation of the Old Testament, now nearly completed, by Pasteur Lecoat, of Tremel, in penny numbers. The people of Brittany seem now to be willing, and in many cases anxious, to receive the Scriptures. The experience gained during the past three years in the circulation of the entire New Testament by the same translator has been most helpful and encouraging. Pastor Lecoat has recently secured, at a cost of £120, a wooden châlet for the purposes of his mission work in Brest. He has to pay £80 down, and he appeals to Christian friends in England for help. Rev. Dr. Bullinger, Bremgarten, Woking, Surrey, will give full details.

CONFERENCE AT BRISTOL.

THE annual meetings convened by Messrs. Vicary and Gittins, in connection with the fourteenth anniversary of the Gospel Hall, St. Nicholas-road, Bristol, were held on the 15th and 16th inst., and were largely attended. As in former years, the opening meeting was devoted to confession, prayer, and praise, and a spirit of much earnestness and devotion pervaded the proceedings. In the afternoon, "The Responsibility of Christian Parents" was considered, addresses being delivered by Messrs. J. L. Stanley, E. Groves, and G. F. Bergin. The importance of home discipline, and the need for kindness, were well emphasised. "The various aspects of the Gospel as presented in the Scriptures" were spoken of in the evening by Messrs. Stanley, West, and J. Wright. After having been considered in its relation to God, the Gospel was helpfully explained in its relation to the sinner.

On Wednesday the first subject was "Our responsibility to spread the Gospel in this and other lands." Mr. Vicary having read several passages of Holy Writ, addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. Nobbs, Stanley, Douglas Russell, and West, each showing the great importance of individual effort. In the afternoon brief addresses were given by several missionaries and intending missionaries, including Mr. Eoll, of Port Said; Dr. Fisher, about to go to Central Africa; Mr. Panting, who purposes leaving soon for Demerara; the Bros. Fish, shortly to set out for the diamond fields at Kimberley; and Mr. Hill, going to Singapore. Mr. Clement Cuff, lately resident in Singapore, also made some acceptable remarks. Several friends spoke at the concluding meeting in the evening. The Conference was marked by brotherly love throughout, and several testimonies were borne to its edifying character.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—The anniversary prayer-meeting was held in the offices of the Society, Buckingham-street, London, on Wednesday last week. Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B., presided. After prayer by Rev. Gilbert Karney, and a short address by the chairman, the secretaries reported the success of the work of the Society during the past year. Notwithstanding the disturbed state of some parts of Ireland, the operations of the Society had not been hindered in any place. The agents report that there is an increasing spirit of inquiry among the Roman Catholics in different places, arising from the manner in which the Pope's Rescript has been received, and from other causes. Prayer was offered by Rev. E. D. Wickham, and Rev. Dallas Harington.

CHARING CROSS RESCUE AND VIGILANCE COMMITTEE is moving in the work of repressing vice in a part of London where, sad to say, there is only too much reason for its activity. In the first instance, its efforts are directed to impelling parochial overseers to perform the duties imposed up them by the Legislature and long-established custom; only when these endeavours fail, does the committee itself take steps to bring offenders to justice. A ladies' committee superintends a house which is open at all hours for the reception of the victims of sin, who, as opportunities offer, are urged and helped to forsake their evil course. The hon. secretary is Mr. Stephen Bourne, St. Martin's Vestry Hall, Charing Cross, W.C.

NORTH CAMP, ALDERSHOT.—This Soldiers' Home was opened about fourteen years ago. It is available for soldiers of all denominations, free of charge. There are a reading-room and good library, game room, and refreshment bar. A large room is set apart for Bible-classes, Gospel services, prayer-meetings, &c. Many have been brought to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus. There are now stationed in the North Camp a large number of Artillery, the Bedford Regiment, and two Irish regiments, the Munster Fusiliers and Connaught Rangers. It is proposed to give a free tea, and to hold some Gospel services. The Home is supported by voluntary contributions, and help is now required for this work. A. S. BEETON

Spain: A Mission Field.—2.

FROM the wild rocky Finisterre on the North West to the sunny Andalucia of the South is comprised an extraordinary variety of scenery and climate. Its towns adorned with buildings whose splendid architecture commemorates the romantic reigns of the kings of Castile, and the Mohammedan rulers of the South, who possessed for centuries the whole of the southern parts of Spain from Valencia and Toledo to the sea, their principal ports being St. Lucia at the mouth of the Guadalquivir and Almeria.

MISSIONS IN THE PROVINCES.

Several brethren are labouring in Galicia, which possesses that magnificent port and bay of Vigo, one of the finest in the world. From hence issued forth the Spanish galleons in all the pomp and terror of the Papal Armada with the Pope's blessing for the conquest of England. Some humble English missionaries may be seen bringing to the descendants of the Cantabrian sailors who manned that fleet the religion of Christ, which the Armada was commissioned to uproot by Dominican persuasion of the thumb-screw. There are seeking souls in these parts, and some that have found the English heretics' Saviour.

Another famous port on this north-west coast is Ferrol, which was the grand naval arsenal of Spain; it rivalled the Royal Dockyards of England or Russia, and was capable of holding a hundred first-rate vessels of war. In this province are also labouring two missionaries who were trained in Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College, and others whom God has so much blessed that there are 200 baptized converts to show that many dear Spanish hearts will welcome the message of a free salvation, and that promptly, not being, like many in England, Gospel hardened by the reiteration of the same truths year after year.

Leon, too, has its witnesses, even under the shadow of the College of Salamanca, the Alma Mater of the priesthood. The English Roman Catholic College here has a fine picture gallery, in which figure "portraits of a variety of scholars who suffered martyrdom in England in the exercise of their vocation in the reign of Elizabeth"—in other words, these conspirators were condemned and executed for treason, and have been recently canonised by the Pope.

Valladolid, the ancient capital of Castile, has its witnesses for Christ. Here is the celebrated university for jurisprudence, which still has about 800 students. The town is filled with convents.

Biscay, Aragon, and Catalonia have their missionaries. Several are sustained by the A.B.C.F.M., others are independent missions, whilst others, again, are sustained by the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society, of which Rev. L. S. Tugwell, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, is the secretary. The Society has some also in the south.

MISSIONS IN MADRID.

In Madrid itself there are several missions; it has a population of more than half a million, with an extraordinary variety of provincials, who ply their trades in the capital, the water-carriers of Asturia, the cabmen from Valencia, the beggars of La Mancha, the valets of Biscay, and bull-fighters of Andalucia, &c. To add to the variety in the Spanish race in the north, there are the French and Spanish Basques, and a peculiar people called Maragatos (or Moorish Goths), inhabiting the town and vicinity of Astorga. They are the carriers of Northern Spain. The gipsies are mostly found in Andalucia. That extraordinary Bible pioneer, George Borrow, some fifty years back travelled through the length and breadth of the country in prosecuting with enthusiasm his great enterprise, mixed much with the gipsies, learnt their language, and translated the Gospel of Luke into Gitano, and, it may be added, he did this also for the Basques.

With the exception of Madrid, the whole of the central provinces, as far as I know, are without a missionary. There are thousands of villages, and hundreds of towns, without a single witness for Christ, and this amongst a people who have many noble features of character. Amongst the peasants, shepherds, and muleteers, and, indeed, with the poor generally, one will almost invariably meet with kindness and courtesy, much stern heroic virtue, and, we fear we must add, considerable pride, and much savage and terrible crime.

George Borrow says, "You may draw the last cuarto from a Spaniard, provided you will concede to him the title of Cavalier." Politeness and courtesy are sure to be met by generous manifestations of the same qualities. The genuine Spaniard is not to be found in the sea ports and large towns, but in lone and remote villages; it is amongst them one finds the gravity, not to say formality, of deportment, and that chivalry of disposition which are peculiarly Spanish. In Spain, poverty is not treated with contempt, and the beggar does not feel himself a degraded being, as he is treated with the respect properly due to man, whatever condition he is in.

OTHER MISSIONS.

There are missionaries in the south-west of Spain—in Andalucia, Granada, and Seville. One lady, Mrs. Peddie, of 8, Granville-terrace, Edinburgh, has for thirty-six years been the earnest advocate of missions in Spain, and edits a quarterly periodical, Times of Refreshing in Spain. By her instrumentality four churches have been formed, and evangelisation carried on in villages around. As an instance of the readiness of Spanish Christians to spread the truth around them, during the twelve years of work at Seville twenty-four members of that church have gone forth to labour in the Gospel.

The Presbyterian Church of Ireland supports three stations, and gives its help towards the college of which Mr. Moore is principal. A Dutch lady also sustains two stations, and partly a third. The United Presbyterian Church has just withdrawn its support from Jerez and San Fernando. Rev. D. R. Kilpatrick, of Glasgow, speaks of the Vega of Granada—the estate given by the Spanish Government to the Duke of Wellington, and now in possession of his heirs, on which are four towns and several villages scattered through that lovely valley. One village is almost entirely Protestant, and has a well-conducted school. "What a splendid field," he says, "that valley would make for some earnest missionary, and so of other parts of Andalucia! This province is nearly as large as Scotland. The field is ripe but the labourers are few."

THE CHIEF NEED OF SPAIN.

A Christian friend writes: "The great need of Spain is evangelists, male and female; the woman can do more than the man, and in Spain, to their honour be it said, the woman is respected. Never in Spain would a female evangelist be insulted as in England, France, Italy, and Switzerland. The language is as you know, a splendid one, and can be easily learnt. Then it opens the door for Mexico and the South American Republics."

Another missionary brother writes: "I believe Spain to be almost as good a mission-field as there is in the world. New comers should always attach themselves to those already in the field, until they know the people, and how to go to work. There are more than half the capitals of provinces without workers. Great opening for tracts—that is, of course, when distributed with prudence—and a general desire to possess the Holy Scriptures. There is a wonderfully open door. I greatly need a younger brother to help me, having all the meetings on myself."

Another missionary writes: "Besides the day-schools there are the Sunday-schools, in all o which there is room for service in Bible lesson and special classes. The visiting of the parents am unable to continue. The state of societ generally makes it necessary that two person should visit together in order to avoid suspicion The fact that the priests of Rome, as a rule live such unholy lives, secures for us in thou sands of cases the ready ear; and the words o the Lord Jesus, followed up with a life agreein thereto, have a power which none can tell."

Each of these beloved brethren calls loudl for helpers. GEORGE PEARSE.

Letter to the Editor.

THE CHURCH AND AMUSEMENTS.

DEAR SIR,—I would be so thankful if you coul see your way to condemn in the strongest way th methods adopted in this country for raising mone for church purposes. I was greatly distressed th other day when a playbill was handed to me, such a you would see at one of our provincial theatres headed "The laughable farce of 'Box and Cox' wil be performed by the following artistes, &c., with songs, solos, &c.; the proceeds of the entertainmen will go to the Parish Church funds," the rector being considered one of our best men here. Another rector has his fashionable concerts, with many o the performers clergymen and their families. It is so sad to read in our local papers full accounts o these gay, worldly scenes, while the Master says "the friendship of this world is enmity with God"; they appear to be all sight and no faith—not much of the stranger and pilgrim about them.—Yours,

Ireland. L. W.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—At the meeting of the C.M.S. Committee, at Salisbury-square, on Monday last week, a warm resolution was passed of sympathy with the Uganda missionaries and Christians in their present distress, and asking the earnest prayer of all friends of the mission work there, sealed as it has been with the blood of Christian martyrs. The Committee also expressed a hope that Commander Cameron's meeting and appeal for measures to suppress the slave trade, on Feb. 25, would be successful, provided there were no suggestion of a recourse to physical force.

FIELD LANE BAND OF HOPE.—Earl Compton presided over a largely attended meeting held a few evenings ago in the Field Lane Ragged School, Clerkenwell. It was reported that during the year 349 children had signed the pledge and 214 new members been enrolled. Prizes for good conduct, attendance, &c., to the number of 33, were distributed by Lady Compton, and 210 articles of clothing, and upwards of 500 toys from the Christmas tree were also given away. Addresses were delivered by Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, and Rev. E. Smith, who spoke of the advantage of children declaring for total abstinence.

BURTON-ON-TRENT Y.M.C.A.—Various evangelistic and educational agencies have their home and centre at the Association Rooms, 32, Union-street. The interests of the "physical section" are allotted more space than the higher objects in the first annual report, just published. Lords Burton and Hindlip are patrons of the Association, and with other local brewers have contributed more or less substantially to the funds. We do not notice that temperance work comes within the range of the Association's efforts. The general hon. secretaries are, Messrs. W. Allen and E. J. Buxton.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.—A meeting in aid of this Association was held a few days ago, whereat the secretary, Rev. M. Rainsford, stated that about 125 readers are at present employed, and doing excellent work in their several districts. The Bishop of London, who presided, commended the Association very heartily to public support, and the Bishop of Bedford spoke of the great usefulness of its agents in East London. Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., having eulogised the work done by the Association in South London, addresses of warm sympathy were delivered by Revs. C. J. Lawrence, of Bermondsey, and J. A. Robinson, of Whitechapel. The last financial year ended with a deficit, and this meeting was held in order to excite increased interest in the Association and its operations.

AMERICAN NOTES.

How are we to purify the worship of God's se?" is the cry that comes from many rters. Scarcely a religious periodical passes er our eye that does not contain some sug-ion on this subject. One writes: "If we ld draw the people to church, and win n to Christ, the first question with scores of istians is, What new turn can be given to kaleidoscope of entertainment? What new can we insert in our organ, and what of social attraction can be introduced?

what new coruscation can be let off from the nerican critics are exceedingly reserved in reviews of the autobiography of the Nun enmare. None question the clever ability ayed in the compiling. Had the writer

Rome solely for Christ's sake, and stepped from her past position of honour and ng and so devotedly.

PLES SAILORS' REST.—At the annual ng held a few days ago, the superintendent onary, Mr. S. Burrowes, reported an encourag-ear's work. Among those who had found a orary home in the institution were some destitute seamen. In many ways sailors and llers have been befriended, and endeavours niformly made to turn everything to account he spiritual blessing of men and the pron of the glory of God in the earth. The ng-rooms are better attended than ever, and e Gospel services about 10,000 persons were ed ashore and afloat last year. The evan-l and unsectarian character of the Rest, and veral missions which are affiliated to it, is known. The treasurer in England is Mr. S. exander, Weston-super-Mare.

MARRIAGE OF MISS HEDENSTROM.

A WEDDING of more than common interest took place at noon on Monday, at All Saints', Knightsbridge, where Miss Agnes Hedenström, the founder and superintendent of the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, West India Docks, was married to Mr. Axel Welin. The bride was given away by Mr. T. A. Denny, always one of the most generous friends of the work. The service was conducted by the vicar (Rev. R. Stewart) with exceptional and appropriate simplicity.

By the kindness of Lady Ashburton, the wedding breakfast was given at Kent House, Knightsbridge. Among the guests present were Lord and Lady Caird, Earl Compton, Sir Donald and Lady Currie, the Secretary of the Swedish Legation, Baron d'Adelborg and Baroness d'Adelborg, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Mathieson, Miss Johnstone, and many other friends of the bride. Sir Donald Currie expressed his opinion that the best present to Mr. and Mrs. Welin would be to welcome them back from their short honeymoon at Addiscombe Farm, Croydon, which Lady Ashburton had kindly put at their disposal, with the news that the debt which still remained on the Home would be cleared off; but Sir Donald did not say that he himself has already subscribed £100, and that Lady Ashburton has done the same, towards this end. Mr. Welin, Mr. Denny, Mr. Mathieson, and Mr. Birger, the Scandinavian Consul-General, all testified in their several speeches to Miss Hedenström's excellent work, expressing their hope that henceforth it would be carried on with double vigour, since Mr. Welin is to assist his wife in her ever-increasing labours.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.—A rumour has circulated, mainly in the United States, whence the McAll Mission derives nearly half its support, to the effect that a tendency has arisen in the Mission to depart from the neutral ground of the Evangelical Alliance, on which it was founded. Against this the members of the Committee feel called upon to utter a unanimous and earnest protest. They declare that from the beginning they have aimed, not to form separatist communities, but to swell the ranks of the existing evangelical bodies. They require that in all cases their Mission stations shall retain unchanged their strictly undenominational and purely evangelistic character.

"THE MESSIAH'S KINGDOM" is a new penny monthly, calling upon Christians practically and consistently to associate peace with righteousness, in conformity with the teachings of the Prince of Peace. The opening article says: "The Church of Christ, which in the early ages openly denounced war, and in the middle ages acted often as a peacemaker, has for over three centuries spoken with an uncertain and hesitating voice. It is only within the last few years that Christians have begun to arouse themselves from their sleep. We desire to do our part towards pressing home the importance of this question." The articles cover a wide area, and are remarkably pointed and stimulating. The publishers are Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square, E.C.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY'S district secretaries from all parts of the country held their annual conference at the Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, on Monday last week. There are scattered throughout England no fewer than 5407 societies, auxiliaries and branch associations. Besides raising funds for the British and Foreign Bible Society, these branch organisations distribute copies of the Scriptures in the localities in which they are situated. The Society sends away to different parts of the world between 7000 and 8000 Bibles, Testaments, or portions of Scriptures, every working day, and spends £70,000 annually for printing Bibles in this country. One of the latest of the 298 languages and dialects into which the Scriptures have been translated by the Society is Lugunda, the language spoken by the people of Uganda, in Central Africa. The translation was made by Mr. A. M. Mackay, of the Church Missionary Society, a year or two ago, and was brought to England by Rev. R. P. Ashe, who revised it for the press.

Personalia.

Mrs. Anna Shipton is getting better slowly.

Mr. Edward Clarke, director of the Spezia Mission, is now daily advancing in strength. He sends thanks to many inquiring friends.

Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, with his wife, will probably return to Sydney, which they have found suitable for their age and declining strength.

Mr. Spurgeon is recovering from the effects of the accident which he met with some three weeks ago. He is able to take carriage exercise daily, and it is hoped that in a shor time the will be well again.

Mr. Joseph Cook will begin his usual course of lectures at Tremont Temple, Boston, the first Monday in February. His principal topic will be Romanism in the Public Schools, and the preludes, as heretofore, will deal with matters of current interest.

Rev. James Chadburn was unable to conduct the service on Sunday week at Trinity Church, Poplar. On the previous day he slipped on the pavement in St. Paul's-churchyard, and, falling in the road, a cab ran over him. He was greatly shaken, but is now recovering.

Mr. Denham Smith.—We much regret to learn that Mr. Denham Smith's condition again gives rise to grave anxiety. A bronchial attack, added to a fresh onset of the more serious symptoms of his malady, has greatly reduced what little strength remained. Notwithstanding continuous physical prostration and suffering, however, his faith is as unimpaired as his peace of soul is cloudless.

Major-General Hutchinson, who has filled with marked ability and zeal the post of Lay Secretary to the Church Missionary Society since June, 1881, has tendered his resignation to the committee. General Hutchinson was anxious to retire in June last, but consented to aid the Society for one more year. The committee, in accepting his resignation, have put on record their very high sense of the great services the retiring Lay Secretary has rendered to the cause of the C.M.S.

Rev. Jacob Freshman, pastor of the Hebrew Christian Church, New York, is about to make a missionary journey to Palestine. He will probably be in London this week, and will remain in England a little while. He will be glad to preach and lecture on the Jewish question as he may be invited. Letters addressed to our care will reach him. During the past year Mr. Freshman received twenty persons into the Hebrew Christian Church, eighteen of whom were Jewish men and women, and one a Roman Catholic.

Mr. Edward Clifford writes to us from Honolulu, on December 17, 1888:—"I hear that it has been said in some newspapers that I am intending to make a lengthened stay in Molokai, the leper island. This is a mistake. I hope to reach it to-morrow morning, and to spend some little time there, seeing something of the work going on amongst Protestant and Roman Catholic lepers, and taking with me a remedy which has been found very useful in Burmah. But I expect to return to London in March."

BAPTIST Y. M. MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.—A crowded soirée was held on Tuesday evening last week in connection with the Young Men's Missionary Association, at the Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn. Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., presided. Rev. A. E. Scrivener, of the Congo, denied that the Congo Mission has been a failure. He gave instances showing that the natives are not deficient in intellectual capacity, and have in them all that is needful to make them a civilised people by and by. Rev. R. Glover, of Bristol, said the cause of missions at home and abroad is the work of the Church. He did not believe they estimated missions as they ought. Affirming that the moment the cultured civilisation of Europe touched any native race, it either cursed or saved them, he noticed the evils introduced into China by the opium trade. He showed the progress of mission work in China and Japan, and, while wishing the Salvation Army success in India, said he had not so much faith in its wisdom as he had admiration for its heroism. Rev. E. S. Summers, Principal of Serampore College, having spoken, Mrs. Bentley, wife of Rev. W. Holman Bentley (who was accompanied by an African girl), gave some interesting particulars of the work carried on at the Congo stations.

A Preacher's Repertoire.

FLASHES FROM THE WELSH PULPIT. Edited by Rev. J. Gwynoro Davies, of Barmouth. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. English preachers may learn much from their Welsh brethren as regards freshness of thought, vividness of representation, and vigour of delivery. These characteristics have stirred thousands of listeners who have attended the ministry, in London and other English cities and towns, of Welsh pastors, showing that the power is a real one, and not merely an effect produced by these preachers upon the sensibilities of their own countrymen. In this book we have extracts from the powerful and trenchant utterances of some of the most eminent and eloquent Welshmen who have ever lifted up their voices on behalf of Gospel truth. The collection of "flashes" is an admirable one. It affords food for earnest thought, and cannot be read without profit. Preachers will find it especially valuable. A list of authors is given, but we hope to find in the next edition these names appended to the extracts themselves. As an introduction, Dr. Edwards, Principal of the University College of Wales at Aberystwith, contributes his instructive and useful paper on "The Present Condition of Religious Thought in Wales," which he read before the Pan-Presbyterian Council last year, and this forms a fitting prelude to the book.

Philosophic Fallacies.

THE ELEMENTS OF MENTAL AND MORAL SCIENCE AS APPLIED TO TEACHING. By W. C. Coupland, M.A., D.Sc. J. Hughes, Pilgrim-street, Ludgate-hill. Students will understand the drift of this work when we describe it as applied sensationalism. Dr. Coupland takes for granted that Locke's principle that "there is nothing in the intellect which was not first in the senses" is established, and that the doctrine of à priori notions is for ever exploded. We should have valued this work much more had Dr. Coupland gained his point by argument instead of by assumption. Such writers as Kant, Mansel, Hamilton, &c., have not only maintained the doctrine of à priori ideas, but have demonstrated their reality. They show that while the senses may be the occasion they are certainly not the cause of much of the knowledge that we possess; that the greater part of knowledge is due to the informing power of the mind itself. We think it is a serious mistake to explain mental and moral science on the grounds of mere naturalism. Man, according to Dr. Coupland, is a mere natural product, and his "embodied mind," as it is called, "has been slowly built up by the prolonged reciprocal action of organism and environment." Dr. Coupland is a clear writer and thoroughly understands the philosophy of the modern sensory school, but we deem it worse than unfortunate that such a system should be taught to young people as if it were authoritative, and had been conclusively verified.

Memorial Volumes.

A deeply stimulating and highly edifying little volume is FALLEN ON THE FIELD: being Memorials of Rev. Alfred Henry Clegg, Wesleyan missionary to the Gambia, West Africa, by Rev. John S. Pawlyn. 1s. T. Woolmer. The subject of the memoir was "a young man of choice and singular worth, superior in ability, charming in spirit, and eminently distinguished by the ardour and purity of his zeal and devotion." Such a book as this should secure a large circulation, and be the means of arousing in the hearts of young people much interest and enthusiasm in the cause of missions to the heathen.

MEMORIALS OF JOSEPH TRITTON. Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn, E.C. This choice little book contains a selection of compositions in poetry and prose from the pen of one whose name is held in honoured memory by a large circle in all sections of the Christian Church, and who unostentatiously, although laboriously and efficiently, filled an important sphere in the service of the Master he loved, published and sold for the benefit of the Baptist Missionary Society, of which he was for many years the treasurer. The book has not been widely known outside a limited circle, but we are sure many of our readers will be glad to have their attention called to these "Memorials," which abound in Scripture teaching, and in refined spiritual thought, beautifully expressed. Copies may be had from the Mission-house, at 2s. each, or 2s. 3d. post free.

Books on Prophecy.

PROPHETIC NOTES. By Rev. John Sturt. Elliot Stock. The author has not ventured upon the uncertain field of speculation, but endeavoured to keep close to what is written. He has lucidly expounded the chief parts of sacred prophecy, at all times preferring the plain and obvious sense. The concluding chapter, on the times in which we live, is as comprehensive as the entire work is eminently helpful to the Bible student, whatever method of interpreting prophecy he may specially favour. While commending this book for its suggestiveness in its particular sphere, we are glad to say that it strongly impresses the careful reader concerning Him who knows the end from the beginning.

WHAT ARE WE TO BELIEVE? By Rev. John Urquhart. J. & A. Mack. This excellent book has reached a second edition, and we trust it will yet be largely called for. It answers the title question by presenting the testimony of fulfilled prophecy with regard to Tyre, Sidon, Egypt, Idumea, Judea, Babylon, and other ancient kingdoms. We must believe the Bible and acknowledge the God of the Bible: this is powerfully impressed upon the reader when he realises the minuteness with which history has been written beforehand in the words of holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. The condition of the world at the present time, and the dispersed state of the Jewish people, are duly considered, and the arguments are as unanswerable as the facts upon which they are founded are indisputable. This well-written book presents one of the most important arguments for Christianity in an admirable manner, and is calculated to speak peace to many a mind distressed with intellectual questionings.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TAKE IT AT ONCE, by Miss E. P. Leakey (6d. Shaw & Co.), is an admirable little book, setting forth in direct and convincing language with ample illustration the leading truths about salvation and its enjoyment. We commend it highly as well suited for putting into the hands of the doubting or the undecided.

THE HOMILIST. Vol. iii. Popular Series. 7s. 6d. Houlston & Sons. Edited by Revs. Dr. Thomas and J. J. S. Bird. This magazine continues to place much valuable homiletical matter within easy reach of hard-worked preachers and teachers. The contents of this volume, the 59th of the whole series, are very varied, consisting of commentaries, sermons, outlines, and other practical helps. The personal notes are the least useful feature of the publication.

THE CHRISTIAN IRISHMAN. This monthly, edited by Rev. Dr. Magee, is always filled with readable and instructive matter, specially calculated to commend evangelical truths to Irish people. Volume vi. contains the issues for last year stitched together. We hope it will find its way into many of the homes of Ireland, and also receive attention at the hands of friends of our warm-hearted Celtic brethren. (1s. Dublin: Mecredy & Kyle.)

MEDITATIONS ON THE CHERUBIM AND TEMPLE OF EZEKIEL. By A. B. John F. Shaw & Co. An unpretentious little book, full of devout meditations, and showing a spiritual acquaintance with Scripture. The writer does not regard the temple seen by Ezekiel as one that shall literally be erected, but as a temple of "living stones"—a type of the Church of Christ, completed, purified, and glorified. Though many may favour other interpretations, none can read these pages without profit and interest.

THE WONDERFUL BOOK. By G. T. Seymour. 1s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist S.S. Union. Truly a book for everybody. The sub-title is, "Twelve Reasons why the Bible is the most Wonderful Book in the World." As, however, almost every one of the testimonies filling these pages, collected from a wide course of reading, amounts to a good and sufficient argument in support of the proposition, the "twelve" may be understood as many times multiplied. This work is likely to disarm much infidel prejudice, and also to send nominal Christians more frequently to the Book of books. It makes a very useful presentation volume to young people. We much regret to learn that the author is in circumstances of deep poverty. He was for twenty-one years a clerk in a large city house, and was dismissed in the course of reduction of staff. He has a family of six children, and is greatly in need of employment.

The first annual volume of THE SUN (6s. Nisbet & Co.) contains a plentiful supply of stories from able pens, with a fair admixture of more solid reading. It will constitute a suitable addition to village libraries.

THE SCRIPTURE MOTHER'S HELP; or, My Children's Sunday Hours. Houlston & Sons. A box of cards containing eighty-four questions and answers on evangelical truth. They are excellent in every way.

WHO IS THE WHITE PASHA? 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. The author has certainly written a book that all Christian admirers of the late General Gordon will be able to appreciate, though his surmise that Gordon is the White Pasha, of whom we have lately heard, will not be widely accepted. The chapter on "England's Blessings" deserves attention.

THE CITY OF FAITH. By S. B. Blean, M.A. Elliot Stock. This book contains "notes and gleanings in religious inquiry," which have helped the author "to find what he humbly considers to be a firm basis for belief." Those whose doubts are of a philosophical character will find help in these pages. The book is the result of extensive and careful reading, and of thoughtful and earnest inquiry.

GUIDE TO SCHOOLS, HOMES, AND REFUGES FOR GIRLS AND WOMEN. — This manual will doubtless prove of great service to all persons engaged in preventive and rescue work. The information given is in many cases but meagre, but the editors declare that they will be abundantly gratified if their labour shall but serve to prevent the placing of young women in Homes not suited for their special cases. The lists include uncertificated as well as certificated institutions, classified in a manner which makes reference easy. (Longmans.)

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE'S ANNUAL for 1889. A useful repertory of information on drink, pauperism, and crime. Allied topics, including various means of extending the temperance reformation, also come in for thoughtful treatment. For months to come this book will be an invaluable help to temperance workers, for whom many eloquent facts and figures have been collected, and are compendiously presented. There is a sketch, accompanied by portrait, of the late John Andrew. The "Year's Retrospect" is very lucid. (1s. 6d. National Temperance Publication Depôt, 33, Paternoster-row.)

THE PEARL OF DAYS. Mr. Charles Hill, secretary of the Lord's Day Rest Association, who has done much to promote Sabbath observance among the working classes, has here furnished readers and speakers with a well-nigh inexhaustible fund of anecdote and argument on nearly all branches of the subject. Illustrations, facts, and opinions that have already done good service in the monthly organ of the Association, will, we trust, in this volume containing several years' numbers, yet be read with pleasure and profit by many, with the result that the "Pearl of Days" will be esteemed more highly than hitherto. (Partridge & Co.)

LIGHT AND COLOUR, emblematic of Revealed Truth. By the late Major R. W. D. Nickle. Edited by Sarah Sharp. With Explanatory Diagrams. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. There is much in this work that is truly excellent; but it is marred by "Anglo-Israelite" sympathies and teaching. Apart from that, the work is highly edifying, and will be found by lovers of Holy Scripture to contain much that is fresh and instructive. The diagrams are choice, and tend greatly to the elucidation of the subject. The emblematic significance of Light and Colour has been but vaguely understood. By the help of this work, however, a new domain of knowledge is opened out, and many passages of Holy Writ re-illumined.

THE VISION OF THE CANDLESTICK. By Rev. Hubert Brooke, M.A. Marshall Brothers. The title of this book is a little misleading, but its contents will be found spiritual and helpful in a very high degree. It comprises a number of Bible-readings, the outcome of devout and earnest study of the Divine Word. The subjects, the first of which forms the title of the book, are all connected and treat of the call of God's people; their inability; their provision in God; their consequent action; and their experience of blessing. Those who have been privileged to hear any of the author's Bible-readings will know how rich a feast to expect from such a book. There are here no mere superficial or fanciful interpretations of Scripture; but there is evidence of the author's power to discover the hidden treasures of God's Word, and to teach them to others with a clearness that cannot be misunderstood.

THE GREAT QUESTION ANSWERED. By Rev. Metcalfe. Elliot Stock. Evangelical in sentiment, earnest in tone, simple in style, pointed in appeals, calculated to help anxious inquirers.

LIGHT FROM PENIEL ON THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE. By Rev. William Johnston. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. A little unpretentious volume, full of precious truths, clearly demonstrated. Practical and intensely real. All who read it must be helped.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT FOR YOUNG MEN. By Major Churchill. Nisbet & Co. This book is already so well known, and has proved so valuable that no commendation is needed. A difficult and delicate subject is dealt with in a wise yet faithful manner. The demand for this third edition is proof of the usefulness and interest of the book.

REST AND UNREST. By the author of "Footprints in the Wilderness." Seeley & Co. A careful review of spiritual rest and unrest, viewed, however, from a pessimistic standpoint. The drift of the teaching is that man can have rest only in the next life, when he shall have attained to the final state of the blessed. But there are those who know what it is to enjoy a blessed rest in Christ here and now.

BISHOP ELLICOTT'S OLD TESTAMENT COMMENTARY. 7d. each part. Cassells. The issue for the current month completes the third volume, the point reached being Job vii.

The committee of the Swansea Y.M.C.A. (Dynevor-place, Swansea), have issued THE YOUNG MAN'S BIRTHDAY TEXT BOOK. The texts have been very carefully chosen by Y.M.C.A. and other workers, including Messrs. Williams, R. Burn, E. J. Kennedy, H. Thorne, and others. Mr. George Williams writes an introduction, in which he expresses the hope that the little book may have a wide circulation, and be abundantly productive of practical usefulness. It is issued at 1s., 1s. 6d., and Profits from its sale will go towards wiping off a debt which greatly impedes the work at Swansea.

FRATERNISING AT HULL.—An interchange of pulpits took place on Sunday week in thirty-four Nonconformist churches at Hull, including Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, Methodist New Connexion, and United Free Methodist. On the following evening there was a united communion service in Albion Congregational Chapel. Rev. W. Scott (pastor) presided, and addresses were given by Revs. J. Posnett (Wesleyan) and J. O'Dell (Baptist).

SCOTTISH DEACONESSES. — Three ladies, highly esteemed for piety and good works, have been set apart as Deaconesses in connection with the Church of Scotland. The three are: Lady Grisell Baillie, sister of the Dowager Countess of Aberdeen; Miss Katherine H. Davidson, for several years associated with Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission and diaconal work at Mildmay; and Miss Alice M. Maxwell, superintendent of the Deaconesses' Institution and Training Home in George-square, Edinburgh. In answer to questions appointed by the General Assembly, the ladies expressed their desire to serve as deaconesses in the Church, and promised submission to the courts of the Church. Lady Grisell Baillie intends to continue her parochial ministry at Dryburgh; Miss Davidson will devote her time to the extension of the Women's Guild, and the encouragement of women's work in parishes throughout Scotland; and Miss Maxwell will remain at her present post, and have charge of home mission operations in a poor district of Edinburgh.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services at North Camp Soldiers' Home, Jan. 28 and Feb. 4.——For blessing on special services at Godmanchester and Huntingdon, by Mr. James Scroggie and Mr. Chas. Inglis, Jan. 27 to Feb. 8.——For blessing on special services at East Surrey Grove Baptist Church, by Metropolitan Tabernacle evangelists, commencing on Jan. 27.——For blessing on a mission at Peterchurch, Herefordshire, to Jan. 27, by Mr. J. C. Hereford, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on a mission being held in Westbourne Presbyterian Church, Belfast, Ireland, by Mr. Wm. Thomson, until Feb. 10.——For blessing on a ministers' conference, to be held in Bath from Feb. 4 to 6.——For blessing on a ten days' mission at Greyfriars' Church, Reading, by Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas and Mr. W. Spencer Walton, commencing on Feb. 16.——For blessing on special services at Cage-lane Mission Hall, Plumstead, to Sunday, Jan. 27, by Mr. Alfred J. Davies, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings being held at Arbroath, Forfarshire, N.B., until Feb. 2.——For a great revival of God's work all over Sweden and Norway.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Henry Varley is addressing largely attended services in the Theatre Royal, Melbourne, on Sunday evenings.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has had a very encouraging season of Gospel work at Marshall, Mich.; we hope to furnish some details next week.

Mr. Charles Roger, Y.M.C.A. evangelist, conducted a week of special meetings at Govan last week. The attendance was not encouraging, but Mr. Roger preached the word faithfully.

Mr. W. R. Lane has been holding meetings at the Edinburgh Castle, Burdett-road. On Sunday evening last he was gratified to find a number of Dr. Barnardo's boys among the anxious inquirers.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has conducted an eight days' mission in Barnsley. His labours have been manifestly owned of God. Souls have been brought from darkness to light, and Christians refreshed and encouraged.

Evangelistic services have been held in the Town Hall, Dufftown, N.B., with much blessing. Mr. J. A. Smith, Aberdeen, and the local ministers took part in the services, which were held under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A.

Cranleigh, Surrey.—Mr. Murch, of the London Evangelisation Society, has held a fortnight's Gospel services in the Mission Hall here. The attendances have been very good, and there have been much power and blessing.

Mr. J. Bennett Anderson has been holding services of sermon and song in Waterloo-place Church, Dumfries. Large congregations have been gathered, both on Sundays and week-days, and the effort has been blessed to many.

Messrs. Dennis and Allanson, of the Village Mission, have been holding Gospel services in the Wesleyan Chapel, Kinscliff, Northamptonshire. Many have been found seeking the Saviour, and Christians of all denominations have been richly blessed.

A Gospel mission is being conducted, in connection with the Primitive Methodist Society, at Briton Ferry, South Wales, by Rev. Edward Icke and J. S. Hendra. Night after night, for the past fortnight, the chapel has been filled. A gracious influence has fallen on the people, and already a good many cases of conversion are reported.

Mr. George Clarke returned to London last week; he desires our readers to join with him in thanking God for many journeying mercies, for perfect health, and for the blessing vouchsafed on his labours at the Antipodes. Mr. Clarke preached twice at Talbot Tabernacle, Notting-hill, last Lord's day, and will also preach there on Sunday next at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Union Chapel, Luton.—A very successful mission to children and young people, conducted by Mr. Herbert W. Pewtress, of the Children's Special Service Mission, was commenced on Sunday afternoon, January 13, and continued each evening up to and including Friday last. Each meeting was attended by four or five hundred young people. Very many confessed repentance towards God, and faith in Jesus Christ. Such a mission cannot but prove a great blessing to any church.

Shanklin, I.W.—The Wesleyans, Congregationalists, and Bible Christians banded together here during the week before last for a united evangelical mission. The meetings were held night after night at the different chapels, the Wesleyan minister speaking at the Congregational and Bible Christian chapels, and the Congregational and Bible Christian ministers speaking at the Wesleyan. A spirit of union prevailed among all parties, and the one earnest desire was to reach outsiders and to do good.

Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud, has held special services at the Baptist Chapel, Longhope, Glos. God has graciously heard and answered prayer. Saint and sinner, child and adult, have alike felt that Divine power was working in our midst. Many have professed faith in Christ, and many more have been convinced by the Holy Spirit. During the nine years I have been pastor here no such awakening has taken place. Pray that the work may extend, deepen, and prosper.

CHARLES L. GORDON.

Southgate, N.—Mr. W. Groves has concluded a fortnight's Gospel mission at Chase-road Baptist Chapel. The meetings have been crowded, and it is believed many have been eternally blessed. Mr. C. Wickerson, the pastor, will follow up the mission by a series of special addresses.

Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas and Mr. W. Spencer Walton commence a ten days' mission at Greyfriar's Church and Iron Room, Reading, on February 16.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Watchword last week had a portrait and sketch of the life and work of Dr. Dawson Burns.

Campbelltown, N.B., shipped in 1888, 1,135,000 gallons of whisky, 30,000 more than in 1887, and 16,000 more than in 1886.

It is understood that Sharpe v. Wakefield, the famous licensing case, is to be carried to the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords as the final court of appeal.

Mr. W. C. Hollowell, the temperance candidate, has this year secured a seat on the Northampton School Board. There are three or four others on the Board who are abstainers, including Marianne Farningham.

The Accrington Town Council has decided to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Town Hall. Recently the magistrates granted an occasional licence for a ball in the hall, and in consequence of the disgraceful conduct on the occasion, the Watch Committee recommended the course now decided on.

Lady Henry Somerset was recently admitted a member of the Rechabite Order at Hereford. In the course of a speech on temperance, she conjured the members of the Order to do battle with the great social enemy of England, and expressed herself as entirely in favour of the principles of Local Option.

A new series of warehouse meetings in advocacy of temperance principles has been arranged by the Council of the City of London Total Abstainers' Union. The Middlesex District Lodge of the I.O.G.T. has been greatly encouraged with the success of a mission held in John-street Chapel, near Holborn Town Hall.

FOREIGN.

King Humbert of Italy is said to be a teetotaler and a non-smoker.

The President and Vice-President-elect of the United States are both total abstainers.

A section of Brisbane having twenty-five miles of streets has not a single public-house.

The drink bill of the United States published in 1888 showed a large increase over that in 1887.

A temperance movement has been commenced at Moscow, headed by the celebrated author, Count Leo Tolstoi.

The "Amir" of Bokhara has agreed to the introduction into his territory of Russian merchandise, except intoxicants of all kinds.

Last autumn when the conscripts of the Danish army were up for four weeks, the administration calculated for a demand of 17,000 bottles of brandy. But only 1500 bottles were consumed.

The American monthly, Our Day, says:—"Conscientious public sentiment is slowly rising to the level of the declaration of the Methodist Church, that the liquor traffic can never be legalised without sin."

The Calcutta Missionary Conference has adopted a memorial to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, praying for the abolition of the pernicious out-still system, and the institution of local option regarding the opening of houses for the sale of liquor.

"NATIONAL RIGHTEOUSNESS." — We are exceedingly glad to know that the first issue of this serial is in its thirtieth thousand. Those who wish to create a healthy opinion about our national misdoings will do well to circulate the paper. (2d. Morgan & Scott.)

NORTH AFRICA.—Mr. E. H. Glenny, who has recently returned from a tour of the mission stations in North Africa, delivered an address on Wednesday evening last week, at the monthly workers' meeting at the Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E., Dr. Soltau Eccles presiding. Mr. Glenny made an encouraging statement concerning the work at the different stations occupied by agents of the North Africa Mission. There have already been drops of blessing, but the workers are looking in faith to God for the showers and floods. It is felt that only a special manifestation of the Holy Spirit can bring about definite results to their labours. Missionaries are urgently needed who will devote themselves to work amongst the many thousands of Europeans in North Africa, and the council of the Mission purpose making this a special department of their work. They invite offers of service from any who feel led of God to give themselves to this portion of the great harvest field.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, JAN. 27.—Genesis XI.

(1) The building of Babel.—Driven by a fear of another deluge, notwithstanding God's distinct assurance to the contrary, and impelled by a common desire to make a name (ver. 4), the descendants of Noah began to build on the plain of Shinar. Men seem born to be builders. They build houses, or fortunes, or reputations; systems or societies—but how often atheistically. They reject God's foundation, and build on the sand of the alluvial plain. They think to secure themselves against any flood of misfortune or trouble that may sweep through the world. They are bent on making a name. Some men are always taking bricks for stone and slime for mortar, but the work ends in disappointment and confusion. Oh, builders for eternity, get on God's Rock, build according to his plan, and for his glory.

(2) The confusion of tongues.—The whole world had been of one lip and one stock of words (ver. 1). But God came down, first to see, then to confound. He never confounds in judgment, unless He has carefully examined into the rights of a matter for Himself. He is always coming down to see what we are doing, and nothing can escape his searching eyes. And He can judge us by a very little thing. He touched the lip, and altered the whole method of pronunciation. This disunion prevails in the world, but in the Church God has given the true principle of union in the risen Jesus, and at Pentecost Babel was reversed; whilst heaven will give all one lip again (Rev. vii. 9).

(3) The call of Abram.—We must not forget to compare Acts vii. 2 with the words before us. The movement of that little clan in the grey dawn of history from its original seat was the result of a Divine call to the youngest son. He carried with him the old father Terah, and others of his race, but their presence stayed his march and impeded his obedience, so that the exodus stopped short at Charran, instead of going forward to Canaan. Only when his father was dead did Abram carry out the Divine programme to the full. "Let us lay aside every weight." Let us do God's will to the uttermost, come what may (Deut. xxxiii. 9).

MONDAY, JAN. 28.—Genesis XII.

God's commands are always linked with promise. Count the seven shalls and wills of this promise. God does not always give his reasons, but He is lavish of his promises. The one cry of Scripture is for separation, to which we are graciously allured (Matt. xix. 29; 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18). The keynote of Abram's life was separation; not all at once, but step by step, until country, kindred, Lot, worldly alliances, fleshly expedients were one after another cast aside, and he stood alone with God.

(1) Abram's obedience.—"So Abram departed" (Heb. xi. 8). His obedience was the result of faith in the bare word of God. He was not sure of his destination. The land had yet to be shown. Fierce nations were around. Trackless deserts lay beyond the Euphrates-flood. It seemed impossible that the world could be blessed through a childless man. But it was enough for him that God had spoken. Faith prompted obedience, and obedience reacted on faith (Rom. iv. 16). Immediate and scrupulous obedience is the secret of a healthy and useful life.

(2) The tent and the altar.—"He dwelt in tents" (Heb. xi. 9). The tent life is natural to the man whose portion is God, and whose fatherland is the Land of Promise. "We have here no abiding city, but we seek one to come." The tent is good enough for the pilgrim. God met his obedient child with a new promise, when he reached Canaan. This is the land (ver. 7). And there he built his first altar; and afterwards, where he pitched his tent, he reared the altar of praise and prayer and consecration. Wherever we go, at home or abroad, however short our stay, we should rear an altar.

(3) The famine.—In the way of obedience and faith there always will be difficulties. By these God tests and teaches us. A famine is no indication that we are wrong, but that God is going to reveal some marvellous deliverance. Alas! Abram failed under the test, and went down to Egypt, always the Scripture symbol of reliance on an arm of flesh (Isa. xxx.). And one sin led to another, in his shameful denial of his wife. But God did not cast him off; He graciously protected and restored him (Ps. cv. 15).

TUESDAY, JAN. 29.—Genesis XIII.

In the opening verses of this chapter the patriarch seems like a restored backslider. After his grievous descent, he comes up again out of Egypt: and makes his way back to the old spot on the highlands of Bethel, where his first tent and altar had stood. But all through his wanderings there had been a depressing worldly element in his camp: Lot, his nephew, went with him (ver. 5), and he was one of those who are swept along by the religious earnestness of others, but are destitute of religious principle and force of character.

(1) Abram's proposal.—He was older and richer, but he took no advantage from either. Feeling that separation was inevitable, he gave Lot the right of choice (ver. 9). And it was less difficult to do this, because he was so sure that, whatever Lot decided, God would do the best thing for himself. We can afford to waive our rights when God is the portion of our inheritance, and maintains our lot (Ps. xvi. 5).

(2) Lot's choice.—The plain of Jordan was fair as a garden, but steeped in shameful sin. And the young man chose according to the sight of his eyes, with a view to material and worldly gain. He determined to gain the world, though he should lose his soul. Are there not many still who choose health-resorts, dwelling-places, and schools, irrespective of the religious and moral atmosphere, and only upon such grounds as appeal to the uplifted eyes of human judgment and outward promise?

(3) God's renewed promise.—It came in the loneliness after Lot's last followers had streamed out of the camp (ver. 14). Lot had lifted his eyes for himself; now God bade Abram lift up his eyes, not to choose, but to behold what God had chosen for him. He was first to estimate his treasures, then to enjoy them (ver. 17). Let us count up the inestimable wealth stored up in Jesus, and let us enter upon its full and delightful enjoyment. Lot grasped all, and lost all. Abram left all, and won all (John xii. 25).

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 30.—Genesis XIV.

The little confederate kings of the plain of Sodom thought themselves safe from the kings of the basin of the Euphrates. The desert lay between them; and it was a far cry from Sodom to Shinar. After twelve years' servitude they rebelled. But in the fourteenth year the dreaded Chedorlaomer swept down, and ravaged the neighbouring territories, narrowing the circle closer and closer, till he defeated them on the slippery soil, and marched up the course of the Jordan, homewards, flushed with victory, laden with booty, and carrying with them Lot.

(1) Lot's plight (ver. 12).—It was a terrible fall from the tent and altar of Abraham to the captivity of Chedorlaomer. We cannot expect to get all the sweets of the world, and miss its bitters. The path of separation is the only path of safety and peace. From the heights of Mamre, Abram beheld the march of the invaders, but they came not nigh him (Ps. xci. 7).

(2) His triumphant deliverance.—It was an heroic enterprise, that a pastoral chief should dare, with 318 untrained shepherds, to attack a disciplined host. But faith subdues kingdoms. Here, too, was an example of chivalrous love, which is ever forgetful of injuries and negligent of self. His dispositions were carefully made. His success was complete. He brought back all.

(3) Abram's return.—The moment of success is always one of danger. The king of Sodom insidiously proposed that they should share the spoils; thus ever does the world approach us when we succeed, and attract notice. But Abram had previously met Melchisedec, the holy priest, who had given him bread and wine, and his blessing, and a new title for God, which the patriarch quoted in the moment of temptation (19, 22). Thus God prevents us with the blessings of his goodness.

THURSDAY, JAN. 31.—Genesis XV

When temptation has been met and overcome, we may ever expect new revelations (verse 1). Abram might dread retaliation on the part of Chedorlaomer, and therefore God said, "Fear not, I am thy shield." He had not accepted the king of Sodom's offer: therefore came the words, "I am thy exceeding great reward." And all previous promises were excelled by the new great assurance about the seed. Abram was to have a child of his own, and his descendants were to be as numerous as the stars which fill the midnight Eastern sky (ver. 5). And he believed God. Simple wo but how much they mean; often referred to aft wards. When we reckon God true, He reckons righteous. Directly we believe, we not only ha the seed-germ of a righteous life, but we accounted judicially righteous before a holy G (Rom. iv. 23, 24).

(1) The covenant.—In olden times, when m bound themselves to each other by solemn oat the parts of a victim were divided, and laid upon t ground, and the covenanting parties passed betwe them; thus Abram divided the appointed sacrifi (ver. 10), and the lamp of the Shechinah fire pass between them, signifying the ratification of t presence of God. How much God will do to gi a substantial resting-ground for faith (Heb. vi. 1

(2) The horror of darkness.—It is hard to w and watch for God. Abram watched for the wh of a long Eastern day, scaring the vultures fr the scorched pieces. Let us be vigilant again aught that might mar our sacrifices. Then, as t sun set, a great darkness fell upon his soul, as foresaw the sufferings of his posterity; and yet h much mercy was there in it all. God would w hundreds of years, rather than cut off nations u their iniquity had brimmed to overflowing (ver. 1

FRIDAY, FEB. 1.—Genesis XVI.

Here we have an example of that energy of o self-life which seeks to fulfil for itself the purpos and promises of God. It is not enough to sure of God's will, we must wait till He show how to secure its fulfilment. But Abram anti pated God, and fell in with Sarai's unwoman proposal that he should marry her slave-girl. was the plan of expediency and policy, which e tailed endless misery to all three.

(1) Hagar's flight.—She could bear it no mo and so she fled. She had not learnt the meaning that word submit. Yet, what wonder! How fe Christians have learnt it, among servants, a indeed all classes. Remember that even the ha dealings of men are God's permissions, and the fore his will. Take up the yoke, and carry until He says, "It is enough," and bids you go o free (1 Pet. ii. 18—25).

(2) The Angel-Jehovah (ver. 10).—Before his i carnation the Lord Jesus often appeared to men angel-guise; and the peculiar expression of t Hebrew indicates that it was no ordinary angel w spoke to the poor slave-girl, and read the desti of the wild ass man, to whom she was to give bir She was right, when, in an outburst of mingl awe and joy, she called Him a God who sees (2 C xvi. 9; 1 Pet. iii. 12)

(3) Sound advice.—To all who are fretti against God's appointments, and who are flee from the path of duty, there is but one word advice needed, Return and submit. And amid the hardships of life, let the promises of God ring your heart, as in that of Hagar, making endura possible, and life a refrain of sweet music. C listen to God's angel speaking beside the fountai of life!

SATURDAY, FEB. 2.—Genesis XVII.

For thirteen years God's voice was still; and th as if in passing allusion to his servant's failure, said, "Be thou perfect" (verse 1). We must whole-hearted. Our surrender must be witho reserve, our obedience implicit. So only will G enter into covenant with us, and multiply us e ceedingly. It is the whole-hearted service which ever fruitful service.

(1) The terms of the covenant.—Investigate th thoroughly, then lay hand on them, and claim th all. All is yours, if by faith you are one w faithful Abraham (Gal. iii. 9). Fruitfulness Christian life, the salvation of our households, t inheriting of the land, the abundance of spiritu seed—all these are guaranteed to those who c believe God, and walk before Him with an u divided heart.

(2) The sign of the covenant.—The promises God were made to Abraham, when yet uncircu cised, and therefore are irrespective of any r (Rom iv. 11). Still it was a sign and seal. T counterpart of it, spiritually, is in that purity heart and life, which Christ secures (Col. ii. 1 As to the mere outward rite, that is abolished Christ. It was the one aim of the Apostle Paul show that it was temporary and national in range (Acts xv. 24; Gal. v. 4, vi. 18).

(3) Abram's reception of God's covenant.— laughed with assurance of hope, as he lay hum in the dust (verse 17). He received promises his wife, for Ishmael, and for the coming ch He obeyed, at whatever cost of suffering, and cured obedience throughout his house (verse 2 He quietly waited for the salvation of God.

Sunday Afternoon, February 3.

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

MARK iv. 1—20. GOLDEN TEXT: MARK iv. 23.

ICTURE the scene brought before us in ver. 1. n the Sea of Galilee, probably not far from Beth-ida, our Lord sits in a fisherman's boat, which oats in deep water only a few yards from the ore. Upon the rising beach a great multitude ve gathered, eager to see and hear the great eacher. Perhaps from our Lord's position He n look inland upon a scene which Dean Stanley s described as "disclosing in detail every feature the great parable. The undulating grain field scending to the water's edge. The trodden path-y running through the midst of it, with no fence hedge to prevent the seed from falling upon it, elf hard with the constant tramp of horse, and ule, and human feet (4)...The rocky ground of e hill side protruding here and there through the ain fields (5, 6). The large bushes of thorn, he nabk,' that kind of which tradition says the own of thorns was woven, springing up in the ry midst of the waving wheat" (7). Followed a multitude who were not eager simply to learn e truth, such a view before the Saviour might ll suggest this parable.

'He taught them by parables" (2).—This method teaching was not new. There are many illus-tions of it in the Old Testament (Jud. ix. 7; . v. 1). But its adoption by our Lord was signi-nt. Already his hearers were divided generally o two classes, those who had become disciples eed, and desired to know the truth (John viii. ; and those whose prejudices had led them to ect what they had already heard, and who were, refore, contented not to learn. The two classes contrasted in ver. 10—12.

For both these this method of teaching was ended. It revealed truth to the one, by leading m to closer fellowship with Christ ("alone," 10), l to more careful attention to his teaching. But oncealed truth from the other, because to make own the mysteries to them would only have ravated their condemnation (11, 12). So the d adopted this method of teaching by parables nercy to his true disciples, and in judgment to se who were not willing to see. Yet even the gment was tempered with mercy. It was ainly not his desire that they should not repent, their attitude of mind was such that they could . It was not more truth they needed, but the it of subjection to what they had already heard. knew that "they could not see 'the secret of kingdom' without being repelled in spirit, and firmed in their dissent and dislike."—Morison. e twofold object of the parables is thus described Lange: "Those who were aroused would pro-s and inquire, as the disciples inquired; while se who were ready to harden themselves would preserved from suddenly incurring that awful t which the full disclosure of the mysteries of kingdom would have entailed."

olemn and important lessons are suggested by e thoughts, which fittingly introduce this able. Whether the truth will save us or not ends upon our attitude to it. If we are bent n not seeing it, and not surrendering our will to then the very form in which it is taught will us in our unholy purpose (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16). se who desire to learn, get "alone" (10) with us, and "ask" Him. Unto such the hidden tery is revealed, but unto those who are already sting the light the mystery remains concealed

The sower soweth the word" (14).—First our d Himself, then his servants—all who preach teach his word are included as "sowers." e seed is the Word of God" (Luke viii. 11). It esses life (Heb. iv. 12); is incorruptible (1 Pet. 3); regenerates (James i. 18). It is the word he kingdom (Matt. xiii. 19, ix. 35, xxiv. 14).

he hearers of the word are represented by four ds of soil (comp. 4—8 with 15—20). Of these , only one bears fruit. Are profitable hearers n equally small minority? The chances seem e against our hearing aright, and demand great and self-examination.

) Wayside hearers (4, 15).—No one expects the seed sown upon the hard footpath will fruit. It lies on the ground, until "trodden r foot" (Luke viii. 5), or devoured by the s. "The wayside hearers are those who never allow the word to get under the surface of their thoughts; and hence any little superficial influence which it may exert is easily and speedily removed by any of the winged and watchful agencies of Satan."—Morison. They are thoughtless and careless, do not seek to "understand" (Matt. xiii. 19), and making no effort to hold what they have heard, it is easily taken away. The habit of procrastination; the fear of what a companion may say; an unfavourable remark concerning the teacher; worldly or foolish conversation—these are some of the evil birds that take away the good seed. How many examples may be found among our scholars!

(2) Stony ground hearers (5, 6, 16, 17).—Beneath a very thin layer of soil is the hard rock. On such ground no perfect fruit is expected. Yet its very defect (5) causes the seed to spring up the more rapidly. "There was no scope for development downward, hence the forces of the plant rushed prematurely upward."—Morison. These are the hearers that excite the hopes of the teacher or preacher, only to cause him sad disappointment. The "gladness" with which they receive the word looks like the joy of the true convert. Then the growth is so rapid they soon seem to be in advance of others who began before they did. But the inevitable persecution and tribulation come, which wither the plant more rapidly than it grew. Why? Because all the growth was outward. It is not the presence of temptation, but the absence of root, that leads to failure. Examples of this are numerous: Herod (Matt. vi. 20); disciples (John vi. 66); Pliable, in "Pilgrim's Progress."

(3) Thorny ground hearers (7, 18, 19).—Jesus referred to soil in which "a clump of thorny plants had been burnt down, according to Oriental custom, before the seed-sowing time."—Morison. What chance has the seed under such conditions? The thorns that choke the good seed are "the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lust of other things." Let the young beware. As years advance "cares" increase, and many now complain that life is such a struggle that they have no opportunity to think of their soul's condition. Riches become more alluring, and divert the mind from that wisdom which is better than gold (Prov. viii. 19). And desires are multiplied in many directions, giving the Word less chance to do its work. A divided heart, in which the cares and riches and honours of this world have place, cannot bring forth fruit unto perfection. Judas, Ananias, and a host of others since then, are examples of these hearers.

(4) Good ground hearers (20).—These present the contrast. They "understand" (Matt. xiii. 23), and "keep the word" (Luke viii. 15), and "bring forth fruit with patience." And what a result follows—"thirty, sixty, and a hundredfold."

Apply.—To which of these hearers do we belong? If to either of the first three, we need not continue so. We are not like the inanimate, irresponsible soil: seek the right condition, that we hear not in vain.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH.—Rev. D. M. Cameron has an earnest band of workers assisting him in this needy district. The congregation is chiefly composed of working-class people, who have battled bravely with straitened circumstances, and succeeded in establishing many useful agencies. A considerable debt remaining on the building necessitates the payment of interest money, whereby progress is somewhat retarded. Friends are, however, coming to the rescue, and it is hoped that more will follow, so that the testimony for Christ may not be thus hindered. Some friends of the work attended the tea given a few days ago by the members of the mothers' meeting, and were delighted with the contrast which the bright scene presented with the neglected condition of things in the district a few years ago.

HOMES OF HOPE.—Mr. W. Hornibrook, secretary to the Homes of Hope, Regent-square, W.C., writes:—"The applications every day are very urgent, and many of them are distressing. In number they are far beyond our funds, so that we are sadly straitened in our work. The thought of refusing a helping hand to any young woman struggling to get out of her miserable life is very distressing, and especially so in the case of those who have made a first false step." There is a world of pathos in this brief and touching statement. As an old subscriber, and well acquainted with the good the Homes are doing, I would ask some of your numerous readers to send help, and that all of them might be induced to give the work and its workers their earnest prayers, now and during the year."—Yours truly,

R. B. WILLIAMS.

A NOBLE TALE WELL TOLD.*

THE "Tale" is the story of the life of the Authoress of "Mother's Last Words," and it is told, partly by Mrs. Sewell herself, and partly by her friend, Mrs. Bayly (authoress of "Ragged Homes and How to Mend Them"). Seldom has a gracious woman been so happy in her biographer; seldom has biographer been so happy in her subject; and seldom have we received from the press a book so good and beautiful, so helpful and inspiring as this. The portrait of Mrs. Sewell, which stands as frontispiece to this handsome volume, adds greatly to its value.

The autobiography, which fills the first seventy-five pages—very interesting on its own account—is specially so as the work of extreme old age. It was begun in Mrs. Sewell's 82nd, and continued through her 87th year. But her Life gives us an even more remarkable example of late maturity. It is almost astounding to be told that the writer of these ballads was in her 60th year before she ever thought of writing verse for the public; and "I have heard no one," writes Miss Bayly (who prepared the chapter on "Literary Work"), "ever mention Mrs. Sewell's having previously written verses as an amusement. She saw a thing that wanted to be done, and thought she would try and do it herself, and found that she could. This appears to be the history of her discovering her vocation, after threescore years of training, by using her imagination as a power of sympathy." This sympathy, and the perfect unselfishness and considerateness which flows from fulness of sympathy, glorified her life. A friend writes:—"The thought in my mind about our dear Mrs. Sewell is, 'Blessed is she that considereth the poor.' There have been many who have done more notable things for the poor, but I know of no one who has considered them as she has done."

Mrs. Bayly's part of the work is beyond praise. Written amid great weakness, and finished under the shadow of widowhood, it is work specially calculated to comfort and inspire those that suffer and mourn. At the same time, the book brims over with bright, healthy, practical Christianity, and abounds in passages of beauty and power. The chapter on "Education" is particularly wise and helpful; and the one entitled "My Nannie" is simply perfect, but it must be read to be understood.

* THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF MRS. SEWELL. By Mrs. Bayly. 6s. (James Nisbet & Co.)

THE IRISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE held its annual meetings last week in Belfast. At the business session, over which Mr. J. G. Richardson of Bessbrook presided, it was reported that during the year just closed great progress was made. In Munster, arrests for drunkenness are showing "a marvellous falling off"; while, for the past four years, there has also been steady decrease on this head throughout Ireland. Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., who occupied the chair at the public meeting, took a brief survey of what was done, as well as what was left undone in the cause of temperance in the last Session of Parliament.

THE CRIPPLES' HOME AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Marylebone-road, W., is an institution which, during many years, has been extending help and blessing to a specially needy class. Since 1853, nearly a thousand patients have enjoyed the advantages of the Home. They have come from all parts of the country, and upon many poor bent forms physical wonders have been wrought. Efforts are now being made to restore and enlarge the Home, before which there is, we hope, a career of greater usefulness than hitherto. In a booklet recently published, entitled, "Mercy's Touch," an interesting account is given of the work. The treasurer is, Dr. C. H. F. Routh, 52, Montagu-square, W.

THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION has annually a special week of prayer for young women. This year the period fixed is from February 3 to 10 inclusive. Meetings are held in the institutes and branches throughout the world. In addition to the means usually employed at this time, the Association seeks to gain this year a wider advantage still. The United Central Council (316, Regent-street, London, W.) has addressed a letter to clergy and ministers, requesting them to preach specially to young women on one of the Sundays included in this week of prayer. The Association is now so extended, and its work so varied and important, that such a kindness on the part of preachers would be of much value, and it is hoped that many will respond.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Ladies' Home Mission Union, lately formed in connection with the Church Pastoral Aid Society, is making encouraging progress. The main object of the Union is to bring the ladies interested in the Society's work, either as collectors, subscribers, hon. secretaries, or otherwise, into closer union with each other all over the country, binding them together in spirit and active sympathy for home mission work.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Frank Smith, of Weymouth, who a few weeks ago seceded from the Congregational body, and was baptized in Regent's Park Chapel, London, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Jesmond Baptist Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Army is making rapid advances in the Colonies. The following extract from The Victorian Freeman shows how the secular Press in Australia regards their operations:—"The month that has passed away has witnessed some remarkable gatherings of the Salvation Army in our metropolis. When we consider that eight years ago they were an unknown quantity in these colonies, and when we see such a mass of enthusiastic men and women as were gathered together for 'two days with God' we must confess the sight is extraordinary. It perplexes us."

METHODIST.

A Holiness Convention was held at Hampstead last week. Various well-known speakers, including Revs. E. E. Jenkins, F. B. Meyer, and Mark Guy Pearse, took part, and the meetings were a source of much inspiration to those present.

The "forward movement," says the London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian, has the full sympathy of the President of the Wesleyan Conference; and at the next annual gathering of this body, at Sheffield, which commences on July 23, some daring and novel schemes of aggression will be submitted, which are likely to meet with the sympathy of the Methodist people generally.

Great Home Mission Conventions were held at Bolton and Blackburn last week. At the gathering at Bolton, on Monday evening, there was such an immense assemblage that an overflow meeting was held in a large Congregational Chapel, lent for the purpose. That fraternal act was much appreciated by the Methodists. As a practical outcome of the Convention at Bolton a simultaneous mission is being held in all the Wesleyan Circuits of the town, for which careful and extensive preparation has been made.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Congregational Union will hold their autumnal assembly this year at Hull.

Rev. F. Hastings, of Tolmer-square Congregational Church, leaves England for Adelaide, Australia, where he has accepted a call to an important sphere on Friday, March 29. His removal is widely regretted in London.

A mission-hall, the outgrowth of cottage services held in Cyril-street by members of the Ormskirk-street congregation, has been opened in Knowsley-road, St. Helen's. Revs. R. J. Ward, D. P. McPherson, J. Brown, and C. Garrett took part in the opening services.

A month of special evangelistic work in connection with the church at West Marsh, Grimsby, has been conducted by Rev. T. J. Leslie. One feature of the mission has been the holding of cottage prayer-meetings in different parts of West Marsh, thereby reaching the people at their homes.

Rev. Walker King, rector of Huish Champflower, occupied the chair at a meeting, in the Congregational Church, Wiveliscombe, Somerset, of the members of a large Bible-class under the tuition of Mr. W. Brown. Addresses were delivered by his son, Mr. Walker King, and also by representatives of the Wesleyan and Congregational bodies, the Society of Friends, and the Salvation Army.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Thain Davidson's monthly sermon to young men, on January 13, at Colebrooke-row Presbyterian Church, was based on Zech. ii. 4: "Run, speak to this young man." The discourse was replete with sound instruction, and characterised by pointed and direct appeal.

Joint Committees of the American Presbyterian Church for the North and South have been in conference in New York. After long secret sessions, which extended over a week, it is announced that nothing definite was done. The original subject was to arrange for united mission work by the branches in the North and the South. It was agreed to hold another meeting in Atlanta, Ga., on April 24 next, and conclude discussion there.

A new Presbyterian Church, at College-park, Willesden, London, was opened on Sunday week; a social meeting of the congregation being held on the following evening. This work was commenced about seven years ago, and has steadily grown ever since. This advancement, says The Presbyterian Messenger, is chiefly due to the earnest spiritual life which has, from the beginning, animated the congregation. The number of devoted servants of Christ who have gathered around the church at all periods of its brief history is a cause of much gratitude to God, and of hope for the untried future. The new church seats about 650 people.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Signor Silva, a deputy from the Free Italian Church, who was for some years a priest and monk of the Roman Catholic Church, but is now heart and soul engaged in the work of evangelisation in Italy, spoke at the meeting of Edinburgh Free Church Presbytery the other day.

The Lanarkshire Christian Union held a special conference at Parkhead on Saturday last. The first part was devotional, after which the subject of "The Indwelling of the Holy Spirit" was taken up. About eighty delegates were present from the various districts of the county. There was a large attendance of the general public.

Dundee Established Church Presbytery, at its last meeting, agreed to a report on non-churchgoing, that urges on all members of the church the necessity of making their religious profession far more manifest by holy living. Great prominence was given in the discussion to the revelations of The Dundee Advertiser as to hovels in the city where the poor are huddled.

Rev. J. A. Graham was ordained on Sunday week in St. George's, Edinburgh, as first foreign missionary of the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild. The building was filled to overflowing, and fully a thousand young men were present, including representatives of the Guild from all parts of Scotland. Dr. Norman Macleod, who presided, called attention to the remarkable nature of the meeting, which was without a parallel in the history of the church. Mr. Graham goes to Kalimpong, North-eastern Bengal, India.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Ladies' Temperance Union, of which Mrs. Richardson is the president, is doing excellent service to the temperance cause. During the past year it did much to further the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Table.

Since the Belfast Methodist Town Mission was established, in October last, the two agents employed have paid 6900 visits, besides conducting four weekly meetings, and a Sabbath-school. The prospects of the Mission are hopeful and encouraging.

The Irish Temperance League, which is doing an excellent work throughout Ireland, held its annual meetings last week in Belfast. The report was of a cheering and encouraging character, and the anniversary on the whole passed off successfully.

The Belfast Female Mission is doing much good in a quiet way. During the past year its ten agents paid over 16,000 visits, read the Word to, and conversed with, over 24,000 persons, held nearly 2000 prayer-meetings, distributed a large number of tracts, and got several to sign the pledge and begin to attend a place of worship.

A largely attended Conference for the Promotion of the Spiritual Life was held last week in the Presbyterian Church, Dervock. A Conference on Missions and other departments of Christian work was held in Newry, under the auspices of the Newry Presbytery. A Conference of Elders was held in the Presbyterian Church, Mill-row, Antrim.

High ritualism and clerical bigotry are showing their head in Ireland. Rev. W. A. Hayes, rector of Dromore, in a sheet-almanack for 1889, calls his own church "the Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church," and says that the Roman Church "is also a branch of the Holy Catholic Church" founded by Jesus Christ and his Apostles; while Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, and other denominations are only religious societies of recent date, with a human origin. Rev. H. D. Murphy, incumbent of St. George's, Belfast, has also been teaching, in effect, that not to belong to his communion is to be outside the Christian Church altogether. Such sentiments carry their own condemnation, but it is sad even to have to record them.

DEATHS.

Mr. Alex. Moore, one of the oldest Methodists in Belfast.—Mr. Hugh Andrews, Belfast, a respected elder of the Presbyterian Church, aged 91.—Miss Mahaffy, Belfast, a devoted Methodist class leader.—Mrs. Selina Wright, widow of the late Francis Wright, of Osmasten Manor.—Rev. Prebendary William Hunt, late vicar of Holy Trinity, Weston-super-Mare.—Rev. T. B. Dodds, minister of the Free Church, Lochee.—Rev. R. Black, Free Church minister of Kilsyth, N.B.—Miss Alice Barrett, one of "the hundred" missionaries who went out to China during 1887, under the auspices of the China Inland Mission.—Rev. P. Grant, parish minister of Tenandry, N.B.—M. Emile Vautier, of Lyons, an influential member of the Reformed Church of France.—Mr. John Chisholm, merchant, of Beauly, an elder in the Free Church since 1843.—Rev. T. H. Tarlton, rector of Lutterworth, Leicestershire, a valued worker in the Y.M.C.A. in the early days of its existence, and its first secretary.—Dr. N. Jesudasen, M.A., M.D., health officer of Madras, whose death will be a great loss to the native Christian community of Madras.—The Bishop of St. Asaph, Wales.

"STRANGERS' REST," RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

—Two hundred hungry men were fed at the "Strangers' Rest" on Thursday week; many had not tasted food that day. The lodging-houses in which these men live are visited by workers from the Rest every Sunday evening, who sing and preach to them. As funds permit, teas are given to show the men a little practical sympathy. On Friday evening the hall was filled by sailors. After tea an earnest Gospel address was given by Miss Messer. The annual report will be forwarded to anyone who will write to Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. sec., 163, Ratcliff-highway, E.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION calls for eighty men to fill vacancies and open new work on the various mission fields.

IN LUCERNE, Switzerland, there are 2856 Protestants—a seventh of the entire population. In eight years the number of Protestants has doubled.

AT LUCKNOW, INDIA, where so many were murdered during the Sepoy rebellion thirty years ago, 2000 children, nearly all of Hindu or Mohammedam parentage, recently marched in a Sabbath-school procession.

THE LORD'S DAY IN FRANCE.—The French Society for the Observance of the Lord's Day has issued an appeal, signed by over two hundred heads of workshops and manufactories, demanding the closing of such places and warehouses on Sundays. A Roman Catholic association in Loire is co-operating in the work of circulating the appeals among the people.

THE McALL MISSION.—A hall, providing seating accommodation for 500 persons, has been opened at 133, Rue Saint Denis. It is in place of one hitherto occupied at 10, Boulevard Sébastopol, and is held in conjunction with a Baptist Church. Once a convent chapel, and latterly a warehouse, the building will, it is hoped, prove of great value in the very needy district in which it is situate.

PRIESTS AND PEOPLE.—Noticing that quarrels between priests and people sometimes afford grand opportunities for popular attention to evangelical truth, M. Réveillaud, in Le Signal, calls upon ambassadors of Christ not to be above profiting by such occurrences. He cites the remarkable movement in Paifve, near Liège, as an instance of what great things may grow out of such apparently small matters.

ANTI-SLAVERY IN SWITZERLAND.—As a result of the crusade undertaken throughout Europe by Cardinal Lavigerie, an Anti-Slavery League has been formed at Geneva, and a manifesto has been issued by the provisional committee, urging the claims of the native Africans on the sympathy and help of the Swiss. Active steps are being taken to keep alive and extend the interest aroused in the abolition of all forms of African slavery.

ITALY.—As the Bible is being issued in parts by Sig. Sonzogno, of Milan, so it is forming the subject of popular lectures by Pastor Borgia, of the same city. Taking the weekly parts with them, curious and inquiring people attend the lectures, whereat special attention is paid to the "notes," which constitute a Roman Catholic commentary on the Scriptures. The pastor finds no difficulty in showing that the text is very often much more plain than the "elucidation."

THE POOR OF PARIS, as well as the aged and young who need help and protection, are the objects of increasing solicitude on the part of the Reformed Church of France. Aged and infirm poor are maintained in asylums and similar institutions; sick people are cared for in Homes presided over by deaconesses; and the education of orphan and other children is undertaken. M. Robin's Industrial Home at Belleville continues to be visited by such unemployed men as are willing to work for the assistance given to them.

THE BELGIAN EVANGELICAL SOCIETY continues to report cheering results in several provinces of the country. In Liége the people are asking for new missions. The same holds true of Namur, where large congregations are listening to the Gospel. As additional stations are founded, it is constantly being found that the ground has already been prepared by the colporteur. Among the Flemish people of Ostend and Ghent, prejudice is being overcome, and the workers are receiving great encouragement.

PRACTICAL TOLERATION.—The Abbé Genthial, of the Lycée of Tournon, who has just died at Gilhoc, Ardèche, aged 83 years, was a man of warm and broad sympathies. Le Christianisme says he left orders to be buried in the simplest possible manner, the bearers to be six poor heads of families, two of them Protestants, to be selected by the local pastor. Provision was made for each of these to be handsomely remunerated. The Abbé's last and ardent wish was that the people of Gilhoc would thoroughly cultivate religious toleration, which he held to be of the essence of Christian charity.

NORTHERN FRANCE is receiving the Gospel in a cheering manner. Four or five years ago Protestants were very rare indeed in the populous villages of Pas de Calais and Nord. Now there are vigorous churches at Hersin, Bruay, and Beuvry, as well as other centres of growing evangelical effort. When the Reformed faith was first preached among the people, whose principal occupation is mining, a spirit of persecution was manifested by employers and others. As, however, the converts have turned their backs upon the drinking tavern and renounced other habits of dissipation common to the mining class, they have very practically commended Protestantism to their employers, who have by degrees ceased to offer opposition to the new movement.

Ben Jonson's-road Hall, Stepney Green. — For several years past the poorest children of the neighbourhood have been fed. Parcels of food and clothing and donations, will be thankfully received by Mr. JAMES TAYLOR, as above.

Castle-yard Sunday-school, Holland-street, Southwark.—This school, having been erected at the beginning of the present century, sorely needs rebuilding. Contributions towards this object will be thankfully received by Mr. W. H. BUNCOMBE, Ingleside, Knatchbull-road, Camberwell, London, S.E.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, JANUARY 21, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT. — Well-attended meetings of the fallen have been held at King's-cross, Islington, Stepney, and Pimlico, with good results, by Mr. John H. L. Christien, organising superintendent of the above Society, assisted by Rev. Mr. Whitley, and many Christian friends.

The Christian Age says:

"This song, a semi-religious ballad, wherein is taught in homely but effective language the lesson of hope in a life hereafter, we heartily commend to the notice of those of our readers who are musical. A word of congratulation is due to the composer, who has fitted the words with a melody which happily expresses the ideas of the writer.

J. S. VIRTUE & CO., LIMITED,
26, IVY LANE, LONDON, E.C.

In order to meet the convenience of many desirous of visiting his Institutions,

DR. BARNARDO proposes (D.V.) to be AT HOME every TUESDAY AFTERNOON during this Winter, between the hours of 2 and 6 o'clock, when anyone can see him and inspect the Homes without making a previous appointment.

THE STEPNEY HOMES are also open for inspection on the afternoon of every other week-day (except Saturday, when no one can ever be admitted). But Dr. Barnardo hopes it will be remembered that the great pressure of the work in his hands compels him to announce that he cannot personally see visitors on any other day, except Tuesday, save by appointment, made and confirmed beforehand.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made, by which Visitors, calling at Stepney on the afternoon of any week day (except Saturday) can not only see the Boys Engaged at Work at their various Trades, but may also inspect "HER MAJESTY'S HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN," in Stepney Causeway, "THE LABOUR HOUSE FOR DESTITUTE YOUTHS," in the Commercial Road, "LEOPOLD HOUSE HOME FOR LITTLE BOYS," in the Burdett Road, and "THE EDINBURGH CASTLE MISSION HALL AND COFFEE PALACE." A private Omnibus will convey Visitors (free of expense) to any or all of these Branches from Stepney, situated only a few minutes' distance from each other.

THE STEPNEY HOMES are easily reached from any part of London, thus:—By Train from Fenchurch street, or North London Railway Stations to Stepney Station; By Omnibus from Charing Cross and the Bank to Stepney Causeway; Or by Metropolitan Railway to Aldgate, thence by Poplar Tramcar (yellow) to Stepney Causeway.

The People's Bible Union, 1889.

BRANCH FOR MEN, YOUNG MEN, AND WOMEN.

This Union is arranged in short passages especially adapted to the capacity of our working people; and is an attempt to get them into the habit of daily Bible Reading. It is suitable for members of Men's, Young Men's, and Women's Bible Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Sunday Morning Schools, and Domestic Servants. Will those interested in any of the above who would like to have a specimen Calendar, containing the Daily Passage and Practical Notes upon the Passage, send a stamped envelope, with address, saying which Branch is required, to

The Rev. HERBERT H. DIBBEN,
THE RECTORY, BRIERLEY HILL, STAFFS.

Last year was our first year of issue, and we enrolled over 3,000 members, and started over 40 Branches, and received many testimonials of the benefit and need of this Union.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY (Commenced 1863).

PRESIDENT—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

THE COTTAGE HOMES AT FARNINGHAM

ARE for 300 Little Boys, homeless or in danger of falling into crime. They are clothed, fed, educated, and taught Trades as Tailors, Shoemakers, Carpenters, Engineers, Bakers, Steam Printers, and Gardeners; and then provided with outfit and placed in situations, while they are looked after as "Old Boys."

THE ORPHAN HOMES AT SWANLEY

Are for 200 Orphan or Fatherless Boys, who are wholly maintained and educated, and receive technical instruction in Lithography, Telegraphy, Photography, Chemistry, and other subjects, to fit them for a working life

BASIS.—"The Institution is Scriptural, but Unsectarian; and the boys are educated in the fear of God and in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures."

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 500 Boys now in the Homes. Over 1,000 have already been sent out into the world.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Congregational Collections, and Bequests are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN; or the Secretary, Protestant Children under Romish Influence.

"I can most confidently recommend the school recently opened in Lorrha Parish. I have reason to think it is very effectively worked, and believe it to be not only desirable, but essential for the best interests of the young people in the locality.—October 1, 1888. (Signed) WM. B. KILLALOE.

THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF KILLALOE, CLARISFORD, IRELAND.
T. B. STONEY, ESQ., J.P., PORTLAND PARK, TIPPERARY.
THE REV. H. J. KITCHIN, THE MANOR HOUSE, HAMPTON, MIDDLESEX.
C. B. STONEY, ESQ., COWBRIDGE HOUSE, MALMESBURY.
THE REV. G. WILLIAM SALL, THE RECTORY, LORRHA, ROSCREA, IRELAND.
Provincial Bank: PARSONSTOWN.

IN the Parish of Lorrha, situated at the head of beautiful Lough Dergh, there is a small and scattered Protestant congregation.

Since its despoliation they gladly support their church, but they are unable to provide a teacher for their children, who, consequently, have been obliged to attend the village school, under the patronage and influence of the Roman Catholic clergy and teachers.

Referring to this subject The Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette says:—"We speak from knowledge when we say that in these schools every boy and girl is encouraged to be a Missionary to win over our children to the Roman Catholic communion, and we do not hesitate to say that no Protestant child can attend these schools without imminent danger of being lost to the Church of Ireland"; and, we believe, of even more vital consequences.

Passing the whole of their school life under such pernicious influence, without even the corrective power of adequate Sunday-school instruction, for the distances are too great to allow of more than one such gathering on a Sunday, it is not surprising that formalism of the coldest type abounds, and that a dead Protestantism takes the place of a living Christianity.

Believing that the source of the evil is in the schoolroom, an earnest effort is being made to raise a fund to provide a Scriptural education for the children, and thus endeavour, in utter dependence upon the Spirit's promised power, to fan to brightness the flickering light of an otherwise dying Church.

A suitable building, school and residence, has most kindly been put at the Committee's disposal; but, as the National Board of Education will give no assistance, Eight Hundred Pounds must be raised before the school is established.

In response to our former appeals, two hundred and fifty pounds have been received, and most gratefully acknowledged. The amount is, of course, totally inadequate, but the cry of the children could not be set aside, and the Committee have provisionally guaranteed the teacher's salary, that the work might be commenced at once.

The school has been fitted up and supplied with every requisite, a mistress has been engaged, and the children gathered in, but we cannot sustain the effort unassisted, and we dare not stand aside and watch with folded hands the progress of the Kingdom of Evil.

We therefore most earnestly appeal to those whose children are enjoying the glorious privilege of Christian surroundings and Scriptural teaching, and whose hearts are tender towards the lambs of Christ's flock, to pity "these little ones," and to help us in our effort, that the work now begun may not fall to the ground, as it must if not thus supported.

We ask but a crumb—"a cup of cold water," and with the incentive of our Lord's wondrous identification—"Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these My brethren ye have done it unto Me"—we neither hesitate to ask, nor fear to obtain, your sympathy and help, even though the claims upon you are almost overwhelming.

The amount asked for will enable us so to endow the school, that with the help of local aid, we may obtain a good teacher, and D.V. have in perpetuity the means of training the young under the influence of a pure Gospel.

The money subscribed will be so invested that under no circumstances that the future may develop will it be available for any other purpose than that intended by the donors.

Donations will be gratefully acknowledged by any of the above who will furnish any information; or may be paid direct to the "Lorrha Protestant School Account," in the above bank.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

DEBILITY (GENERAL) WITH CHEST AFFECTION.

MISS S., a nurse in middle life, writing me from Oakham, made known her case to me about three and a half years since. She had lost relatives from Consumption, Asthma, and Bronchitis. She had suffered for years, and more especially from severe cold, through all the previous winter months, which had caused excessive weakness, feeble action of the heart, hot flushes, difficult breathing, and other symptoms, for which she had been dosed with Nitric Acid, Strychnia, and Bromides, as well as taken tonics of Iron and Quinine.

Having seen some notices of my treatment in the Christian Age, she applied to me.

She continued for some time with my medicine and other instructions given to her by me.

I had lost sight of her case till writing me recently from Scotland, she says:—"I should like your new work on Consumption, for a friend of mine. Since I received such great benefit from your treatment for the complaint that had troubled me for many years, I always keep your medicine by me, and recommend it to all my friends."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

AMONG THE

LOST WOMEN OF ST. GILES'.

We have been engaged for some weeks past in a special Rescue Work among Fallen Women: several midnight meetings have been held in different parts of St. Giles' with promising results, and we have secured admirable premises on exceptionally low terms for a Rescue Home and Night Shelter.

THE RESCUE HOME

is one of the large corner houses in the well-known Seven Dials, and within a step or two of the dens in which many of the women live. £550 will purchase the remainder of the lease, nearly thirteen years at a ground rent of £30.

THE WOMEN'S NIGHT SHELTER

is also a large corner building situate in the worst part of Drury Lane, and again within a stone's throw of a large colony of fallen women. It will give sleeping accommodation to a great number of applicants, and will be leased to us by the Mercers' Company very cheaply.

By special permission of the Chief Commissioner of Police, tickets will be placed in the hands of the constables on duty in the immediate neighbourhood through the night, and any really destitute woman found in the streets will be given an admission order. The cost of alterations and fitting up would be about £450, so that if £1000 can be raised at once, we can proceed with what is on our hearts, and we have been so distinctly guided in the matter that we doubt not that the money will soon be forthcoming.

Donations will be thankfully acknowledged, if sent to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C., or to yours sincerely,

GEORGE HATTON.
Superintendent St. Giles' Christian Mission.

4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mr. George C. Needham, Evangelist.

A friend in Glasgow writes to us as follows:—

> Your correspondent is right as regards Sundays in Glasgow, and the one described in last week's issue is a specimen of Sundays all the year round. Would that the same could be said of the Saturday evening, which is a sad contrast.

Many of our London readers will be glad to see, from the announcement elsewhere, that Dr. Adolph Saphir resumes his lectures on the Old Testament at Allen-street, Kensington, on Thursday next.

We are exceedingly obliged to a number of friends who have kindly sent us copies of the back numbers for 1887 which were asked for three weeks ago. We shall also be thankful to any who can supply us with copies of The Christian for November 30, 1888.

Considering the increased attention of late paid to Mohammedanism, the testimony of Canon Bell in his recent volume, "A Winter on the Nile," is not without interest. The result of his own observations, and of careful inquiry among competent authorities, is that "it has failed in Egypt, as elsewhere, to civilise or to elevate or purify the people": the facility of divorce and re-marriage, which can be exercised at the mere word and caprice of the husband, is such that "Islamism cannot foster purity or chastity." A false glamour is nowadays often thrown over Mohammedanism by picturing it as a half-Christian faith—an imperfect Christianity. In view of this the Canon well remarks:—

> With a professed respect for Christ as a prophet, it denies his oneness with the Father, and his equality with God, his atonement and mediation, and subordinates Him and his teachings to Mohammed and the Koran. And is not the Moslem faith so intolerant of Christianity that persecution and death are often the penalties that attend those who abandon Mohammed for Christ? Islam has no great ideals or high aspirations—has nothing to attract the noblest minds or to constrain them to dare all things, and to count all things but loss, if they can only reach the lofty standard which is proposed to their hope.

Canon Tristram, to whom we owe so much of our accurate knowledge of the Holy Land, found over the doorway, when he visited the Great Mosque in "the street that is called Straight" at Damascus, an inscription in Greek: "Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations." The building in early ages was a heathen temple, and afterwards the Christian cathedral. To-day the Moslem passes beneath the grand portals, and cannot but read the words carved in the stone above. Will not every one of our readers take them as Tristram did, "as a silent prophecy that the day is coming when this dark land shall be Christ's once more, and He shall reign for ever and ever," and join earnestly in the traveller's prayer, "Even so, come Lord Jesus"?

Pastor Archibald G. Brown's pamphlet, "The Devil's Mission of Amusement," is now ready, and may be obtained through any bookseller, price 1d.; 1s. per dozen, post free; 7s. per 100; £3 per 1000.

On another page will be found some intensely painful and humiliating accounts of the havoc wrought by the opium drug in China, from the pen of Archdeacon Wolfe, of the C.M.S. Still more ghastly in their horrible realism are the details that Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., has sent home. If the British nation, and especially the British legislature, is not roused to action by such statements as the following, surely it will be a sign that the Spirit of God has ceased to strive with the consciences of our people and our rulers:—

> I have been in East-end gin palaces on Saturday nights; I have seen men in various stages of delirium tremens; I have visited many idiot and lunatic asylums (writes Mr. Caine, M.P., from Lucknow), but I have never seen such horrible destruction of God's image in the face of man as I saw in the "Government" opium dens of Lucknow. To my dying day I shall carry the recollection of the face of a handsome young woman of eighteen or nineteen years, sprawling on the senseless bodies of men, her fine brown eyes flattened and dulled with coming stupor, and her lips drawn back from her glittering white teeth. Green hands could get drunk for a penny or less, but by degrees more and more opium is needed, and the callous keeper of this hideous den showed us men whom 180 drops of thick opium, mixed with tobacco, hardly sufficed to intoxicate. I came out staggering and faint with the poison-laden atmosphere...
> Again I went from room to room, and counted on the ground floor alone 117 human swine of both sexes. I was asked to go upstairs, where there were many more customers; I had had more than even my strong stomach could stand, but I was told that there would be probably fifty more. It was three in the afternoon when I visited these places, and I am told that after dark the attendance is doubled. In the city of Lucknow there are thirty distilleries of native spirits, 201 liquor shops, twenty-four opium shops, and ninety-two for bhang and other intoxicating drugs. An opium sot is the most hopeless of all drunkards; once he is well into the clutches of this fiend, everything gives way to his fierce promptings. He only works to get more money for opium. Wife, children, and home are all sacrificed to this horrible lust.
> The receipts of the Government of the North-West Province and Oude from opium, bhang, and other intoxicating drugs, is no less than £67,000, and is steadily on the increase. It will give your readers some idea of the way in which this horrible traffic in intoxicants is being stimulated, if I give the average revenue for the North-West Province and Oude from all intoxicants for the three years 1878-79-80, as compared with 1885-86-87. In the former case its yearly average was £284,000: in the latter it had run up to £546,000, showing a doubled consumption within seven years. Every day I spend in India brings fresh proof that the Government are stimulating the sale of intoxicants to the very verge of decency, for the sake of the cheaply collected and rapidly increasing revenue which it furnishes.

At a time when so much boasting is heard about "the well-established results of historical criticism," and when assertion is made to do duty for proof, it is well to be reminded that science is yet only in its infancy, and that Scripture is not to be limited by our ideas or interpreted by our ignorance. Bishop Ellicott, therefore, did well, in his recent annual pastoral address, to warn his clergy that "while it was their duty to set forth all that verified science or tested historical research may have contributed towards the better understanding of God's Word, it was not their duty to give any place to that motley assemblage of evanescent theories, unsupported conjectures, and unverified assertions, now put forward as established results of Biblical criticism." Do these destructive critics, it may be asked, who, in the name of "modern thought," contend (inter alia) that the early chapters of Genesis are a myth, who reject the Biblical story of the creation for the evolutionary theory of Darwin, or who affirm that Deuteronomy dates from the age of Jeremiah—ever reflect that they are thus practically claiming to know more on the subject than our Lord and his Apostles? "What saith the Lord?" is the point to which we must come at last.

A clergyman of the Church of England, and a member of the Protestant Alliance, writes from Canada:—

> The situation as regards the safety of our common Protestantism, the bases of our civil and religious liberty, is, I fear, much more serious than our people seem to realise, or are willing to admit. The crisis in Christendom to-day is a great struggle for Romish ascendency, carried out under various aliases and subterfuges. The man too blind to see this, or too cowardly to own it, will strive in vain to repress the rising storm. The fond delusion about the corporate reunion of Christendom is another mode of securing the ascendency of priestcraft. The prime movers do not want reunion with the Protestant churches of Christendom; only with the corrupt Greek and Latin churches, to give them a vantage ground for crushing all nonconformity. The invisible Church of Christ is one; the visible Church never was, and never will be, one. But the time has come when all true Protestants should stand shoulder to shoulder in opposing the progress of superstition and infidelity. Our Church has suffered much in this country through ritualistic innovations, which, consciously or unconsciously, play into the hands of Romanism and infidelity. Through this cause thousands have been driven from the Church of England. The great body of the people here have no sympathy with ritualism, but a few hair-brained ritualists from England can do a vast amount of mischief.

We agree with all the above except the assertion that the visible Church never was and never will be one. It certainly was one in Pentecostal days; if it never will again be one, how can the Lord's prayer be answered: "That they all may be one, as Thou Father art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me"? The world cannot see the unity of the invisible Church; and if the visible Church will never be one, how can the world be convinced by its oneness that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world?

The late Dr. Harris said in his admirable essay on "Christian Union":—What is urgently enforced in Scripture is that the union of Christians should be visible. For this our Saviour prayed; and prayed for it as a requisite to the conversion of the world. It is in vain to reply that his followers are now, and ever have been one, as members of that one body of which He is the glorified Head. This is known only to the Church in heaven; and understood only by the Church on earth; whereas the world must see it. Our Jerusalem, like that of old, must both be "builded as a city that is compact together," and be "set upon a hill." Evidences must be given to the senses of men, that not merely in profession, but in heart and object, we are one. The fact should be too plain to be misunderstood; and too palpable to remain a secret.

From recent numbers of The Friends' Review, Philadelphia, we learn that a new visitation of the Spirit of life is appearing in the American Societies. The wealth of Friends is, we are told, steadily increasing in the United States, and they are making an effort for the more systematic distribution of their books and standard writings. They are renewing their former zeal in the way of visitations, and for the reviving of languishing Societies. This movement will have the sympathy of faithful men. The testimony of Friends against the war spirit as contrary to Christianity, and concerning the spiritual nature of Christ's kingdom, is as needful now as ever it was.

Among the Methodists, also, there are evidences of a growing spiritual activity. In Leeds £20,000 is to be devoted to extension work. In chapel buildings and removal of debts, the Wesleyan Calendar tells of more than £400,000 raised during 1888. In Manchester the various bodies of Methodists have unitedly held a series of meetings, in order to strengthen the bond of brotherly love, and to stimulate the severed branches of that communion to their initial zeal, and to a oneness of testimony.

The machinery of the law seems to be on its trial just now, to a large extent, in India. The famous, or rather infamous, Patna case has opened our eyes to the possibility of justice being perverted in its very seat and centre. The proceedings of the Crawford Commission recently concluded also reveal an alarming condition of venality and corruption in places of judicial power. It appears that the Bombay Government had previously given a pledge of indemnity to those called on to give evidence. Now that some native magistrates have confessed their misdeeds in the witness-box, the public conscience is scandalised at the idea of their being permitted to resume magisterial functions. The Calcutta correspondent of The Times says:—

> Lord Reay is now impaled on the horns of a dilemma. He must apparently either falsify the Government's pledge, and so break faith with these magisterial witnesses, or else he must betray his duty to the public by prostituting the administration of justice. Unless he at once make up his mind to resign all thought of the latter immoral alternative, public action will be promptly taken in the matter.

Thanks to those "watch dogs of society," the daily and weekly press, it is now becoming increasingly difficult for the unprincipled holder of power to cover up and escape the consequences of his misdoings.

Ministers could hardly do a better service to the members of their congregation than by recommending the purchase of the two volumes of the Report of the ten days' Missionary Conference of last June (Nisbet & Co.). They can be obtained at a comparatively cheap rate, and contain the most mature utterances on almost every aspect of Protestant Missions. They embody, moreover, a vast amount of valuable and interesting information on the social condition of two-thirds of the human race. To those who know little of what the Christian Church is now attempting, and nothing of what is being done beyond their own denominational lines, the volumes would come as a new revelation of the ascended Lord's doings in the earth, and of the zeal, courage, and Apostolic witnessing He is inspiring in these latter days.

Lord Wolseley may be an authority on military matters, but his recent utterances in advocacy of a national "conscription" will not meet with the approval of a large, and we trust a growing, section of his fellow-countrymen. It is too much of a tax upon our common-sense to try and make us suppose that we cannot properly develope our physical manhood, or acquire the qualities of self-discipline and obedience, without also training ourselves in the murderous arts of war. On this question of a national conscription, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said some strong but timely things in his afternoon address at St. James's Hall last Sunday:—

> Napoleon had a good deal of truth on his side when he sneered at us as a "nation of shopkeepers." How much do we owe to Livingstone and Stanley, to philanthropists and missionaries! To prove that an unarmed nation is surer of peace than an armed nation, Mr. Hughes mentioned the State of Pennsylvania, which was founded in peace, and was unarmed for seventy long years. No blood was shed then, while the neighbouring armed States were plunged into war with the Indians. Pennsylvania might have continued in peace, but that the original founders were in time outnumbered. Emigrants are the men who found nations. Spain was a great military nation at the time England was a small one. And to-day we are in advance of France because we have a purer faith. France to-day is a specimen of a nation eaten up by military power. Ploughshares and pruning-hooks have made the British Empire, and the only danger is from such military longings as Lord Wolseley's.

The words of Dr. Hannay, who is now representing the English Congregationalists in Australia, generally deserve attention for their indications of keen and impartial observation. In Adelaide he has been interviewed by ministers, and among some prepared questions was one relating to the results in England of the "Moody and Sankey movement." Dr. Hannay expressed the view that while there were genuine conversions, the general effect was ecclesiastical unsettlement; that religious excitement and mediocrity were twin sisters; and that a revival system carried with it more evil than good. We cannot congratulate Dr. Hannay on this utterance. Not a few of the most generous and devoted servants of Christ in our time are men who have been born unto God in revivals. When pastors have stood by such evangelists as Mr. Moody, they have afterwards acknowledged that the pulse of spiritual life in their churches was powerfully quickened, and that these movements produced some of their best workers.

Some correspondents have addressed us with regard to Sir Arthur Blackwood's note commending Mr. Grattan Guinness' recent work "The Divine Programme of the World's History;" saying that they wished for it, but could not afford to possess it, and asking whether they could obtain it at a reduced price. Anyone wishing to do this should communicate direct with the Secretary, Harley House, Bow, London, E. We know that hundreds of missionaries and poor ministers have beeen supplied with copies gratuitously.

The Puritans and Ourselves.

Dear Editor,—Is not the following, by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. (from a letter in The Liverpool Daily Post), worthy of a place in your columns?

Reginald Radcliffe.

The Puritan period of England was its heroic age; that is, the period beginning with the reign of Elizabeth, and ending with the death of Cromwell. There were then a greater number of noble God-fearing patriots than in any other age of English history. Need I recall such names as Cromwell and Hampden, Pym and Elliott, Milton and Bunyan, Baxter and Howe, Blake and Ralcigh? Never was the public life of England permeated by so deep a sense of religion as in the time of the Commonwealth; never were the ideals of politicians more lofty and inspiring. Cromwell's addresses to Parliament read like sermons (see Carlyle's life), and the debates were marked by a tone of seriousness that has never been equalled since. The Long Parliament was the most patriotic and the most religious legislative assembly that ever sat in England, and to it we owe in great measure the inestimable blessing of civil and religious liberty.

Though Puritanism was temporarily crushed under the Restoration, its principles survived, and gave us the Revolution Settlement of 1688, and it was the parent of the Nonconformist and Liberal party for the next two centuries. It gave what was best and noblest to the American Commonwealth, and the pilgrim fathers, and the spiritual ancestors of the American churches of to-day. Yet I admit that we could not acquit the Puritans of intolerance; they had the defects of their virtues, and their zeal for God was not always tempered by charity.

Contrasting the Puritan period with the present, the dominating idea then was righteousness, whereas now it is liberty; and it is possible to push liberty into licence. Instance the abounding temptations to drunkenness and vice that exist in all our large towns, and the shocking demoralisation they produce. These evils are all defended on the ground of liberty, and it is almost impossible to get persons to deal with them owing to this excessive deference to that idea. The Puritan conception was a very different one: it was liberty to do right, not to do wrong; it was controlled by the everlasting law of righteousness. They differed from us in that they considered the State to be an organism for enforcing righteousness of life. Granted that this is impracticable, one may still long to see something of their reverence for God imported into our public life, instead of the increasing secularism that characterises politics.

One may point out how widely different are the conceptions of a Christian Commonwealth, as held by Cromwell and Milton, from that taught now by the Secularists of England, as typified by the members for Northampton. It cannot be denied that the aim of the Secularist party in this country is to assimilate our Constitution to that of the French Republic, which is purely atheistic, so far as its public acts and utterances are concerned. Instance its enactments forbidding any allusion to the existence of God in the public schools of the country.

The fathers of English Nonconformity, and the founders of English and American liberties, had very different notions as to the true functions of a Christian State.

They were as far removed from the principles of the Secularist politicians of this day as they were from those of Charles I. and Laud; and time will show who was right. Certainly, no successful experiment has ever yet been witnessed in the world's history of a State that ignored the existence and the authority of the Supreme Legislator. The French Republic is tottering to its fall, because it has flouted and ignored the religious element in human nature; the American Republic has lasted because it has not done so; and our country will do well in the future to follow American rather than French precedents in the matter of acknowledging the authority of the Most High.

Points for Preachers.

THE MARTYR SPIRIT.

SEE that young girl, in the days of Diocletian, beautiful and richly dressed, standing before the altar, with the judge on the one side, her lover on the other, her companions grouped around. If she will but throw a few grains of incense on the brazier she shall be spared from cruel death and given back to love and friends and life. But not a grain is cast upon the expectant flames, and she is ruthlessly led off to die for Him whom she loves better than all. Was she not consistent? Would you not have done the same? Then do the same now, and dare to be true to your lover, Christ.—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

LIFTING POWER.

I remember a vessel sinking in the Clyde. Pontoons were brought down from Glasgow, and at low water fastened hard and close to the ship. It was over-girded and under-girded, and I don't know what, to make it one with the pontoons. When man had done everything he could, we all stood back and waited till God did his part. The tide began to rise. Would these pontoons lift that helpless wreck with them, or the wreck hold them down beneath the tide that must rise? There was a moment like that here. Peter and John made themselves one with the lame man, like the pontoons. Then they cried to God, and waited for the tide, and it came, glorious, full, uplifting. We need this great heart that loves a drunken man and a worse woman; that will take off its fine gloves and lift them. If that has gone out of us, God help us.—Rev. John McNeill.

SYMPATHY IN CIRCUMSTANCES.

Christ makes Himself one with us, not only in nature but in circumstances. None can be so close to us as Jesus Christ, because none has had the same experience. I used to notice in hospitals, years ago, how the people who had the same complaint, and were under the same treatment, had a wonderful way of finding each other out. They might not have known of each other's existence before, but somehow a strange affinity brought them into contact. They suffered from the same complaint, and what sympathy there was! Everything else was forgotten because of the oneness in their sufferings. Oh, think how thy Lord can be one with each of us in all the circumstances of our life. Do difficulties press upon thee? He understands it, and He saith: "I can help thee here. I know what are the aches and pains and wearinesses of life." Oh, look to Him then in all the circumstances of thy life, and thine eye can scarcely fail to see Him.—Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.,

Author of "From Death into Life: An Autobiography."

XXXVI.—THE ANGRY MAN.

I HAD been speaking one day upon the power of God to subdue the unruly wills and sinful tendencies of believers. I said that too often people have compassion upon the slaves o drink, temper, or any other besetment, without having regard to their sin against God. Too often they try to deliver a drunkard from his bad habit, and if they succeed in this effort they think everything is done. But what about the drunkard's sin against God? Is not this like covering up past sins with successful reformation? Supposing a man succeeds in getting the better of a besetment with which he has been habitually sinning before God, is that enough? Does he need nothing in the way of pardon as well as deliverance?

At the close of my address an elderly clergyman came forward, and said, "I thank you for your discourse. Let me tell you something which you may use another time as

AN ILLUSTRATION.

"I inherited a dreadful temper. As a child I was often punished for it, as a boy at school even more severely so, and at college I was shamed again and again for my passionate outbursts. At my conversion I thought to myself, Now my temper is subdued; and so it was for a time. I was very happy, and rejoiced, not only about the salvation of my soul, but, as I supposed, for deliverance from my great enemy. But, alas! soon after this my temper reappeared in full force, and I found out that though my sins were pardoned, yet the long-desired deliverance had not come.

"After my ordination, I grieve to say, I was betrayed into many improprieties of violent temper, for which I had to apologise, and sometimes make amends.

"Oh, how earnestly I prayed God to help me to overcome this infirmity, and how often I made resolutions; but all was in vain. Sometimes I had power over my weakness, and rejoiced in being able to control myself under provocation; but I cannot say that I was ever satisfied, or that I was sure I should succeed another time.

"'How was this?' you ask. It was because I felt that my temper was still there, boiling within. It was not dead or gone, but only kept under for the time. I continued in prayer, and with many watchful efforts I tried to keep down my enemy.

"One day after a great fall I was most dejected. I made supplication with tears, and besought God to help me in my trouble. On that occasion I expected that victory was sure, and that I should have power given me to overcome. I must say that I left my room that morning feeling hopeful.

"As I neared the foot of the stairs, I saw a sturdy beggar man standing and looking in through the glass panel of the door. He appeared strong and able enough for work, instead of begging; but he may have been a thief looking in to spy out the land. Our eyes met, whereupon I beckoned him to be gone. As he did not move, I shook my head, as if to say, 'I have nothing for you.' The impudent fellow shook his head, too, as much as to say, 'I will not go.' In a moment my blood was up, and I was boiling with rage. I opened the door, and commanded the man to go away instantly.

"The beggar quietly put his foot inside, so that I could not shut the door again. He looked at me in the coolest manner, saying, 'Are you a minister of religion, and send away a poor starving man from your door like that?' I could not find words to express my indignation, for the man did not look or speak as if he was in a starving condition at all. He stood before me with a provoking insolence which was very irritating. Seeing my anger, he remained cool, and said in a whining tone, 'I've not had a taste of victuals or a morsel to eat!'

"I was deaf to his complaint, for I did not believe a word of it. I therefore told him again to go away.

"'You had much better give me a trifle,' was his reply, 'and let me go, than get into that towering passion. You a parson, and with such a temper as that!'

"Immediately I put my hand into my pocket, and took out the first coin that came—I think it was a shilling—and gave it to the man, saying, 'There, go away with you!'

"'Thank you, thank you,' said the provoking beggar, and went away shrugging his shoulders, as if he had done a good stroke of business.

"So he had, even better than he thought. I could have burst into tears with vexation at my weakness and that impudent man's triumph. Shutting the door, I returned to my study in despair. Kneeling down, I said: 'O Lord, is there no deliverance for me? Forgive my sin, I beseech Thee, and do deliver me from this temper. I cannot do anything to conquer it. Lord, do Thou save me.'

"When I once let myself go into God's hands, such a calm thankfulness stole over me. The Lord was present in the power of his love, and it seemed as though He pitied me in my distress. Hot tears flowed from my eyes, and I could do nothing but sob. I felt that my prayer was answered, and my deliverance had come. With grateful love I thanked God, and rose up from my knees.

"All that afternoon, I felt as if I had been actually in the Divine presence, and that the Lord had spoken to me. From that day to this, nearly three years, I have had many and often very great provocations; but, thank God, I have not been overcome by them. I cannot tell you what has become of my temper—the Lord has taken it away."

"Praise Him," I said; "that is just like his way of deliverance."

"Yes, indeed, I do," said my friend; "and I thank you too. I have learned from your words how the deliverance came to me. I see now that Christ, the risen Lord Himself, was there that afternoon—it was his power alone that released me. I see also why He did not do it before. I never asked Him to forgive my sins, nor did I know of his power to deliver me from my temper. I only asked that He would help me to conquer it myself. How blind I was, not to see that the Lord must do it, and He alone—that we must stand aside, and see the glory of God."

The dear man said, "I feel as if I was going over the ground again. The Lord is here showing Himself to me."

The more I observed this gentleman afterwards, the more confirmed I was of the reality of his story. If he had been an irritable and passionate man before, beyond all doubt he was now most loving and patient—full of compassion for others; his forbearance and gentleness were so striking that it seemed impossible he could ever have been otherwise.

"Oh, the years of misery and trial I have passed through," he said, "all because I did not know that the Lord was able and willing to give me a complete deliverance!"

Yes, indeed it is so. What multitudes of persons exercise themselves and labour hard to overcome that which cannot be conquered by self. It is the Lord's work. Salvation, in every sense of the word, belongs to Him, and to Him only.

The White Cross Society.—The attention of the White Cross Society having been drawn to the sale of immoral literature in Liverpool, one thousand papers have been sent for gratuitous distribution in the warehouses of that city. This is an instalment of a very much wider work which will shortly be attempted. Help towards the extension of the Society's operations should be remitted to Rev. G. S. S. Vidal, Museum-close Oxford.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

X.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

THEIR DEPORTMENT.

WE have seen the Lord Jesus bringing his disciples into those same conditions of life and service in which He, their and our prototype in all things, came and worked; those conditions which largely obtained in the lives of the prophets of old, and which must ever characterise those who stand as the representatives to men of God's eternal verities. In every realm of human activity that which is most appropriate to it directs its energies. Among the Governments of earth, power rules and fixes the place of each in the scale of the nations. In science, human wisdom prevails. In commercial circles, mammon bears sway. So, too, the spiritual realm has its appropriate power—the Holy Spirit.

It was a deep-laid necessity that the Lord Jesus should separate his disciples from all human resources and expectations. Faith must now dominate them. Disinterestedness must dictate their actions. They were furnished with spiritual weapons and appliances from the armoury of heaven for their spiritual and heavenly task. Being thus equipped with that which was appropriate to their high errand, THE LORD PROCEEDED TO GIVE THEM EXACT INSTRUCTIONS AS TO HOW THEY WERE TO BEAR THEMSELVES IN THE VARIED AND TRYING CIRCUMSTANCES THAT AWAITED THEM. These details we will now review. THEY WERE TO GO BY TWO AND TWO, not alone, that one might strengthen and second the other.

THEY WERE NOT PERMANENTLY TO LOCATE, BUT TO MOVE FROM PLACE TO PLACE. Shepherds to remain with the flocks God would raise up from among them; but they were ever to press on to yet untrodden fields. These heroic souls afterwards did so; planting the Gospel from India to Britain. How unfortunate and mistaken, if they had settled themselves comfortably somewhere upon the borders of civilisation!

Upon entering a city or town they were TO INQUIRE WHO IN IT WAS WORTHY. As they entered the house they were to salute it. Here they were to remain so long as they were welcome, or until their ministry there was completed. They were not to visit from house to house. They were not, like mendicants, to beg their bread. They were Heaven's messengers on the high embassy of peace, and were therefore to ascertain who was most esteemed for real worth among his fellows, and that one they were to honour with their presence. They were not to seek after the rich, the great, the wise, or the famous, but those characterised by practical worth. Like Abraham's servant in the house of Laban, they were to be far more intent on their heavenly errand than upon satisfying the cravings of nature. Yet what was set before them they were to eat.

It is intimated that THEIR STEPS WERE PRECEDED BY AN INVISIBLE MESSENGER, "THE SON OF PEACE." This was none other than the Lord Himself, who then, by this spiritual power, and now, by the Holy Ghost, precedes and accompanies all who venture forth in his name. It was the bright shadow, the sure prophecy, of the approaching promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age," which was to assure their hearts as they started upon that world-wide conquest for which they were now in training. In accord with this, the curtain falls upon the busy scenes of the Gospel of Mark with the disciples going forth and preaching everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the word with signs following.

In this mysterious "Messenger of the Covenant" who foreran them, lay the secret of their protection, their reception, their power in word and deed. It is so with those who now go out into new regions to spread the name of Jesus. But let them see that they miss not the spirit, or even the letter, of those details. To human policy and worldly reasoning they present a dark labyrinth of impossible and confusing intricacy. But it is faith's highway. Herein they have what will stand them instead of assured support, elaborate outfits, human appliances, safeguards, and modes of procedure, which encumber the modern successor of these primitive Apostles. Happy men! From how much care and strife, and questionings, and misdirected energy, they were cut off! With every weight laid aside, they, with swift and unimpeded step, pressed toward the goal of their single aim. Has this heavenly type of missionary indeed passed from the earth beyond recall?

THERE IS DIVINE WISDOM IN THE DIRECTION TO WEND THEIR STEPS TO THOSE WHO WERE "WORTHY." These are none other than the ones who possess the soil of "an honest and good heart," prepared by the Spirit to "hear the word, and understand it, and keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." Such was the centurion in the Gospel story. The elders of the Jews reported him to Jesus as one who was "worthy." This appeared in his profound humility, and in his great faith, at which Christ marvelled. Another of these "worthy" ones was Cornelius, also a centurion, to whom Peter directed his way, being preceded by this same "Son of Peace," who had prepared Cornelius to receive both the messenger and the message.

It is among the frank and honest hearted, the "worthy," those in whom the Spirit of God has perhaps from their birth been preparing the soil of "an honest and good heart," that the Gospel most readily takes root. A certain ingenuousness and nobility of character is discernible even in many who have been rescued from gross sin. Although none may limit the grace of God, yet how exceptional is it that men of base, knavish, sinister, and dishonest character are won to God. The same principle is seen in nations. Among the honest Scandinavians, and sturdy open-hearted Anglo-Saxons, what speed the Gospel has made. On the contrary, how small have been its triumphs among those nations of Europe who are chiefly marked by craft and cunning, by crookedness and deceit. Abroad, it passed by the arrogant Burmese to bless the childlike Karens, and found its way to the far-distant simple-minded islanders of the South Seas, while the wily North American Indian was unreached by that salvation that bore fruit under his very eye!

In every nation, yea, in nearly every town and village, to which the Spirit-directed messenger of the Cross comes, going in obedience to these instructions, he will yet find a gleaning of "worthy" ones, ready for the word of the kingdom, and willing to become, in their turn, light-holders for their region, and many of them pastors of the little flocks that will hear the voice of the Good Shepherd. It is these for whom the faithful missionary will inquire. From them he will receive audience for his message, and shelter and food for his natural wants.

But THEY MAY COME TO SOME WHO WILL NOT RECEIVE THEM. Here their directions are explicit. They are to shake off the dust of their feet, as a testimony against them, as we find Paul and Barnabas did at Antioch in Pisidia. Upon such, an awful woe was pronounced. Their visitors were the accredited envoys of high Heaven. To receive them was to receive the Lord Himself and Him that sent Him. To despise them was to despise the Lord Himself and Him that sent Him. Such were "nigh unto cursing, whose end was to be burned."

What mighty issues waited on the steps of these despised men, stripped of all that the world values; more dependent upon God than the young lion in the thicket. Yet they were a sweet savour to God in them that were saved, and in them that perish. They were vessels bound to every town on every seaboard where an anchorage could be secured, all invisibly carrying, not only the precious freightage of eternal life and physical healing in their holds, but bearing hidden wrath as well, which, if occasion required, could frown from their ports. Alas! how the glory of all this high dignity that once sat on Christ's heralds has faded from them. In its place we see in dull monotony the weak manœuvrings and worldly commonplaces of modern Gospel warfare.

There were SUNDRY OTHER DIRECTIONS. They were forewarned that they would be brought before governors and kings. They might not be astonished if they found themselves delivered up to death by parents, or children, or brothers. When hated by all men, they must endure. When persecuted, they must flee. When brought before rulers, they need not be anxious or abashed. In that same hour words would be given them to speak. Not a ripple of fear was to disturb the serene peace of their souls. No surprise need overtake them in view of these gloomy prospects. It was enough for the disciple to be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord.

Such was the unearthly tone of these instructions to the first missionaries. They are as binding to-day as then. The deep wisdom of God is in them. The Church has departed far from them, but it is her wisdom again to accept and obey them. Yea, it is her only hope of success—the only hope of salvation, in large measure, to the nations.

A MISSIONARY.

London Lodging-Houses.

BY GEORGE HOLLAND.

THE condition of the inmates of the lodging-houses in Whitechapel was the subject of an address delivered by Mr. George Holland on Tuesday afternoon, last week, in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, W. The story was an inexpressibly sad one, and listened to with deep attention by an audience which included the Duchess of Teck, who is well known to take a lively interest in such subjects.

In the course of his address Mr. HOLLAND said: There are about forty thousand persons inmates of common lodging-houses in London. The charge made to them is fourpence a night, for bed and use of kitchen with its fire and cooking utensils. Besides this class of accommodation, there is that afforded by the furnished rooms, for which tenpence or a shilling a night is charged, with an advantage if a week's rent is paid in advance. Poor families are glad of these places, the dirty furniture of which is, however, only fit to be burned. The sheets in the bedroom are marked, "Stolen from," and then the name of the owner of the house; or, "Stop thief," and so forth. The proprietors seem to prosper well, for they are able early to retire into private comfort.

The common lodging-houses of to-day are a great improvement upon those of forty years ago, but there is still great room for improvement. If such institutions as the Victoria Home in Commercial-street were multiplied, the condition of the poor would be further improved, for those who keep the lodging-houses would either have to make them more comfortable, or close them altogether. At the Victoria Home everything is clean and cheap, and a man may have a bed for fourpence, and easily secure a day's food for another similar sum. Moreover, ladies and gentlemen visit the place, and greatly encourage and cheer the inmates. No wonder that the House is inadequate to providing for all who would like to enter it.

In some common lodging-houses men and women are received as inmates. Some of the women I knew myself, thirty or forty years ago, as beautiful girls. I have sometimes asked myself whether they are possessed by the devil, that they should be so low, so coarse, so repulsive. The evil one certainly rules them with a rod of iron, leading them from vice to vice, from profligacy to profligacy. There are seventeen thousand of these to be found in our common lodging-houses, and in the wilderness into which they have been driven, they seem to be away from all good influences, and leading lives of great misery. The men who live in the lodging-houses are the casual labourers at the docks, costers, boys who sell papers, idlers, hangers-on, and the lowest class of thieves. Among these the victims of drunkenness are numberless. There are a few honest, decent people among them, who, from long-standing habit and family ties, cannot make up their minds to leave their old surroundings, but all have to put up with many discomforts. Many of the lodgers are very sympathetic, and not a few are, by the grace and mercy of God, followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. Indeed, some gladly carry the good news of salvation o others.

In some houses libraries have been opened, the proprietors having set apart a room for those who wish to read. For thirty-five years we have been permitted to hold meetings among the inmates. We go in bands of five or six, and have audiences ranging from thirty to 200, and occasionally more. We are generally very welcome; indeed, if we do not go, inquiry is soon made as to the reason why. Should anyone attempt to disturb the proceedings, the audience soon secures his removal. The meetings are held in the kitchen, while cooking and other operations are progressing. In unfavourable weather, when work cannot be got, we have to help to feed these poor people. We often find them very generous; the man who has money will say, "Give the food to that man who wants it; I may be glad of help another time, but do not want it now." Many of the casual labourers are incapacitated from sustained work. They get permanently injured at the docks, and the mortality among them is very great. Many have sustained fatal injuries, and drowning cases are numerous.

The competition for labour at the dock gates is sadly keen, and the disappointment of those who cannot secure it is very acute. Foolish young men of good family associations are sometimes found in these haunts, and mission workers are instrumental in smoothing their way back to the parental roof. In conclusion, Mr. Holland spoke of the many encouragements of his work among the lodging-house population of Whitechapel. A lady has been doing much to raise the door-step people. Large numbers of the poor and helpless are desirous of improved surroundings, but they want someone to assist them upward. Ladies wishful to work among the poor women need fear no harm coming to them while so engaged, for the women themselves will honour and protect them; and God will surely bless, as he has blessed, such efforts put forth in his name.

Lord RADSTOCK emphasised the need for many more workers in this field. He expressed his conviction that there is more real heathenism in London than in India; many have got down lower than the brutes, and thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands, are growing up in savagery, sin, and corruption. What is being done is quite inadequate to meeting the evil; therefore every person who bears the name of Christ should realise his individual responsibility to act as Christ would act if He were still going about among the people. With this wholesome advice the meeting was brought to a close.

MORLEY HALLS.—An excellent description of the work carried on at the headquarters of the Y.W.C.A. appears in the February number of The Girl's Own Paper, from the pen of Miss Annie Beale.

A LOVE-SONG OF THE REDEEMED.

BY REV. V. J. CHARLESWORTH.

As God is love—then love is all,
The primal fount of being:
We are, because He willed to love—
All-knowing and all-seeing.

Unquenched by floods of human hate,
The love of God abideth;
We shall be, for He lives to love,
And love all good provideth.

By Bethlehem and Calvary,
Love wrought our full redemption;
And from the guilt and curse of sin,
Demands our blest exemption.

Our hearts by love are overcome,
And conquered sin's resistance;
Constrained by love, to God we live,
And glory in existence.

To worship Him, to whom we owe
Our life and our salvation,
Is love's response to love revealed,
And heaven's anticipation.

When love exults, then joy abounds;
And peace when love reposes;
Love's quickened vision hope inspires;
Love strews our path with roses.

If sorrow, like a stormy sea,
Earth's hope or joy is drowning,
Love sings, and so defies despair,
Till dawns its day of crowning.

. . . . .

Through nature's vast and varied realm
All beauty is love smiling,
And quickened souls, rejoicing, own
Its influence beguiling.

When music lends itself to praise,
Love's own sweet voice is singing;
And souls that love rise like the lark
With song to heaven upspringing.

When love to self-communion turns,
Its altar-flames are glowing,
And, finding voice, it breathes a psalm
In numbers richly flowing.

Benevolence is love's resolve—
Its deed a benefaction;
Love finds its wealth in sacrifice,
Its goal of ease in action.

For perfect love, the ransomed soul
Must strive with strong endeavour; [won,
The crown, though long pursued, when
Resplendent shines for ever!

A SAILORS' PRAYER-MEETING. — Three months ago a noon prayer-meeting was begun for seamen in the Sailors' Institute, Mercer-street, Shadwell. The first day there were three present, and one of the three went out. Now we have almost every day men coming considerable distances to be with us at noon. We have more than once had to take in extra seats, and the time is all too short for those who would take part.

THE ANCHORAGE OF THE SOUL.

HEBREWS vi.

THE PROMISES OF GOD! That is a key-word here. Inherit the promises (12); God made promise (13); he obtained the promise (15); the heirs of promise (17). But perhaps the reiteration of the word does not awaken the interest or stir the heart of those who read it. We are so familiar with it; and, above all, we are not in circumstances which make the Divine promises specially precious. The night of sorrow must obscure our sky, or we can never descry or appreciate the stars of promise that sparkle as gems in the firmament of Scripture. Those who are rich and increased in goods and have need of nothing cannot realise what the promises of God really mean.

Possessed of a good income, guaranteeing the supply of every need, it is of little moment that God has pledged Himself to provide all needful things for those who seek his kingdom first. Environed by troops of faithful friends, like so many successive lines of defence, entrenched in the strong fortress of position and rank, there is less interest in the assurance that God will be the shield and buckler, the munition of rocks, the refuge from the storm for his saints. But when riches dwindle, and friends fail, and health declines, and difficulty, persecution, and trial threaten, then the soul betakes itself to the promises of God, and cons them over, studying them by the hour together, until it wakes up to find mines of treasure under pages which were blank as the moorlands beneath which coal beds lie. It would be well for some of us if God would strip us of all those things in which we place such confidence, so that we might be compelled, perhaps for the first time in our lives, to seek in Himself all that we are now wont to seek in his gifts. Oh, blessed loss which should teach us our true wealth! Oh, happy deprivation, which should reveal our inexhaustible resources! Oh, loving discipline, which should break the cisterns that hold the brackish rain water, and compel us to betake ourselves to the river of God, which proceeds from the throne of the Lamb!

The lax and cursory manner in which we read pages begemmed with Divine promise is largely due to the fact that we have never been put into such straits of sorrow and privation as to appreciate their value. One crushing trial would open up whole tracts of promise, which are now like the shut doors of a corridor in a royal palace. This is one reason why such a man as the Christian hero Gordon would spend such hours over the Word of God, counting up his Father's promises, holding them up as jewels in the sunshine, and rejoicing over them as great spoil; such men as he have had little else; they have had no other resources to fall back upon; they were driven to lay hold on them for very existence. And thus they fulfilled the enigma of the Apostle, "Having nothing, yet possessing all things." Those who are conscious of their poverty are they who become rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom.

It was in precisely such a condition that the Hebrews here addressed were found. Their goods had been spoiled; they had endured a great fight of affliction; they had been made a gazing stock both by reproaches and afflictions; all on which men are accustomed to rely had been swept from them, and therefore the Holy Ghost, in these pages, directs their minds to the exceeding great and precious promises, in which God pledged Himself to supply all their need, and to furnish from his own treasuries all, and more than all, that they had lost, not giving them these things in visible possession, but supplying them as they were needed, and in proportion to their faith. It was surely a good exchange to lose all, and to recover all in God.

THESE PROMISES ARE RELIABLE.—A good man's word is his bond. And when such a one has given a promise our anxiety is allayed, our fears are quieted, we have strong consolation. But, if, in addition to the promise, our friend has solemnly bound himself by an oath, calling heaven and earth to witness, and God to ratify, the asseveration is so momentous, the appeal so awful, the impression made on the mind so deep, that, whatever happens, the soul shelters itself in the immutability of his decision. It is doubly impossible for him to change or deceive. And this is the bond by which God has bound Himself.

When dealing with Abraham, God gave him repeated promises—first of the land, then of the seed, also of the blessing which should accrue to all generations of men through him. On one occasion He went through the form of covenant-making in vogue among the surrounding peoples (Gen. xv. 17). But, on Mount Moriah, when the faithful patriarch had given the one stupendous evidence of faith and obedience, even unto death, God sware, and "because He could sware by no greater, He sware by Himself." "By Myself have I sworn," saith the Lord (Gen. xxii. 16).

And so it is with us. We who by faith are the spiritual seed of Abraham are blessed with him. "The promise is sure to all the seed, not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all" (Rom. iv. 16). All the promises of God are Yea and Amen. He is not a man that He should lie, nor the son of man that He should repent. He has well calculated his resources, before He has pledged Himself, and when once He has done so it is impossible that He should fail. Fall flat on the Divine promises; cling to them as a shipwrecked sailor to the floating spar; venture all on them; their fulfilment is guaranteed by covenant and oath; by blood and agony and death; by the light of the resurrection morning, and the glory of the ascension mount; by the experience of myriads, who have never found them fail. If any man living has found one promise untrustworthy, let him publish it to the world, and the heavens will clothe themselves in sackcloth, the sun and moon and stars will reel from their seats, the universe will rock, and a hollow wind will moan through creation, bearing the tidings that God is mutable, that God can lie. And that voice will be the herald of universal dissolution. But it can never, never be. Heirs of promise! God's power is eternal, his counsel is immutable. Heaven and earth may pass away, but his words shall never pass away, ye therefore may have strong consolation; though ye lose all else your heritage in the word and oath of God shall be unimpaired, world without end.

SUCH PROMISES, THUS ASSURED, MAKE AN ANCHORAGE FOR THE SOUL.—Few things are more important for the mariner than to secure a good anchorage ground, where the soil will not give before the weight of the vessel, and the strain of the storm. And with all those inclinations towards drifting which we have already considered, we urgently need to discover something permanent, unchanging, and satisfying, with which we may grapple by the anchor of our hope.

The faculty of hope in a Christian is not different to that of a worldly man. It is the same quality or faculty in each. But there is a vast difference in the ground in which the anchor is fixed. In the case of the worldly man, it is the loose, light, unreliable soil of peradventures and speculations. In the case of the Christian, it is the unyielding, immutable promise and oath of the Eternal God. Therefore the former is often darkened with misgiving and fear; while the latter cries, without a shadow of doubt, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded."

Hope is something more than faith.—Faith accepts and credits testimony; hope anticipates. Faith says the fruit is good; hope picks and eats. Faith is bud; hope blossom. Faith presents the cheque; hope lays out the amount received. And such hope is the anchor of the soul. The comparison between hope and an anchor is familiar even to heathen writers, and it is easy to see how fit it is. It steadies the soul. Take an illustration from common life: A young man pledges his troth to a poor but noble girl. He is draughted for foreign service, and says farewell for long years. Meanwhile she is left to do as well as she can to maintain herself. Work is scanty, wages low, she is sometimes severely tempted and tried. But, amidst all, she is kept true to her absent lover, and to her nobler self, by the little strand of hope which links her to a happy and united future. So, when suffering, or tempted, or discouraged, our hope goes forward into the blessed future, depicted on the page of Scripture in glowing colours, and promised by the word of Him who cannot lie; and the anticipation of it fills the soul with courage and patience, so as to endure the trials of time, in view of the certain blessedness of eternity.

THIS ANCHORAGE HAS A THREEFOLD VALUE.—It is sure, there is no fear of it failing; sure as the sure mercies of David; sure as the everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure; sure as God can make it. It is steadfast, its influence on the soul is to keep it steady: "Steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." It entereth into that within the veil. In the ancient world, when there was not water enough to float a ship into the harbour, a man would carry the anchor over the shoals, and fix it in the calm waters of the inner basin. In some such way as this, our Lord Jesus, when like the high priest in the Jewish Tabernacle He passed through the blue veil that hides the celestial world from ours, took our hope with Him, and holds it there. The Lord Jesus is our hope (1 Tim. i. 1, also 1 John iii. 3). He is our forerunner. He has preceded us into his Father's presence, the firstfruits of them that slept. He has gone thither as our Representative and Priest. When He majestically passed from the sight of his disciples, and was hidden from the eyes that longingly followed Him, He entered within the veil. There He ever liveth, and because of it our hopes follow Him, centre in Him, and connect us already with that bright home of which He is the radiant centre.

THERE ARE CERTAIN QUALITIES WHICH WE HAVE GOT TO EXERCISE.—Faith and patience can alone inherit the promises (12). Abraham had patiently to endure before he received the promise (15). It is not easy to wait, or to let patience have her perfect work. And it is only possible to faith. There is no sublimer instance of long waiting than the history of Abraham, for which his faith nerved him, and the promise was literally fulfilled. And so shall it be again. Patience! weary, eager hearts. The time shall come when you shall lay hands on your capital; but be content in the meanwhile to enjoy the interest. The auspicious moment hastens when you shall know and taste all the blessedness of Paradise regained, but feast in the interim on the grapes of Eshcol, the pomegranates and other produce of the land. Claim the patience of Christ, of which the last of the Apostles, who had need of it to sustain him in the long delay, so sweetly speaks (Rev. i. 9). "Be ye patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth night." "Let us run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus." Thus shall we manifest "the patience of the saints," and thus shall we, like those who have preceded us, finally inherit the promises.

A STORY OF BIBLE WORK.

In a letter received lately from an evangelist in Messina, by Mrs. Robertson, of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures (Chesils, Christ Church-road, Hampstead, N.W.), the following very interesting narrative occurs:—

"Some time ago a coastguard, who had been evangelised by us, was presented with a copy of the Bible. The reading of that blessed Book brought him to the feet of the Saviour. This man used to read the Bible to his comrades, who in turn would apply to us for some copies of the New Testament. Some time after, he being removed to another station and promoted to a higher rank, a quarrel took place among his subordinates which he could not quell. In consequence of some mistake he was charged with breach of military discipline, and was sent here to Messina, to the military prison, to await his trial.

"While in prison he sent for us, to receive the comforts of religion, to hear the word, and to join in prayer. Having obtained a special permission from the general commanding the Messina division for this object, we were allowed to enter the citadel twice a week, and to take with us such books as we liked for distribution among the prisoners. To our great comfort we found that our Christian brother had evangelised his fellow-prisoners, and that his time in prison was spent in reading the Bible aloud to his fellow military prisoners, and in singing our beautiful evangelical hymns. To our great joy they all joined in our worship held in the prison-room, at the end of which service we had earnest requests from those present to be supplied with New Testaments.

"At the end of a service the following Sunday we were literally besieged by inquirers anxious for their souls, and we could perceive the Holy Spirit's work in all this. The soldiers, as we came out, kept requesting us for copies of the New Testament, which we freely distributed among them. This lasted all the time that our friend was in prison (about one month and a half), and we were permitted to enter the citadel. Several were brought to the Saviour during that time—amongst others, two officers."

ON THE BLACKDOWN HILLS.

"BY the good hand of our God upon us" we have been brought forward on our journey hitherto, and have entered the new year. The past twelve months have been to us a season of severe testing of faith and patience, but we have been enabled to learn lessons of our heavenly Father's love and faithfulness. While praising Him, we thank our many friends for all their help in sympathy and prayer on our behalf.

It has been our joy to see the Gospel of God's grace win stubborn hearts to Christ. Several cases of deep interest have lately come under our notice, showing that the Gospel is still "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." I give one instance as typical of many others.

"FEELING IS NOT FAITH."

I was returning from a short journey, and, entering into conversation with a young lady travelling with me, at length I said, "A real Christian never regrets yielding Himself to Christ, do you think so?" "I cannot say," she replied; "I have no experience of such matters." "Then, may I be allowed to somewhat change the question, and ask, If you were a real Christian, do you think you would regret being so?" For a moment she paused, and, as the tears filled her eyes, she said, "No, I should never regret it, if I were a real Christian, but I am not. I wish I were. I want reality, and nothing else; but I am afraid it is not for me." "Why afraid?" I asked. "Because I have tried my very utmost, but to no purpose. I have prayed and agonised for salvation. I have attended mission services on purpose to find peace, and have frequently entered the inquiry-room with friends; but all to no good. They have been converted, and tell me how happy they are, and I believe it; but I can't feel happy. I always come away more miserable than before. I sometimes think I am too great a sinner to be saved, and that is why God won't hear me. I am as miserable as a person can be, and have been so for more than twelve months."

"You say you have tried your best, and prayed and agonised, and yet cannot feel happy?" "No, I cannot," she persisted; "I suppose I am not earnest enough. If I were more real, perhaps I should be happy; shouldn't I?" "Well, really," said I, "I cannot see how being earnest and real would make you feel happy any more than being hungry and thirsty would make a person feel satisfied. But I think I see your mistake, and perhaps God may show it to you and put you right." "Oh, I hope so," she earnestly replied; "but where is my mistake?" Without at once replying to her question, I asked her if she remembered the story of the brazen serpent. "Oh, yes, perfectly." "Then you will remember that when Moses put it on the pole, all who were very earnest in their effort and prayers were healed, were they not?" "Oh, no, it had nothing to do with their earnestness at all; they had to look." "But it was when they understood how very bad they were, and were quite satisfied they were real and earnest enough that they felt healed, and were happy, was it not?"

The light was dawning. Her countenance brightened, as she said, "Oh, I see where my mistake has been. I have been looking at myself all this time and not at Jesus." After some further conversation she said, "I see it, I see it! It is as clear as noonday. I must depend, not on myself, but on what Christ has done and on God's promise to give eternal life to everyone that believeth."

I might write of other equally interesting and clear cases. I am purposing to publish the memoir of my late father in a separate form, and am now preparing the MS. If any of your readers who knew and corresponded with him have by them any letters of interest that might be of value and help in the book, I should be thankful if they will kindly lend them to me that I may take extracts; I will return them uninjured very shortly afterwards.

Earnestly desiring a continuance of the prayers and sympathy of your readers,

Yours faithfully in the Lord,
W. J. H. BREALEY.

ABORIGINES IN AUSTRALIA.

DEAR SIR,—The blacks, who have been so long neglected in this Colony, both by the Church and the Government, are now, through the agency of the missionaries, securing a good measure of attention. Ten years ago, when my wife and I relinquished our work amongst the whites to found the Warangesda Mission, friends thought we were mad; while the Government of the day branded the effort as a foolish hobby which would eventually fall with us. Thank God, we have lived to see the work grow and prosper; hundreds of poor dark-skinned children of the bush have been reached by the Gospel. Four mission stations have been formed. Many have died in the Christian faith. Scores of the children have been educated. The legislature, recognising the reality of the scheme, have come to our assistance, and are now giving to our Society £2 for every pound raised by voluntary contributions. We therefore take courage, being confident that He who led us to begin this great and good work will conduct it to a glorious finish.

We have yet much land to be possessed. In this great southern land there are about 200,000 aborigines remaining, and of that number only about 4000 have had the Gospel preached to them. Into the great northern regions beyond us we desire to penetrate with the lamp of life, and the olive branch of peace. I am thankful to say the doors are opening. We shall, as we have the workers and the means, enter and take possession of those fields, white unto the harvest. Our great want is suitable men and women as missionaries; so few in Australia care to devote themselves to this kind of work. We have at present three promising openings; but, if we had overflowing means, we should be at a loss for real missionaries. At one camp which I visited recently there were 65 poor aboriginals, at another I found 91, and at another 80; sad to say, no man cared for their souls—many of them had never heard the Gospel. Such is the state of things existing within this Colony of New South Wales, with all its machinery of a professedly spiritual character. I trust that some in England may be led to devote themselves to this great and promising work.

Yours sincerely, JOHN B. GRIBBLE.

SUNDAY REST ASSOCIATION.—This Association, basing its operations on the principle of moral suasion, has been eminently successful in entirely or partially closing very many Sunday trading shops, thereby releasing a great number of toilers from desecrating the Lord's Day. It has also induced many thousands of buyers either to abandon or materially diminish their purchases on that day. Its distinct and avowed object is to reduce to the minimum all unlawful and unnecessary Sunday labour, as preliminary and preparatory to its total abolition. The agents visit from shop to shop, and stall to stall, seeking by all kindly means to induce the owners to desist from their unholy traffic—and by the free distribution of tracts, handbills, and other suitable literature, combined with personal remonstrance to buyers and sellers, endeavour to point out the "more excellent way"—with most cheering and encouraging results. The secretary is Mr. John Whitehead, 22, Charing-cross, London, S.W.

THE SNOWDROP'S STORY.

By Eva Travers Evered Poole.

The winter's morning was calm and cold, the freshly fallen snow pure and white, the keen bracing air crisp and clear, and the February sunlight shining across the snow was almost dazzling in its brightness. Groups of merry children were gathered together, tossing snowballs at each other; laughing and shouting right merrily. Oh, it was a beautiful picture: below, a pure earth; above, a smiling heaven; and between them, happy-hearted child-faces full of joy and life.

In the little garden of a country parsonage stood an old brown apple-tree, at this winter season bare of leaf and blossom. But kind winter had clothed it in white snow garments, powdered with diamond spray. On one of its branches a red-breasted robin sat, and sang its story of love to its soberer mate, while underneath it grew a little group of snowdrops, the hope-flowers of the poor frozen earth. Long ago, in the early winter, the snowdrop roots had begun to feel the stirrings of life in their brown-cased bulbs. The little daughter of the house had planted them with her own hands under the apple-tree, saying to her mother—"How lovely they will look when they come up in the spring!" The words had wrapped themselves round the snowdrops, and lay buried with them, keeping them warm all the winter long. Over and over again one little snowdrop had whispered to itself the comforting words of promise, and wondered what shape or form its loveliness would take when it left its dark home for the light above. Bravely it struggled upward until its brown shell burst, and its tiny, slender shaft pushed aside the clods of earth and small stones that tried to hinder it. How wonderful was its first peep at the immensity of earth! How cold and frightened it felt as it shivered in the wintry blast, and looked around at the great expanse of field and garden, and sky above! A longing crept over it to shrink back again, and hide itself in the kindly earth, whose warm embrace now seemed so motherlike and kind.

But by-and-by the fear passed away; the little green shaft parted into twin leaves, and a still slenderer stem shot heavenwards. Then braver, stronger grown, the snowy flower, delicately striped with palest green, developed, and hung its beautiful, graceful head as if in awe at its own loveliness. Fair as it looked to others, the snowdrop was blind to its own beauty, all its longing was for power to lift up an unblushing face towards His clear heaven above, and to live out its little life for God's glory. But, try as it would, it could not look up. Full of eager desire, the snowdrop stiffened its stem, and made vigorous efforts to hold up its head, and to gaze around with the independent air of other flowers. In vain!

"What is the matter with me?" the little flower cried aloud, in accents of mortified pride. "Why does my head hang down, as though I had some cause for shame? Why am I pale and colourless, as though I had no life in my heart? Why does my stalk quiver and tremble at every kiss of the cold east wind? Why does my slender neck curve and droop, unable to bear the weight of my beautiful flower? Alas! alas! that I should ever have been made such a lowly, mean-spirited thing. I shall never do anything great in life. Where is my promised loveliness?"

And the snowdrop wept tears of bitterest sorrow, which the brown mother-earth hastily hid in its heart, not liking the world to know the folly of its little hope-flower.

Just then the Rector's daughter danced down the pathway, looking so bright and happy, that it did the heart good to gaze upon her. She paused in front of the group of snowdrops, breathless with admiration.

"Oh, mother, come and look at these lovely flowers. Did you ever see anything so exquisite? What does this beauty remind you of?" stooping to gather our friend the snowdrop, and holding it up to her mother's gaze.

"Sweet, pure little flower!" said her mother, taking the trembling snowdrop in her hand and kissing it. "It always teaches me a lesson, Nina. It seems to whisper that a humble spirit is beautiful in our Father's eyes, and that the lowliest hearts are those that know most of his love. See how fair and white are its petals! Surely it is just God's picture of a soul clothed with humility, washed white in the blood of Jesus, and filled with the consciousness of its own unworthiness."

Then still more softly the lady added, "The snowdrop has often preached to me a lesson of contentment with God's will, Nina. I have wished again and again from the time I was a very little girl to be or to do something wonderful and very great. I have never been given the opportunity, and my heart has so often rebelled against my lowly place in God's great world.

> And yet 'tis Thou who willest me
> This lowly spot to fill;
> Giving me nothing great or grand
> To be or to fulfil.

But I have at last learned, like the snowdrop, to be content."

And she laid the fragile blossom on her bosom where it rested, sorrowful now for very shame, as its impatience and sinful questioning of God's will for it.

"So my lowliness is my loveliness!" it whispered to itself, "and God meant it so, and if I had had my way and lifted up my blossoms, I should not have carried out his fair design and taught his truth; I should have spoiled the meaning of my life. How little I knew of God's purposes and plans! How nearly I made a fatal mistake!"

And what the flower said human hearts have said too, and, like the snowdrop, they have had to learn the same lesson.

What God loves is a humble heart. "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones" (Isa. lvii. 15).

The pure in heart are always humble in soul, and the truly great in God's sight have no high thoughts of self. "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I exercise myself in great matters, nor in things too high for me," says the great and good Psalmist (Ps. cxxxi. 1).

If you would be lovely in the sight of others, you must be lowly in your own eyes. Do you know that Jesus, our great example, was "meek and lowly in heart," and that "God giveth grace for loveliness unto the humble"? If you are a little flower, "a pleasant plant" (Isa. v. 5), growing in God's great garden of souls, snow-white and pure through Christ's righteousness, and made beautiful by the work of his Spirit, your heart will be very, very humble. Lovely though you are, you will say of yourself, "I am clad in beauty not my own," and you will learn, resting on the bosom of Jesus, that "a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price," is your true soul-loveliness.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Derby, Feb. 1; Nottingham, Feb. 2. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Home of Industry, Bethnal Green, Feb. 3—8, 7 p.m.; Finsbury Park Hall, Feb. 9—19, 7 p.m.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Feb. 3, Luke i. 46—56; Mon., Feb. 4, Luke i. 57—66; Tues., Feb. 5, Luke i. 67—80; Wed., Feb. 6, Luke ii. 1—14; Thurs., Feb. 7, Luke ii. 15—24; Fri., Feb. 8, Luke ii. 25—39 Sat., Feb. 9, Luke ii. 40—52.

SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Services for young people have been held at St. John's Church, Wembley, Harrow, by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, of the Children's Special Service Mission. The attendance was very good, and increased nightly, children and young people coming from the distant hamlets of Sudbury, Alperton, &c., to be present. The attention throughout was most marked, and the impressions made on many young hearts was deep and enduring. The vicar, Rev. A. M. Maynard, Rev. C. J. Parmenter, and the teachers, threw themselves heartily into the work.

Services were conducted in the Mission Hall, St. Mary's, Merton, by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, from Sunday, Jan. 20, to the following Friday. There was an average attendance of about 300 nightly, and the greatest interest was manifested throughout. Good results followed each service. The clergy, Rev. A. Kempson and Rev. E. H. Brown, co-operated very heartily with the missioner, as did also many of the Sunday-school teachers and other friends, the ladies of the congregation forming themselves into an effective choir. A Scripture-searching competition was a very successful feature of the work, and the local branch of the Children's Scripture Union was greatly strengthened.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

Mr. Hammond has now been in Marshall, Mich., nearly two weeks. He came here from Jackson, where he laboured three weeks, at the invitation of the Pastors' Union. Rev. Mr. White, of the Baptist Church, came here with him, and the account he gave of the work there did much to strengthen the faith of our people to labour for similar blessing here.

From the first it was evident that the Spirit of God was present, convicting sinners of sin and leading them to Christ. All the pastors here, except the Episcopal clergymen, have entered heartily into the work. Last Sabbath Mr. Hammond was nearly ten hours conducting religious services, which began at nine o'clock in the morning and continued until ten at night, with not long intermissions. Many who have seldom heard the Gospel have been attracted to the meetings, either indoors or out, and have been deeply impressed.

The children have been especially delighted with the services Mr. Hammond has held for them, and many have given satisfactory evidence of true conversion. Each of the pastors has from the first understood the work among the children, and rejoiced in it. It has been good to see the evidence they have given of a change of heart. Fathers and mothers, Sunday-school and day teachers, have borne witness to the manifest change in the lives of those who have professed conversion. Truly God has answered prayer.

Though Mr. Hammond goes, in a few days, to Saginaw City, we trust the work will go on, and many more be converted. The prayers of many here will go with him.

REGENT'S-PARK COLLEGE PREACHING-STATION SOCIETY has for its object the furnishing of supplies to village and other chapels that are not able to support a settled minister. It has completed its sixteenth year, and its operations have been attended with encouraging success. The plan generally adopted by the committee, on receiving an application for assistance, is to send several students successively to the church or congregation, who elect one of them as superintendent. In so far as circumstances will allow, the superintendent acts as pastor; he pays a visit to his charge every month, the other Sundays being supplied by various students. The report for last year, just issued, gives an account of much earnest labour. Communications may be addressed to the secretary, Mr. William L. Forfeitt, Regent's-park College, N.W.

THE YOUNG ABSTAINERS' UNION.

A TEMPERANCE meeting in the Mansion House, with the Lord Mayor of London in the chair, is indeed a new thing. We are exceedingly glad to be able to report that on Wednesday afternoon, last week, the spacious Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, was crowded with members and friends of the Young Abstainers' Union, the Lord Mayor (Alderman Whitehead) presiding in a most sympathetic manner, accompanied by the Lady Mayoress, and supported by a large number of temperance workers. It is believed that on no previous occasion has the cause of total abstinence been, as then, advocated in public meeting in the Mansion House.

After a few words by the Lord Mayor, Lady HOPE delivered a brief but hearty address. She rejoiced to say that wherever she went about the country, she met with members of the Union. Speaking to the parents present, she counselled them to exercise great care in bringing up their children to a wholesome dread of that which is the cause of so much sin and misery. She told of a mother who foolishly compelled her little boy to drink wine, although it was quite distasteful to him; afterwards, having acquired a taste for the hateful thing, and being desirous of pleasing his mother, the child said he would drink it without hesitation, and actually added that he would like some every day! Little did the mother think of the dangers to which she was exposing her child. Lady Hope pointed out the blessedness of engaging in the work of rescuing those who have fallen, also of helping them by setting an example of abstinence.

Canon BARKER remarked with pleasure upon the growth of the temperance movement, and spoke of the importance of the work of the Young Abstainers' Union. Reasoning very simply, he said: The liking for strong drink grows only when the drink is used. If you never touch it at all, you will never have a taste for it; and if you never have a taste for it, you can never be in danger from it. In conclusion, declaring that the future of the cause rests with the women, he asked mothers to shield their children from that which is the most destructive of all temptations.

Mr. J. Hayward having made some observations, Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS expressed a hope that great good would come of the Band of Hope Union scheme for giving temperance instruction to children attending elementary schools.

Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, K.C.B., attached an excellent speech to a vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress for their kindness in receiving the friends of the Union, and placing the Mansion House at their service. Having observed that in the past the influence of the Mansion House had not been very favourable to teetotalism, he expressed joy at finding a friend of the cause at present discharging the duties of Lord Mayor. In some concluding remarks, Sir Arthur said that he was celebrating the tenth anniversary of having signed the pledge, although he wished he had taken that step long before. Mr. A. C. P. COOTE seconded the resolution, which was carried with acclamation.

The LORD MAYOR made a graceful and hearty acknowledgment. Having declared his sympathy with the work, and intimated that three of his children are members of the Union, he said that he had for years been a local optionist. He was convinced that the question would never be satisfactorily settled until taken in hand by the people, with the power of direct veto. He believed in moral suasion, but in this question, which is one of vital importance to the country, he also believed in legislation. Alluding to the Band of Hope Union scheme for disseminating temperance knowledge among children, he suggested that much good would be done if coloured drawings were exhibited in schools, representing the effect of drink upon the stomach, the heart, and the liver. Having deplored the manner in which drink has spread misery and death in the antipodes, the aboriginal races having in some cases almost died out through its ravages, the Lord Mayor said he believed that the Colonial Governments are now more alive than is the Home Government to the importance of the question. Speaking as a magistrate, he said that directly or indirectly, eight-tenths of the cases coming before him are the result of drink. In conclusion, he observed that at all times it will be his aim and endeavour, as far as possible, not only to give his countenance but his support to all associations and efforts having for their object the improved temperance of the people.

The audience dispersed highly gratified by the Lord Mayor's wholesome and kindly words, and the friends of the Union are hoping for large accessions through his warm advocacy of the cause.

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS IN CUBA.

WITHIN the past three years a striking evangelical movement has been in progress in Cuba. In 1886, Mr. Alberto J. Diaz organised the first Baptist church on the island. This was the beginning of aggressive Protestant effort; and now, such has been the encouraging progress of the movement, there are six churches with half a score of ministers, some of them men of marked ability. These churches have 1100 members, and there are Sunday-schools with 2500 children on the rolls.

Mr. Diaz was an officer of the insurgents in the last uprising in Cuba. One night he and some comrades were surrounded by Spaniards, and could escape capture only by pushing out to sea on some logs of wood. Picked up by a passing vessel, he made his way to New York. Stricken down with illness, he was brought to death's door. Christian care opened his heart to Christian counsels, and, on recovering his health, he decided for Christ. Determining to pursue Christian work, he returned to Cuba as a Bible colporteur, and being a man of culture as well as energy, his efforts were speedily crowned with success.

The movement has encountered the fierce opposition of the Romish clergy, but the people are generally very favourable to it. Dr. Norman Fox, when describing the work in the New York Independent, says:—"The Spaniards have been deemed the most bigoted of Romanists; but we now find them giving a respectful hearing to evangelical preaching. When Roman Catholic communities renounce medieval superstitions, they are apt to fall into scepticism, if not atheism; but in Cuba we behold obsolescent superstition succeeded by a purer Christianity. The movement is as yet only in its infancy; whereunto it shall grow, none can foretell."

EDINBURGH COALMEN.

"No, missie, nobody cares for us," was a remark made by one of these men to a little girl of twelve, on her asking him if he loved Jesus, or ever attended any meetings. The interest awakened by this casual conversation has culminated in the establishment of an important Mission. There are between 600 and 700 coalmen in Edinburgh. The work amongst them has so grown in the hands of Miss L. D. Dougal and her friends that they now need a hall of their own. Now that the building of a hall has become necessary, Miss Dougal and her friends have been constrained to ask for the co-operation of the Christian public. The blessing of God has manifestly rested on the work. Rev. George Wilson, of St. Michael's Church, says: "I know of no Christian work in Edinburgh more wisely or prudently conducted." The address of Miss Dougal is 23, Morningside-place, Edinburgh.

MR. MOODY ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

THE labours of Mr. D. L. Moody and his helpers in the far West, are being signally owned of God, in the awaking of dry bones and the vivifying of dead souls. The whole of December was spent in Portland, Oregon, with large audiences, and hundreds at every service inquiring what they must do to be saved. Prominent among the converts was Judge Williams, Attorney-General in the late President Grant's Cabinet. The following, from one of the Portland daily papers, will be read with interest:—

"Judge George H. Williams, being called by Mr. Moody at this point, spoke in substance as follows: 'I have made a great many speeches in my life, and some from this platform, but this is the first time I have ever spoken at a religious meeting. For several months I have been troubled very much on the subject of Christianity. I had been looking forward to the meetings of Mr. Moody, and made up my mind I would attend them. When I first came to these meetings I made up my mind I would sneak in and take a back seat; but I changed my mind, and said I would go on to the platform and identify myself with these meetings. This I have done, with the exception of one evening. This was the first victory over my pride. Then yesterday Mr. Moody came to my house, and I joined with him in prayer; the first time I ever bowed my knee to God or man in my life. This was my second victory. Last night I got up and asked the prayers of God's people. This was my third victory. I feel now perfectly satisfied; the burden is rolled off and all gone, and feel that I could run or fly into the arms of Jesus Christ. This is my fourth victory. May God give us strength to be true to our convictions!'"

Another Portland daily states that a marked addition to the singing force of the Moody meetings had been made in the person of Mr. George C. Stebbins, of Brooklyn, who joined Mr. Moody at the beginning of December.

Great preparations were made in San Francisco for the meetings which opened January 6. A tabernacle has been built capable of seating five thousand people, with inquiry rooms, and every facility for carrying on a successful work. An earnest spirit of expectation prevails, and Christians throughout the city have been prayerfully preparing themselves for co-operation in the good cause.

ROUEN, FRANCE.—The new Seamen's Institute is now opened, and the seamen attend pretty regularly. If Christian friends could send interesting religious literature, periodicals, &c., the seamen would appreciate it; then the good impressions received at the service would not be lost. I still owe £50 on the furnishing account for No. 1 reading-room. JOHN W. HERIVEL.

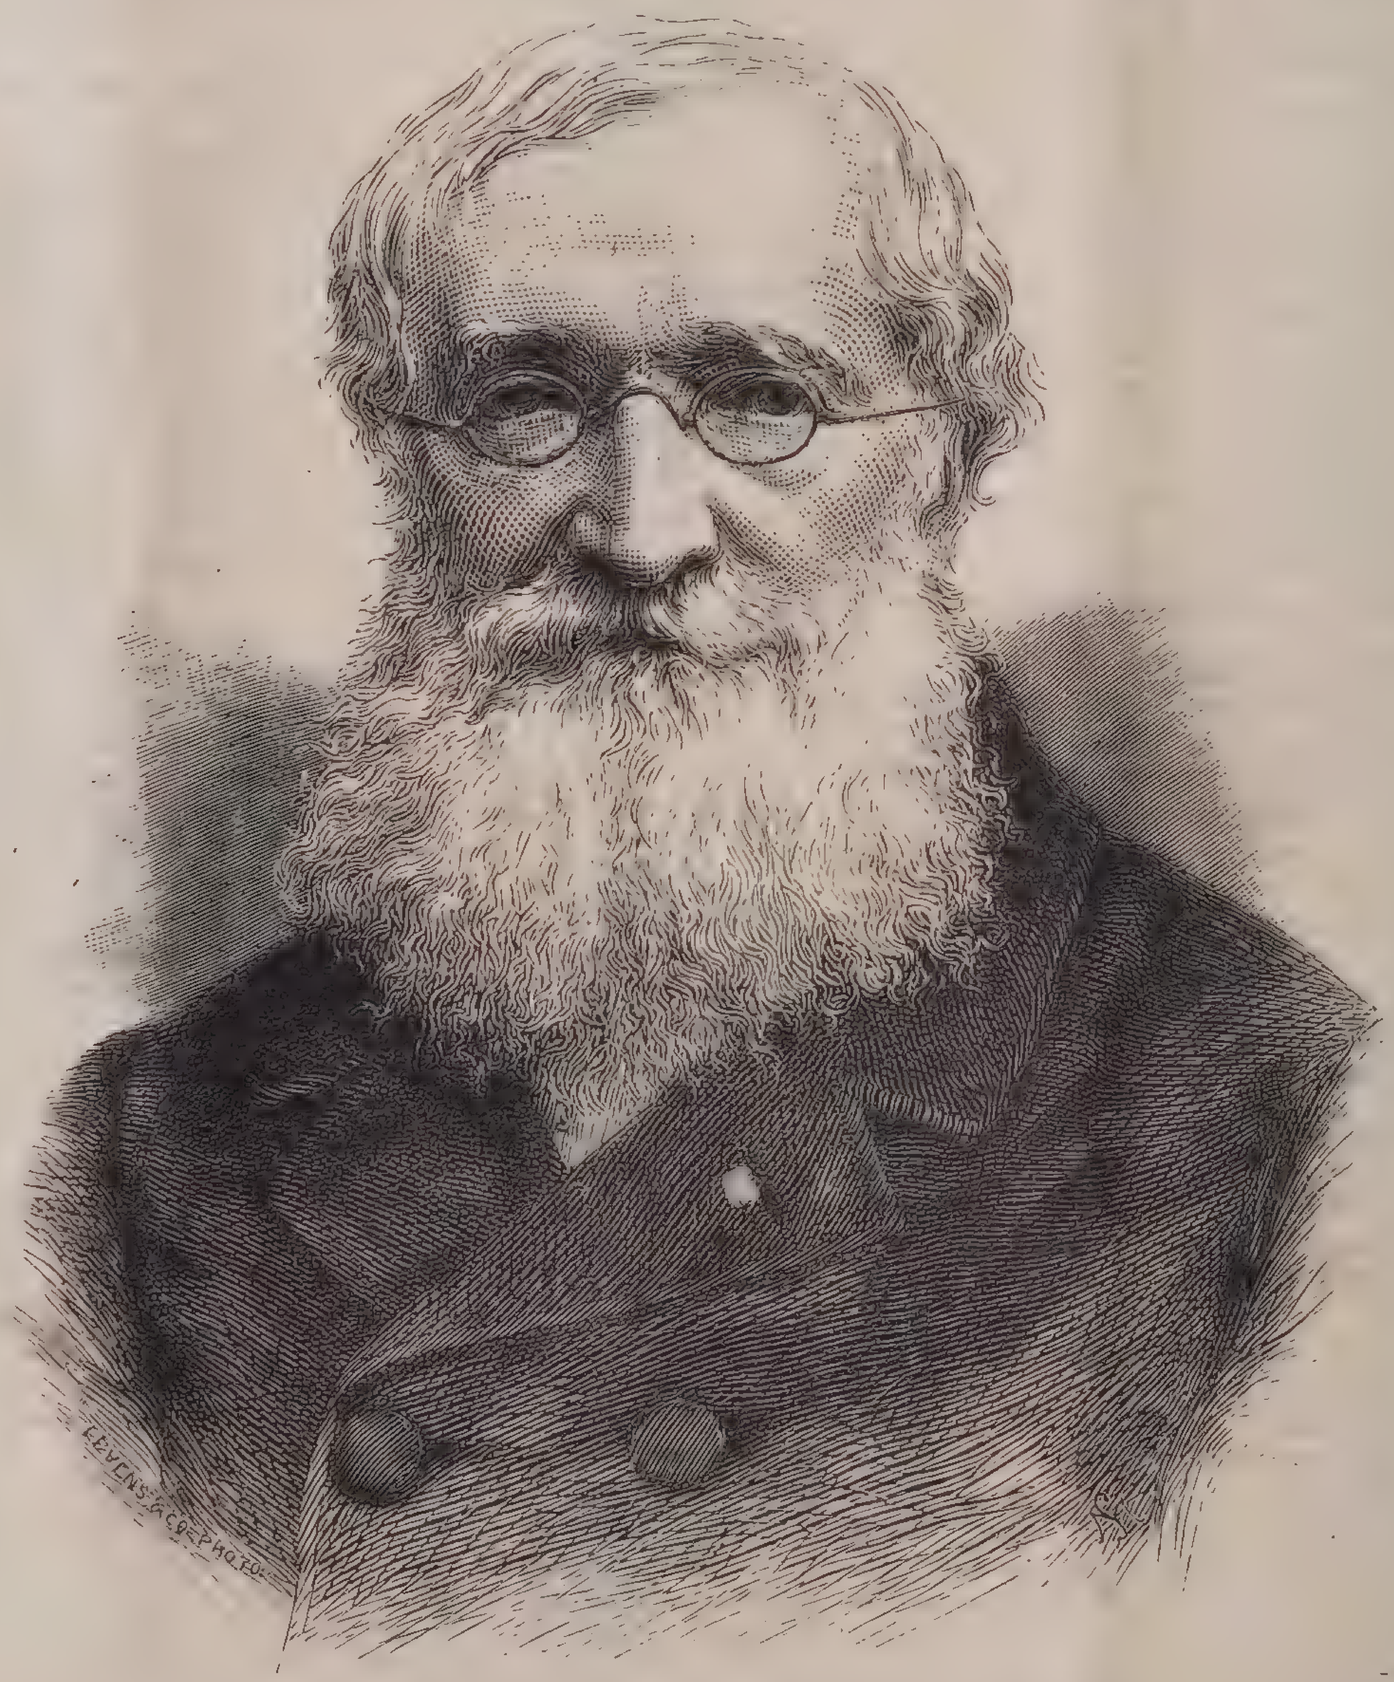
DR. JOHN SINGLETON,



Physician and Philanthropist, Melbourne.

THIS honoured servant of God was born in Dublin in January, 1808. At the age of fifteen he was apprenticed for three years to a medical man, a tenant of his father's in the country. During this time a circumstance occurred which had no little influence on his future life. He was induced on one occasion to take spirituous liquor which sickened him; he resolved next day never to take intoxicants again. He has not only kept this resolution for sixty-four years past, but has declined to prescribe them as medicines in his professional career of nearly sixty years. He has formed a number of total abstinence societies, on Gospel temperance principles, in various directions, and personally has for many years induced an average of one thousand persons annually to sign the total abstinence pledge cards which he carried with him constantly.

He finished his term of apprenticeship with a retired navy surgeon in Dublin. There, after deep convictions of his unfitness for eternity, and constant failures in trying to gain God's favour and justify himself by fasting, reading the Scriptures, saying prayers, &c., he obtained peace of mind and assurance of his salvation through faith in Christ, in October, 1827. Resting on the promises of the Gospel and filled with love to God, he consecrated his life to the happy service of his Redeemer.

He entered on his professional work in 1830 in the centre of a poor but densely populated part of Dublin. In the year 1832 the city was visited by Asiatic cholera. The Doctor was engaged night and day among the afflicted poor, refusing no one, whether a fee could be given or not. By carrying with him in his visits a few trusted medicines, and promptly applying them, he had very remarkable success. He also succeeded in allaying the terror which existed in his district. From observing that every case he investigated gave evidence that diarrhœa had preceded the attack for a longer or shorter period, and by applying a remedy, he saved numerous lives. In every instance he told the story of the Cross. With this object in view he found time to visit the hospitals for cholera patients, and told the dying of God's love to men and Christ's gift of pardon and eternal life.

In 1834 he became united in marriage to his late wife, who was a devoted Christian, and aided him in all his efforts to lessen the sorrows of the poor. Previous to this he had collected a band of Christian men and women to visit with religious tracts the shipping, barracks, prisons, hospitals, and poorest parts of the city. For twenty years this noble band won many jewels for their Lord and Master's crown. The Doctor took as his share of the work some of the hospitals and prisons, especially Newgate, which he regularly visited for twenty years till leaving Ireland. The visitors' hearts were gladdened by the great and happy results almost constantly witnessed. He also collected five large classes of adults, besides a boys' class, which he taught in the Sunday-school.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Levens & Co., Collingwood, Melbourne.)

In 1850, at the invitation of his brother, who was an Episcopalian clergyman in Victoria, he sailed for Melbourne, where he arrived, January, 1851, just before the goldfields were discovered. At once he entered on a large practice. He obtained for himself and Mrs. Singleton, from the Governor, the same permission as he had had in Dublin to visit the gaols. During the exciting scenes caused by the gold discovery a number of executions took place. From amongst these criminals he had some remarkable conversions. He held services in the large penal establishments when no chaplain attended. He read papers at the Medical Society, among the subjects being "Alcohol as a Medicine." In the Senate of the Melbourne University he helped to promote the best interests of the profession.

For four years he resided in Maryborough in the centre of a large goldfield. With an extensive practice, he had remarkable success in winning souls for Christ in the gaols, hospitals, and various gold-digging localities. He opened several Gospel temperance societies, and procured places for undenominational services. He introduced Christian men to aid in teaching the truths of the Gospel, and rescue the careless and prayerless around. As there were men on these goldfields from every European nation, as well as Asiatics, he got from London tracts in the various languages, and by the aid of some Christian friends circulated these, as well as New Testaments, among the people. He founded a large Bible-class of Chinese, Maoris, Sandwich Islanders, Samoans, and British. He engaged a Christian Malagasy and an Armenian from Persia to visit the scattered population with the light of the Gospel.

On his health failing he removed to the vicinity of Melbourne. Here also he formed Bible, book, and tract depôts, as well as auxiliary societies. He engaged a colporteur to go through the large scattered suburban population selling cheap Gospel books, Bibles, &c. When his health became recovered he removed to East Melbourne, and formed, on the model of the medical mission at the Cowgate, Edinburgh, a free medical mission dispensary. A mission-hall was erected beside it. In these not only were thousands benefited physically, but many professed to have found salvation. The converted patients help to conduct the meetings for prayer and religious conversation with those in the waiting-room; they also visit the sick and those awakened to a sense of sin. No alcoholic liquors are prescribed for disease or convalescence. The mission-hall has been a centre of Christian work for many years.

Eighteen years ago the Doctor opened a temporary Home for friendless and fallen women. Some hundreds were admitted in one year, and no less than ninety professed to have found salvation. In this institution the friendless are, as quickly as possible, provided with work. The fallen are admitted for three months as a rule. They are taught useful habits, and led to see their need of a Saviour; to trust in, love, and obey Him. Christian ladies visit and pray with them during the week. In times of great distress and want of employment the Doctor opened, by the aid of Christian friends, a Night Shelter for women and children. An average of 1000 women and 150 children nightly had a bed and breakfast in it last year. Considerably more have been helped in the men's Night Shelter which was opened more than a year since. At each of these, good men and women attend every night for short religious services and conversation with the lodgers, and assist in procuring work for them.

The Doctor has had a teacher for the blind employed during the past fourteen years. He secured for him a free pass on the railways. He teaches Moon's system of reading, and Braille's of writing. Dr. Singleton also visits the gaol of Melbourne, where he has on Saturdays over one hundred women in one Bible-class, and over two hundred men in another. The prisoners greatly enjoy the simple, heart-searching Gospel services, and not a few have professed to have received Christ.

The Doctor visited for many years the back lanes and slums of Melbourne with tracts. Such were the scenes of wickedness he witnessed that he erected a mission-hall in the centre of a vicious neighbourhood. It has since been twice enlarged, and has been the scene of a constant awakening among the surrounding masses, consisting of the criminal and fallen classes, drunkards, &c. About six years ago the Doctor gave the Salvation Army the use of the hall, and it has been a place fruitful in conversions to God.

The Doctor is now in his eighty-second year, and, with a view to perpetuate his many charities, he has had them placed in suitable trust for their future maintenance. He has experienced no difficulty in getting monetary help to carry on these Christian efforts. He has now erected a noble pile of buildings, consisting of a free medical mission dispensary, a free reading room with a registry for employment of labour, a Bible and tract depôt, and a coffee-saloon for the labouring population. He himself collected nearly the entire cost of land and buildings. Surrounded by his children and grand-children, he is closing a truly happy life in the service of his Lord.

It need scarcely be added that Dr. Singleton's devoted and multifarious efforts on behalf of the Melbourne community have met with the heartiest appreciation of his fellow-Christians. Even the secular press of the city has not failed to pay its tribute of well-merited esteem to the venerable Christian philanthropist. In an interesting account of his life and work, recently published, the Melbourne Daily Telegraph says:—

"The mere money value of a philanthropist like Dr. Singleton to the city, if expressed accurately in figures, would reach surprising dimensions. But the value of a citizen like Dr. Singleton is greater than could be measured by arithmetic; he is himself more than all his institutions and "shelters." He helps to preserve amongst us a lofty ideal of life. Amid all the fever and hurry of the city here stands one figure whose choice is not to fill his pockets, but to empty them for the poor and the fallen. While others strain every faculty to build splendid mansions for themselves, here is a man whose strange ambition is to build shelters for the harlot and homes for the outcast! And has he not his reward? For the selfish rich there will remain the splendid lies of a costly monument; but when "the good, grey head that all men knew" of a character like Dr. Singleton lies in the coffin, there will be paid to it the homage of a great city's grief.

Yes, and there will also remain for him in full measure the welcome "Well done!" and the eternal reward of that Master whom he has served so long and so faithfully.

Opium Havoc in China.

ARCHDEACON WOLFE, of the C.M.S., has written an account of a visit to Hoh-Chiang, commencing in September last. He says:—

Kang Cheng is situated in the heart of a beautiful valley, rich in rice crops, and well watered at all seasons of the year. The population is immense, and the position is well suited as a missionary centre for the entire valley; but, alas! it is filled with opium smokers, and where these abound there is very small hope of an entrance for the Gospel of Christ. Though the town stands in the midst of much natural beauty and grandeur, there are no attractions in the town itself; on the contrary, every sight and object that the eye rests on, as well as nearly every word that the ear listens to, is most repulsive and degrading. Such is heathenism in every place that I have seen it in China, and especially in a place given up to opium smoking.

In consequence of the removal of the local tax on the sale of opium, the drug is very much cheaper than before; consequently its use is rapidly spreading among all classes, and is fast destroying the vitality of this people. The devil could not have invented a more pernicious vice for the destruction of soul and body than this of opium smoking, and woe to the man who by word or deed gives any support or encouragement to the hell-born traffic! It is necessary for every friend of the Chinese to speak out in the plainest and most decisive manner of the evils of opium smoking. The people are being ruined by it, and it is indeed a lamentable spectacle to see professing Christian men speaking and writing in defence of the horrible crime.

The pernicious results of this soul and body destroying vice are apparent all around. Cadaverous-looking faces meet one on every side, and the slovenly habits and the filthy appearance of the people generally testify too plainly to the evil it is working on this once industrious and energetic population. The rapid progress which opium smoking has made during the last twenty years among all classes of this population is a very serious matter for us missionaries. Humanly speaking, opium smokers are beyond the reach of conversion, as the vice unfits them for the perception of any moral or spiritual truths. Can the Church of Christ in England do nothing to influence the nation to withdraw from the abominable traffic which is causing so much moral, spiritual, physical ruin to this great people? It is a sad reflection on the Church of Christ in England that it seems powerless to influence the English people in so important a matter as the Indian traffic in opium.

Almost the entire population in some places is abandoned to the use of this poisonous drug. The effects are witnessed in the extreme poverty of the people, in the broken-down and dilapidated dwellings all through the village, and in the gross immorality which prevails among the inhabitants. Men openly and without shame prostitute their wives, in order to procure for themselves the means of indulging in opium smoking. Little children are sold as slaves and turned away from the embrace of their helpless mothers in order that their degraded fathers may have money to buy opium. All this and much more may be told of the effects of opium smoking on the miserable people; yet professing Christians in England see no harm in it, and openly advocate the abominable traffic which makes it possible, and comparatively easy for the Chinese people to ruin themselves and their wives and children for time and for eternity!

At one place I met Sia, the literary graduate, and had a long and painful conversation with him on this question. Sia himself comes regularly to church, and contributes to the support of the catechist and the repairs, &c., of the church, but at present he is much discouraged and disgusted by the conduct of England and China with reference to the opium question. He says that since the recent arrangements which allow the opium to be transported into the interior free of lekin tax the consumption has more than doubled, as the price has by these arrangements been much reduced. The Imperial revenue has been largely increased; but, the local taxation having been removed by the special request of England, it can be conveyed into the interior and sold for a much less price than it cost under the old arrangement! Hence the country is being visited with a heavier curse than ever before by the action and greed of England. Will not God visit for these things? Sia's only son has succumbed to the temptation, and has become within the last year a confirmed opium smoker. The grief and anger of the father may well be imagined, and the shame and helpless indignation of the English missionary are beyond expression. Often and often has the missionary to endure the humiliation which no other nationality has to bear in this country. Often has he wished in his heart that the flag of some other nation which is not stained with the poisonous, polluted opium drug, was the one under which he lived in this country rather than the English, which to the Chinese is the emblem of the moral ruin of their nation.

DR. PENTECOST IN GLASGOW.

DR. PENTECOST commenced his second series of meetings in the West-end of Glasgow on Wednesday, January 9. Bible-readings had been arranged for four afternoons of each week in Free St. Matthew's Church, Rev. J. Stalker's; while the evangelistic meetings were fixed for Sunday evenings in the St. Andrew's Hall, and on each week evening, except Saturday, in Mr. Carstairs' Church, Berkeley-street. The mission was organised by the directors of the Evangelistic Association, and of the West-end Christian Union, in sympathy with thirty-one churches in the district of all the evangelical denominations.

It has been no small strain, physically, mentally, and spiritually, to carry on all this work, especially as there has been added to it an extra sermon or two on Sundays in some church of the district, and an additional Bible-reading on two forenoons of the week in the Christian Institute. Yet the preacher has stood the test, and his addresses have been wonderfully varied, extremely telling, and opening up to all hearers the wonderful fulness of the Gospel of God. To the Christians the truth has gone home in power, and many a one has to thank God for the teaching sent through his servant. The Sabbath night meetings in the St. Andrew's Hall have been largely attended, 3000 people or more crowding the great building. The subjects discoursed on were, "The reasonableness of Christianity," and "The things that are seen compared with the things that are not seen."

The afternoon Bible-readings have drawn most interested audiences; while the work in the evangelistic meetings has deepened, and the results of the second week have been more full and thorough than during the first week. Still there is much ground to overtake, many yet to be gathered in. Let there be deep real prayer going up from each reader of this notice that God would strengthen and use Dr. Pentecost, and draw very many to the Lord Jesus.

IRISH NOTES.

IT was very thoughtful of you to call the attention of your readers to the address of Mrs. George Brealey. Surely there are many who will respond to your invitation (in THE CHRISTIAN, Jan. 18) to express their practical sympathy with her. When men who give their lives for the spiritual and physical elevation of thousands fall in the battle, the noble wives who have fought by their side should not be forgotten in the days of their widowhood. May I not also hope that the widow of the late lamented Henry Moorhouse may have a share in the thoughtful love of those whom he served in the Gospel. His daughter is "Little Minnie" no longer. She is now growing a fine, industrious girl; but she is ever helpless, and can only walk by the aid of costly appliances, which tax the dear mother, as the machinery has to be frequently adjusted to the rapid growth of the beloved daughter, who can never romp nor play, nor walk like other children. Nor should "Little Willy" be forgotten, a loving boy of ten years, delicate of constitution, tender of heart, affectionate, but now without the supporting arm of that loving father who poured out his earnest life in seeking to win the lost to Christ and heaven.

. . . .

A population of four millions of people are at our doors; when will true-hearted missionaries be ready to pour out their lives upon Ireland's altar? The Congo swallows up our men and women, while others press onward to carry the Gospel to Africa's dark children. May the number of volunteers for Africa increase a thousandfold! But are there none willing to face a few irate priests, whose hands dare not strike down any messenger of mercy who would labour for the present and eternal good of this land? Evangelists crowd to the North, while the West and South are enshrouded in darkness. Yet evangelists can do little until the pioneer missionary enters the homes of the people with the light of life.

. . . .

The different societies, and the many individuals who have large experience amongst Roman Catholics, assure me that for centuries there have not been so great opportunities for Ireland's evangelisation. The agitations of the past are doing a work of disintegration; the Italian hand cannot now check the Catholic of independent thought. The politics of Rome are obnoxious to Catholic Irishmen, who, when they throw off the Papal yoke, will be free to hear the Gospel from any true ambassador of the cross.

When once Protestants give up every antipathy towards their Catholic neighbours; when men and women begin to labour for their salvation; when the Spirit of God comes in answer to many tears and groans and prayers, then will sectarianism lessen, and vital Christianity be revived. No one sect can do this mission work, but the best in all the sects will flow together like globules of mercury in their combined effort for poor Ireland's salvation.

. . . .

On Tuesday, February 19, I hope to call a special meeting in Dublin with a view of uniting with Christians all over the world to make special supplication for the success of the Gospel among the Roman Catholics of Ireland, and that a great company of the priests may become obedient to the faith.

Dublin, January. GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

Mrs. Ross, Regent-square, Doncaster, will thankfully receive old Christmas cards, scraps, &c., for charitable and missionary purposes.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

THE anniversary of the Open-Air Mission was celebrated on Tuesday, last week, when a meeting was held at Exeter Hall, attended by a goodly number of members and friends. The chair was occupied by Mr. F. A. BEVAN, and addresses full of encouragement were delivered by warm friends of the work. In the course of the proceedings, another testimony was borne to the high esteem in which the secretary, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, is held. When the members recently learned that he desired to visit the Holy Land, they determined to facilitate the journey, and as a result the sum of £120 was collected. This was now handed to Mr. Kirkham, with some words of loving regard, and acknowledged in a like spirit. It is twenty-nine years since Mr. Kirkham was first appointed secretary of the Mission, and, as he said, he has uniformly received kindness at the hands of those who have laboured with him in the good cause.

Extracts were read from the deeply interesting report of the year's operations. A rich blessing has attended the word spoken in the open air, and all that has been needed for carrying on the work has been supplied. The members of the Mission number 1064, many of whom reported cheering results of their endeavours. What was read of the voluminous report made those present desire to hear more, but as time would not allow of multiplying extracts, there was no help for it but to wait with patience for the publication of the whole. The CHAIRMAN spoke some words of hearty sympathy and congratulation.

An address abounding in good points was delivered by Rev. SYDENHAM L. DIXON, incumbent of Park Chapel, Chelsea. It is some years since he made his début "beneath the blue sky;" he therefore spoke as a fellow-labourer with the members of the Mission. First, citing Psalm xlv. 1, he showed that open-air preachers need godly matter, full hearts, and loosened tongues. Having largely illustrated his subject, he ably maintained that sanctified intensity, or sustained enthusiasm, is the great want of those who would succeed in such Gospel work. He concluded by commending to notice Jer. i. 9, and expressing a hope that, as in the case of the prophet, the Lord's hand would be on the lips of the preachers, and his words in their mouths.

Rev. COLMER B. SYMES, of Leytonstone Congregational Church, followed with some very helpful remarks. He rejoiced at the fact that the English people are always ready to listen when a man has a serious and earnest message to deliver. Having called attention to the blessedness of preaching the living Christ, he urged his hearers to emphasise the Lord's claim upon the consciences of men. He said that the compassion and sympathy of Christ should not be proclaimed in such a manner as to obscure his royal rights. The awfulness of sin must also be continually kept to the front, and it must, moreover, be made plain that Christ is worthy of the largest sacrifices that can be made in his name. In conclusion, Mr. Symes counselled the preachers to proclaim the pure Gospel with all confidence, accomplishing the essential contradiction of putting themselves into their work, and yet keeping themselves out of it.

ITALIAN MISSION IN GENEVA.—This winter has thus far been a time of spiritual as well as temporal blessing for this church and Mission. Over thirty Roman Catholics have left the Church of Rome. And an equal number of Italian speaking young men have joined the Circolo Diodati Y.M.C.A., which numbers now 57 members. A hall for meetings and classes was inaugurated fifteen months ago. The reading-room, with good books and newspapers, is now the well-known rendezvous of the Italian Protestants of Geneva. There is a prosperous Sunday-school.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

THE foreign work of the Edinburgh Spanish Evangelisation Society comprises three long-established centre stations—viz., Huelva, Cadiz, and Seville. In all of these towns are congregations of Spaniards, with resident missionary pastors, itinerant work being carried on, as far as possible from these stations. In the centre stations there are day and Sabbath schools with pastoral religious instruction and superintendence. There is also a wide-spread, free distribution of tracts, with other means for the advancement of Gospel truth among the outlying populations.

In addition to the three centre stations, there is one at Escornar, in the province of Granada, attended to by an evangelist teacher, with occasional Sabbath services by Señor Alhama, of Granada. There are also day and Sabbath schools. Through these evangelical labours, the Romish Church is almost defunct in the place, and the priest and his helpers can only get a few old men and women to attend their services. The Society has likewise minor missions, with mission premises, in some other places.

The results of the aggressive operations of the missionary agents are of a most touching character, in the outcry that is being made, from various parts, for the Gospel, and applications for mission services, which the strength and time of the agents cannot admit of their overtaking to the extent desired. Suffice it now to say that, were we provided with sufficient means to expand the work, such as we have described, and to increase the number of our evangelical schools, a large work for Christ could be overtaken in the provinces of Andalusia and Granada. This arises from the wonderful preparedness of the people to hear the Gospel, and the avidity with which it is received when it is presented to them.

Towards the close of 1887, under the conjoined solicitations of Rev. William Moore, the superintendent of our foreign work, and Rev. D. R. Kilpatrick, of Glasgow, who had been on a visit of inspection to our foreign stations, we took up Puerto Real as a new station. It is being supplied, meanwhile, through Mr. Moore, until an evangelist and teachers can be provided for it. About the beginning of last year we took up another minor mission, to be ministered to by our missionary pastor of Huelva, Señor Jimenez. The name of the town is Tharsis, and some hundreds of Spaniards there appear to be stretching out their hands to God, in their eagerness to hear the Gospel and to learn the way of salvation through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Thus the cords of this Mission are being lengthened and its stakes strengthened. What we desire and need is a due and increased financial support by God's people, to enable us still further to extend our missionary agencies throughout the yet evangelically unoccupied portions of the province of Andalusia.

Rev. Daniel R. Kilpatrick, having, in 1887, undertaken a mission of inquiry to this Society's stations in Andalusia, sent us, after his return home, a deeply interesting account of his experiences in that mission field. It is now embodied in an occasional paper, and can be had free, on application as below.

In the year 1871 we prepared and issued a volume, entitled "The Dawn of the Second Reformation in Spain: Being the Story of its Rise and Progress from the year 1852," price 3s. 6d. The remaining copies can now be had from us at the greatly reduced price of 1s. 6d. each, post free.

(MRS.) MARIA DENOON PEDDIE,
Secretary and Treasurer of the Spanish Evangelisation Society.

Costermongers' Mission, Vinegar-ground. — Just now this Mission is sadly straitened for want of funds. The people are very poor, and it is difficult to carry such a Mission on without having a share in feeding them. Walter Penrose, Vinegar-ground, City-road, E.C., is the superintendent. Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C., will receive contributions.

THE CATACOMBS.

IN a recent letter to us, expressing strongly his appreciation of the value of Mr. Benjamin Scott's book on "The Catacombs of Rome" (of which a new edition is just issued by Morgan & Scott), the Dean of Achonry states the following facts which have come under his notice :—

Some years ago a clergyman named Hemans, son of the poetess Felicia Hemans, went over to the Romish Church. He afterwards visited Rome; during his stay in that city, going through the Lapidarian Gallery, he was struck by the absence of any proofs of the teaching of the modern Church of Rome, in the inscriptions taken from the Catacombs. As he read and studied and compared them, the truth came flashing back on his mind, that he had left the pure faith of his fathers for the corrupt Roman system, and he returned. When the present Archbishop of Dublin, Lord Plunket, visited Rome some time ago, Mr. Hemans brought him to the Lapidarian Gallery and explained to his lordship the inscriptions, and showed how, after the third and fourth centuries, corruption and error came creeping gradually in till the dark ages when the Romish system had fully developed.

REVIVAL IN CARDIFF.

SPRINGING out of the annual week of prayer there is now progressing in Cardiff a very healthy and glorious revival. At present it is confined to one large section of the town, i.e., the Roath district, but there is abundant evidence that it is spreading out in all directions, and promises to reach every corner of the town. In the Roath district there are eleven ministers and churches engaged in the work. Three services are held daily. Great crowds of people have attended the meetings, and large overflow meetings have been held; while the ministers and workers have been detained until a late hour in dealing with anxious inquirers.

The present is the fourth week of the mission, and it is to be continued until further notice. It is the one topic of conversation in the town, and is causing great interest among many apathetic people who are beginning to long for the same blessing. Requests for prayer have poured in at every meeting, and many of these petitions have been answered.

Mr. William Hobson also writes:—The work of conversion and upbuilding goes on. Many days from thirty to forty profess blessing, and the hallowed unity of the churches is very cheering and encouraging. Last week the Cathays district, and also the central district commenced services, the latter on the same lines as Roath. The morning meetings are to be held in the Friends' Meeting-house, the afternoon Bible-readings in the Congregational Chapel, while evening evangelistic meetings will circulate among the Free Methodist, Congregational, Baptist, and Wesleyan chapels. Lines of demarcation seem obliterated, and the impress of Divine approval crowns all. Prayer is incessant that the revival influence may spread to neighbouring towns, to our ships and captains; may reach all classes of the community, and produce pure lives and happy homes, and that the floodgates of evil, working such havoc in our midst, may be closed by the power of a purified public opinion and life.

Unhappily, so far, the union is confined to Nonconformists, but we would gladly welcome our friends of the Established Church to the brotherhood of service for Him who said: "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

Caution.—We are desired to warn the public against a man by the name of James Alexander, who represents himself as a Christian and connected with Kilburn.

WORKERS IN ROME.

DEAR SIR,—To many of your readers Mrs. Wall's work in Rome is well known, but I would like to bring before their notice a fresh undertaking that has been much laid upon her heart—the opening of a small Home for lady workers. Mrs. Wall has rented and furnished a few suitable rooms in a healthy situation, with the advantage of being under the same roof as the house in which she lives. The rooms would be offered rent free, but any ladies, whose hearts the Lord may dispose to come out, would be required to have some means for the paying of their board, &c. Two or three lady workers would be gladly welcomed.

The work increases; fresh branches of the medical mission have been started. It is especially in connection with this that workers are greatly needed; to take part in the medical mission, and to follow it up by house visitation. Hundreds of people and families are lost sight of for want of this kind of help.

Any ladies desiring to respond to this appeal are requested to furnish some references; all communications on the subject may be addressed to, Yours faithfully,

(MISS) M. SIMPSON.

MESSRS. HYDE AND STEVENSON.

SHOWERS of blessing have been falling upon the mill and factory girls of North Belfast during the fortnight's mission conducted by Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson (of Northfield, America), in the "Welcome," a branch of the Y.W.C.A. Every day at 1.15 a band of plaid-shawled, white-aproned girls gathered together, for a brief, bright meeting of praise and prayer and helpful words, which, as they expressed it, gave them a "big lift," and sent them back to their work strong and happy. These little meetings were characterised by a freshness of method which greatly delighted the girls. One day, for instance, they were asked to write questions upon slips of paper concerning their every-day needs and difficulties, which Mr. Hyde then simply and clearly answered. Another day Mr. Stevenson sang to them, and taught them to sing one of those beautiful Gospel hymns, which, once heard, echo and re-echo in the mind, sowing seeds, one day, we trust, to blossom into "precious fruit." The girls brought requests for prayer, for themselves and their "comrades," many of which were answered on the evening of the day they were offered; thus faith was strengthened, and prayer became praise.

Daily, at 4 o'clock, a mothers' meeting was held, and there were heavy-laden hearts to whom the message sung and spoken came home with power. "It was good of the Lord to bring them two young gentlemen all the way from Chicago, just to lead me and my husband to Jesus," said one of the mothers gratefully. Another added, "Yes, they has brought peace to us. I can say the Lord is my Shepherd now, praise Him."

In the evening meetings, which were open to all, much work for eternity was done. Many of the girls and men and boys came out clearly on the Lord's side, and very interesting has it been to watch their eagerness to bring fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, and friends to the Saviour whom they had just learned to love. That God may still more richly bless and own these young messengers of the Cross wherever they go, is the earnest prayer of their fellow-workers in the Welcome mission.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for February 10 (Zech. xiii. 9): "And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people: and they shall say, The Lord is my God."

RESCUE WORK.

THE chief event of the past year in connection with the Society for the Rescue of Young Women and Children, 79, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C., was the rebuilding on an enlarged scale of the burnt-out Home at Woodford. It was opened in November last, and is now occupied by a large and gradually increasing number of young girls saved from positions of great danger and being trained for different spheres of domestic service. A second important event was the taking possession of a fine house with an acre of ground in Dalston, to which our Home from Greenwich was removed. This has proved a great boon and is an immense advantage over our old premises.

Notwithstanding these changes, which for the time naturally restricted our reception of girls, the total shows a very large increase in the number aided through the year. The terrible crimes in the East-end drove a number of young women to seek our aid, many of whom are still under our care. Exactly 600 were admitted to our eight Homes, against 542 in 1887. The number of applications we were unable to help also increased from 419 in 1887, to 472 in 1888. Since January 1, 44 girls have been welcomed to our "Door of Hope," and nearly all the Homes are full. The balance of £312, due to the builder for the Woodford Home, must be paid by Feb. 8. The spiritual work in the Homes was never more encouraging than last year, many being truly converted to God and now living Christian lives.

C. STUART THORPE, Secretary.

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—Mr. William Forbes held one of his tea-meetings for theatrical employés on Wednesday, January 23, at Whitefield Church school-room, Drury-lane. After tea hymns were sung, and an earnest address was given by Lord Radstock on "The Reality of Christ as a Saviour and as a Friend."

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—The fifteenth anniversary of the Malden Hall branch of this Mission, at Kentish Town, was celebrated on Thursday last week, when afternoon and evening meetings were addressed by a number of friends. At the former, after a few words by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, Mr. W. R. Lane delivered an address on the parable of the talents, as recorded in Matt. xxv., Mr. Charles Inglis following with some helpful observations on Ps. xxiii. In the evening, after remarks by Mr. Miles, a brief statement was made by Mr. C. Bateman, superintendent of the Sunday-school, to the effect that that useful adjunct of the work is in a prosperous condition. Dr. Neatby presented lessons from Mark v., on the cure of the demoniac; and Mr. Robert Paton laid stress on the fact that salvation is not only from the consequence of sin, but from sin itself. Dr. McKilliam made some practical remarks on Mark iii. 13—Christ's call to his servants. The other speakers were Revs. D. M. Cameron, of Wandsworth; W. M. Smith, of Bow; and Mr. Thomas Miller. The addresses were characterised by much vigour and earnestness, and were felt to be words in season.

COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.—The Bible and Colportage Society, founded in 1859, with branches at Belfast, Derry, and Dublin, has had a chequered career. The branch in Derry has continued ever since, but the others collapsed. The Belfast branch has just been resuscitated, the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland having most opportunely undertaken the entire working of the book department. A public meeting in support of the branch was held a few days ago. The chairman, Rev. G. R. Wedgwood, spoke of the organisation as an effort which unites all the evangelical churches, and maintained that the Bible is the real remedy for the ills of Ireland. Rev. R. J. Lynd dwelt upon the great hopefulness of the work. There is, he said, no people more religious, according to their lights, than the Irish. The very strength of their emotion, if guided by a knowledge of Divine truth, would place them in the highest class in the school of Christ. He therefore urged widespread sowing of the seed of God's Word, and was glad to recognise the great usefulness of the Bible and Colportage Society. The unsectarian character of the organisation and the spiritual-mindedness of its agents were alluded to with pleasure by several speakers.

Y.W.C.A. INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.

THE formal inauguration of the new premises of the Y.W.C.A. in Glasgow took place last week. The ceremony was performed by the Countess of Aberdeen; the Lord Provost (Sir James King, Bart.) being in the chair. The Lord Provost, in introducing the Countess, said that this Institute had been a long-felt need in Glasgow.

The COUNTESS said that the Earl and she were often asked to open similar institutions, but scarcely ever any that were free of debt. The Glasgow one, she was glad to say, was without this burden so far as the building was concerned, and now only required £300 to complete the furnishing. The other necessary £14,000 had been contributed by the Glasgow public during the last three or four years. Her plea for further help and support was a powerful one—that of work accomplished rather than of work to come. After some words on the needs of young women in our great cities, and the best ways of helping them, her ladyship declared the Institute open.

The premises were inspected by a large number of the friends present. Certainly it will not be owing to any negligence on the part of their lady well-wishers, if friendless young women in Glasgow remain without a home. Everything has been done in this Institute to promote the welfare and comfort of the occupants, and to give a real touch of home in the furnishing and appointments of the various apartments. But the Association has provided attractions of a more durable character—viz., accommodation for forty boarders, and for twenty-six servants out of situations; a sitting-room, reading-room, and library; a restaurant, daily taken advantage of by hundreds of young women in the city; a servants' registry office, a fine hall to be used for the various meetings, not to speak of Bible, educational, and cooking-classes.

The inauguration was followed next day by the annual meeting of the Y.W.C.A., held in the Queen's-rooms. With a due sense of its increased importance, the Association had, this year, prepared a social gathering on a larger and more important scale than its predecessors, and had further taken the step of admitting representatives of the sterner sex.

After tea had been served, Mr. CAMPBELL WHITE, who was in the chair, gave a short and pointed address on the responsibility of the individual members of the Y.W.C.A. with regard to one another. This was a time for women to come forward to help women. Young ladies might take part in musical entertainments, &c., without anyone thinking the action the least unbecoming; but directly they opened their lips for God, people said it was "not proper."

Mr. White was followed by Rev. SHOLTO DOUGLAS, who drew some apt lessons for Y.W.C.A. workers from the incident of our Lord's sending Peter to get the tribute-money from the fish's mouth. Rev. W. CARSTAIRS spoke on fitness for service. Rev. Dr. Bonar gave a short Bible-reading on the dedication of the Temple, with reference to the interesting ceremony of the previous day. Some sacred music having been sung, Mr. William Oatts, Y.M.C.A. Secretary, brought the meeting to a close by an animated, short, and pithy address on the mutual help and influence possible between the two Associations.

REFUGES IN MANCHESTER.—Mrs. Leonard K. Shaw recently laid the corner stone of the new Refuges for boys and girls in Strangeways. The stone bore this inscription: "That our sons may grow up as young plants, and our daughters be as polished corners of the Temple." Mrs. Shaw, in the course of a short address, alluded to the balance of £4000 still required to complete the building, which is divided into several sections. One will accommodate the Prison Gate Mission, and others will be devoted to working lads, the Caxton boys, shoe brigade, &c.

SEED-SOWING IN NORMANDY.

THROUGHOUT the winter Mr. Henry Cook's Gospel ship Mystery has been stationed at Trouville in Normandy, and a really good work, attended by much encouragement, has been in progress among seamen and others. A number of Englishmen, engaged in constructing a new pier, have been invited to attend meetings on board, and spiritual blessing has been evident in more than one case. Scandinavian seamen have also been the subject of loving solicitude, and some of them have gone away rejoicing in the Lord. Several French people have acknowledged the good they have derived. These endeavours have been greatly furthered by a devoted lady worker sent to Trouville by Lord Radstock. Among English, French, and Scandinavian seamen, as well as residents of the town, her labours have been greatly blessed.

It has now been thought highly desirable to secure a small house for mission purposes, and to serve as a sailors' rest, so that the results of this visit of the Mystery to Trouville may be rendered permanent. Mr. Cook writes that he has received £130 in donations and promises to meet the cost of the building. A gentleman at Trouville has offered for sale a very desirable plot of ground, over 360 square yards for £200; the house will be plain and cost not over £800; the property to be secured by trustees. This is an undertaking full of promise, and it is hoped that the scheme will receive the encouragement which it deserves. Mr. Cook's address is Stoke-road, Gosport.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Nearly all the lads on the training-ships in the Thames are total abstainers.

Mr. Coad has again visited Crossley Hall, Openshaw, Manchester, and had a very successful six days' mission.

The Pall Mall Gazette calls attention to the need for increased attention to temperance teaching in schools. It points out that in this respect America is far ahead.

The master of Elham Union, several years a prison governor and twenty years at the workhouse, says, "I do not remember at any time to have had a total abstainer under my charge."

A Gospel Temperance mission, under the joint auspices of the Women's Temperance Association and the Hibernian Band of Hope Union, has been held in Dublin. It was conducted by Miss Brewster, of London, and was a time of much blessing.

A recent convert of the Wesleyan West London Mission was a gentleman of good family connections, who had for many years been enslaved by drink. The craving for intoxicating liquors has quite left him, and since his conversion he has never attended an evangelistic service without taking with him other wanderers from the paths of sobriety and godliness.

Rev. J. D. Hird, London Diocesan Secretary of the Church of England Temperance Society, has made a special appeal for funds to carry on rescue work in connection with the Metropolitan police-courts. Three missionaries have already done good work, as the magistrates have willingly testified. It is desired to appoint temperance missionaries in each of the eleven courts of the Metropolis.

FOREIGN.

In Lagos there is no special restriction on the sale of spirits to the natives.

There are now in Berlin so many drinking saloons that there is one for every 112 inhabitants, but at Heidelberg there is one to every 87.

Mrs. Miller, a large landowner in Colorado, steadily refuses to let ground for a public-house. Two thousand dollars was offered in vain for a lot for a saloon.

Sacramento, Cal., has passed an ordinance making it unlawful for any person under seventeen years of age to smoke cigarettes within the corporate limits.

In Belgium working men occupying small houses frequently make the basement into dram-shops. As the children are often made to serve out the drink, the evil consequences may be imagined.

A worker among the coloured people of the Southern States says that the work is steadily gaining ground, that the coloured brethren are more willing to hear the truth, and to become practical total abstainers.

CHILI.—The Swiss emigrants in this country are shortly to have a resident pastor, M. Arnold Leutwyler having been appointed to the work by the Basel Society on behalf of scattered Protestants.

Personalia.

Mrs. Shipton, we are glad to say, is progressing towards recovery, though still slowly.

Rev. W. Cuff is suffering in health from overwork; he is absent from London for much-needed rest.

Mr. Wilson, the new M.P. for Govan, is (says The British Weekly) a man of stainless integrity, a lifelong friend of the temperance cause, an ardent advocate of religious equality, and a leading member of that honourable body of Christians who have done so much for Scotland—the Evangelical Union.

The late General Gordon is characteristically sketched by Mr. W. T. Stead in the current issue of The Young Man. Says Mr. Stead:—"His statue stands in the centre of Trafalgar-square, and it will be well if the memory of his heroic life were to become more and more the centre of the thoughts of our youth. For he brought back to our times the romance of the age of chivalry, the stern passion for righteousness that distinguished the Ironsides of Cromwell, together with much of the gracious childlikeness and tender sympathy of Jesus of Nazareth."

The late Rev. Alex. MacColl.—Speaking of this well-known Highland minister, whose death has recently occurred, The Inverness Courier says:—"Mr. MacColl belonged to a type that is fast passing away. He was one of the last of a race of ministers who have left their mark upon Highland character. 'The old order changeth, giving place to new,' but those who imagine that the old was feeble or unsuited to its time are entirely mistaken. In a broader sphere, mingling with a larger world, men like Mr. MacColl would have attained distinction, and left a more abiding reputation. But they served their generation in the place which they occupied, and no man can seek a better record."

Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, the "philanthropic millionaire," was recently described by Miss Frances E. Willard in The Union Signal. On the death of her husband in 1867, this New England lady found herself with an income of 75,000 dollars a year at her absolute disposal. Large-hearted and highly intelligent, she chose to be the almoner of her own bounty, and now she spends each month all the money she receives. Needy individuals are helped in many ways, and organisations of various kinds are likewise assisted. Moreover, education, temperance, and social progress have an earnest and liberal patron in Mrs. Thompson, whose life-motto is thus characteristically worded: "In things proven, unity; in whatsoever can be doubted, free diversity; in things not trenching upon others' rights, liberty; in all things, industry, frugality, and charity."

Mr. Spurgeon, writing to an English friend, says:—"I am very much better; have been out for several rides. I am very weak; voice feeble, knee painful, &c.; but these will all be vanishing quantities. Eternal love abides." In a letter read at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday last, after mentioning that some of his friends had suggested longer rest, Mr. Spurgeon said:—"Turning everything over with the single eye to God's glory and the permanent good of the church, I can get no further than this—as soon as I can stand through a sermon and walk without pain I will take it as my order home. Soon may the glad token be given me, for I long to be among you after these months of weakness, interset with weeks of pain. All things being thus uncertain, I yet propose to set before me as the desired thing to be preaching among you on February 17. If I improve from day to day, as I now do, this is not too sanguine a hope."

Pundita Ramabai (says The Lend A Hand Monthly) is between two fires. On the one hand, when the Indian Government offers to support her school if she will make it purely secular, she refuses, as a Christian woman should do. She is a Christian, and she means that her school shall be carried on under the auspices of the Christian religion, and with the help of Christian teachers. Surely it is hard that Christian people, on the other hand, shall refuse to sustain the school which has thus loyally refused the benefactions of the strongest government on earth, because, indeed, Ramabai is not in this or that or another denominational organisation. She thinks, and she has a right to say, that the women of India will take an interest in the work of a woman of India, who does not appear among them as a foreigner, which it is impossible to expect that they will take in the work of persons of another race, who come to them from abroad.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

o conspicuously has God owned the endeavours f the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen that raise and prayer might well be, as they truly re, ever the order of the day with those who ave the direction of the increasingly impor- nt interests of the Mission. On Friday last, public meeting for thanksgiving and petition as held in Exeter Hall, presided over by Mr. J. MATHER. Reasons for praise and objects r prayer needed little rehearsal, for the entire rcumstances and condition of the work suggest pendence upon God, as well as constitute a ll to glorifying his name for the great things e has done.

An address of warm sympathy was delivered Rev. J. S. MOORE, vicar of St. George's, reat Yarmouth. Though not personally quainted with the work at sea, the speaker new something of its results as seen on shore, nd he not only declared, but showed by anec- ote and illustration, that the entire tone of the nacksmen has of late years been changed for e better. He was able to testify to souls aving been brought to a knowledge of the ord Jesus Christ through the Mission. He entioned individual cases, and rejoiced at is work of grace among the rough and rdened toilers on the deep. A smacksman cently said to him, "Only a few years ago, was hardly possible to find a smacksman that uld help his fellow to do right; but to-day I arcely ever come across one who would not nder such help." Mr. Moore referred to cases men who have died in the faith of the Gospel, nd expressed a hope that the work would con- nue to be thus abundantly blessed.

The CHAIRMAN said that during the past three ars ten of the Mission workers have lost their es on the deep. In eight cases the bodies beneath the waves, but in every case the en were true followers of Christ. In the nks of the fishermen themselves hundreds ve been drowned during the same period, nd it is gratifying to know that in many cases good testimony has been borne unto them rough their faith.

Skipper Jones, who, with others, was recently ceived by the Queen at Windsor, was pre- nted with his certificate as master of the w Hospital ship Queen Victoria. In acknow- lgment, he expressed a sincere hope that the ip will prove a blessing to many. Mr. Mather ving stated that during last year upwards of 00 cases were treated on board the Mission ips, Dr. Schofield spoke hopefully of the reer of the Queen Victoria, which is admirably pointed for its important work. The cause the Mission was laid before the Lord in rnest prayer, and the season was felt to be ry refreshing and helpful.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on jor Whittle's mission at Clonmel, Ireland.—— n blessing on a mission in the Parish Church, igstock, Northamptonshire, conducted by Rev. derick Hart, of Nottingham.——For blessing eived among the young at recent evangelistic tings at Pollokshields, Glasgow.——By a naval cer, that God would open the way for him to ve the service and become a missionary.——For ssing on Gospel services this week, at Ickleton, mbs.

THE "SHUT INS."—With respect to our re- t note on the "Shut In Society" of America, a respondent draws our attention to a similar iety in England called the "Watchers and iters." It numbers over 500 members (some of m, however, are not invalids, but sympathisers) not only cheer each other under mutual trial, engage in many good works. The honorary retary is Miss Edith Jacob, The Close, Winches- Another friend mentions "The Invalids' xiliary" of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary iety, the tenth annual report of which is full of resting details.

Evangelistic Notes.

Major Whittle and his son have had a fruitful day at Cork, and a good week at Clonmel and Tipperary.

Rev. W. A. Meaton has concluded successful missions in Wareham and Beaminster. The attention of the children at these services has been marked, and results of a most satisfactory nature have followed.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis left Virginia City, Illinois, a fortnight since for a month's work at Stirling, on the borders of Colorado. He asks prayer for blessing upon the preaching of the Gospel there.

Bristol.—Special services were held at Kensington Baptist Chapel, Stapleton-road, from Jan. 6 to 18, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, from Australia. The meetings were remarkably successful in point of numbers, enthusiasm, and results.

Mr. Benson, evangelist of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, has conducted a week's mission in Union Hall, Highbury, which has been much owned of God. Many have been led to decision, especially among the young, while believers have been quickened and strengthened.

Mr. John Protheroe, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a sixteen days' mission in the Congregational Chapel, Cannington. The interest was kept up from first to last. The Gospel was preached with clearness, simplicity, and freshness of illustration, which carried conviction to many a heart.

Mr. W. R. Lane completed a month's work at the "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, on Sunday evening last. Besides addressing the ordinary Sunday and week day services during January, he preached at special gatherings of "waifs and strays," unemployed, &c., and that with great acceptance. Mr. Lane and his visit will long be remembered at the Castle.

Mr. George C. Needham is on a short visit to county Kerry. He will preach in Tralee, holding a union mission there and elsewhere. He commences a special mission in the new Baptist Chapel, Dublin, on February 10. Both Mr. Needham and Major Whittle have succeeded in turning the attention of many Christians in Ireland to the work of evangelising their Roman Catholic countrymen.

Buckhurst Hill.—Last Sunday evening a very interesting meeting was held at Princes' Hall, when five Jewish converts testified to the power of the Gospel. A deep impression was made on the hearers. A ten days' mission is to be held in the hall by two fishermen from Lowestoft—from February 3 to 13. There will be afternoon meetings at 3 for believers, and Gospel services in the evening.

Rochester.—The Baptist Church here (Pastor Rev. G. Anderson Miller) has received much blessing in connection with a week's special services, conducted by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, of West Norwood. Good congregations attended the services. Christians were quickened and stirred up, and some unsaved ones were led to decision. A very earnest spirit is manifest in the church, and the influence of these services will not soon die away.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting special services at Cornelly, South Wales, during the past three weeks. The meetings have been well attended, and blessing is expected to follow the clear and faithful preaching of the Gospel. He has been in Vale of Glamorgan and neighbourhood for nearly eighteen months, during which time wondrous seasons of blessing have been experienced, hundreds having professed Christ. He remains in the district for some months yet.

Loughbrickland, Ireland.—Mr. Edward Peatt, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, has finished a successful series of meetings. On the closing night the hall was crowded out, and a large number stood on the street and heard through the open door the "old, old story." Many professed to rest upon Christ. Mr. Peatt held a series of meetings here in January of last year, which were owned of the Lord in a remarkable manner. A large number of young men are now taking part in prayer and cottage meetings.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has held a series of special evangelistic services in the Church of the Redeemer, Birmingham. As a result, a number of persons have been brought into the realisation of peace in Christ, and there are between thirty and forty, chiefly young persons, applying for membership of the Church. Mr. Hallowes has since concluded a mission at Ebenezer Church, West Bromwich, which is being followed up by the pastor, Rev. W. Kelly.

Bolton.—Great success has attended the special mission services, held simultaneously in all the Methodist Churches in Bolton, and the whole town has been moved. The meetings in all the chapels were times of much blessing. The first day of the campaign (Sunday week) was, says a correspondent of The Methodist Times, a day of splendid triumph. "Early morning prayer-meetings were largely attended and fervently enthusiastic. The young people's services in the afternoon were crowded gatherings, and hundreds of inquirers came out to seek the Lord. The evening services were the great event of the day. Chapels full, congregations eager, and penitents at once springing to their feet and rushing forward at the call of the missioner, were events common to nearly all the places. Hundreds of adult seekers have professed to find peace with God."

Methodist missions are reported from several towns. At Horncastle, Rev. Thomas Cook's services were abundantly blessed. About a hundred and fifty persons definitely professed conversion, and the church there has been greatly quickened. A similar report comes from Alford, where Rev. Thomas Waugh has been holding revival meetings. "The whole town has been stirred." A mission by Mr. Sampson at Faversham, Kent, has been attended by "showers of blessing." Over two hundred persons came forward as anxious for their souls' salvation. At Calverley, Bradford, "pentecostal power and showers of blessing were bestowed" upon meetings held by the district evangelist. Todmorden is enjoying a very gracious visitation. Rev. J. Gawthorp has held a mission there which has resulted in the ingathering of a plenteous harvest. At the service in the evening, on Sunday week, there were a hundred and twenty persons asking the way of salvation. Among the new converts are a number of young men, from whom valiant service for Christ is looked for.

REV. J. P. SUNDERLAND, of the London Missionary Society, Sydney, has had a stroke of paralysis, and, although subsequently somewhat improved, there is no prospect of his being able to resume his duties. Mr. Sunderland commenced his labours as a missionary in the South Sea Islands in 1844. In 1867 he was appointed sole agent of the Society in Australia, an extensive sphere of work, which he has continued to fill until the present illness.

EDINBURGH SABBATH FREE BREAKFAST MISSION.—The new premises have been opened at the foot of Old Fishmarket Close. Rev. Dr. Wilson, of Barclay Free Church, presided over a meeting of inauguration a few days ago, being supported by many prominent citizens. Mr. R. Wilson, the architect, who sketched the rise and progress of the Mission, stated that the desire of the directors is to work in harmony will all existing agencies, seeking rather to help them than to do anything in the way of overlapping. Sir William Muir expressed a hope that the debt on the place, amounting to £785, would soon be paid off, and in the course of the day subscriptions to this end were received, amounting in the aggregate to £130.

THE MILITARY CHURCH IN ROME.—Encouraging fruit of labour is appearing here. Recently, a number of catechumens were received into fellowship, testifying for Christ in a church crowded with soldiers from all branches of the service. The proceedings formed an occasion for a very interesting display of Christian union. Rev. H. J. Piggott presided; an address was delivered by Bishop Cheetham, and prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Prochet, of the Waldensian Church. After repeating the profession of faith, the catechumens joined in a formula, promising to lead a Christian life. On leaving the church, the newly admitted members were each presented with a Bible, as a memorial of their becoming soldiers of Christ. Signor Capellini warmly urged them: "Never part with that holy Book. Let it be your guide, your counsellor, in all the vicissitudes of life."

TWO INSIDIOUS ERRORS.

IT is a glorious truth that all God's children will be in heaven, Rom. viii. 17; but all "must be born again," John iii. 3, to "become children of God," John i. 12. The one specious error is that "all who do not reject Christ are saved," which would mean that all are in actual possession of Christ and have to divest themselves of Him to be lost.

The other prevalent error is that a person being born into a world that is redeemed can't be lost unless by rejecting; but this is putting the person into the position of Adam before he fell; for Adam had communion with God, and had to divest himself of God. If this were true, a person then only by sinning could get himself into the lost position.

How falacious these two errors are when seen in the light of God Word, for Rom. v. 12 says, "By one man (Adam) sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," and "To as many as received Him, to them gave He the right to become the sons of God"—an individual acceptance (positive, not negative) of the Saviour, whereby the believer is made a partaker of the Divine nature, having everlasting life. THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

AT the noon prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday last, Rev. F. W. Baller, of the China Inland Mission, delivered an address on the famine which is now devastating large districts in China, and gave some account of the methods which are employed in distributing relief among the needy millions. The story of the overflow of the Yellow River, followed by the loss of the early crops last year through the drought, is now a tale oft repeated. The more recent aggravation of the desolation and sorrow in the fertile provinces of Honan, Shantung, and Chihli, by deluging downfalls of rain, was listened to with sad interest by those present.

Mr. Coulthard, an agent of the C.I.M., has already organised relief in Honan, whereby some fifteen thousand people will be sustained throughout the present winter. This effort will be supported, and extended endeavours will be made, according as funds are placed at the disposal of the workers. Mr. Baller described in an interesting manner the method of relief, which is rendered comparatively easy by the co-operation of the various village elders, men having government duties. He went on to show that small sums of money may be made to go a long way in China, so that whatever is subscribed will be employed to the very best advantage. On the occasion of the famine in 1877, the workers of the C.I.M. distributed about £8,000. Then the deaths numbered, it is estimated, as many as eight millions. In conclusion, Mr. Baller showed that great spiritual results followed the last famine, and he expressed a firm belief that, in consequence of the present scourge, many will have their confidence in idolatry shaken, and be ready to listen to the message of the Gospel.

Relief subscribed for distribution by the China Inland Mission, 2, Pyrland-road, N., will be made available without delay, by telegraph to Shanghai.

VILLAGE WORK IN SUSSEX.—The Gospel is preached in the open air during the summer months, and in cottages and mission-rooms during the winter. Missions are being established, but the work is in danger of coming to a standstill for want of means. Particulars may be obtained of Captain Moorhouse, care of Mr. G. Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

The Book World.

* Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.

TWO NEW NOTE-PAPERS lie before us: The Ladies' Club Note and The Gentleman's Note, five quires of which cost 9d. and 1s. respectively. The finish of the former is smooth and rich, while the latter is serviceable and strong; each being well adapted to its purpose.

THE STORY OF GENESIS. By Frances Younghusband. 2s. 6d. Longmans. This is Part i. of "The Story of the Bible." It is not a commentary, but a lucid recital. Occasionally there is a broadness of view in which we cannot follow the author; but, on the whole, the work is well done, and the book may be advantageously used by parents who wish their children intelligently to grasp the Old Testament story.

ECHOES FROM THE WELSH HILLS. By Rev. David Davies. 5s. Passmore & Alabaster. We gladly welcome the issue of this very instructive book in this "popular edition," and hope it will be extensively read. It is brimful of interest, alike of a quaint and a serious kind, and many a valuable lesson will be learnt from its perusal.—We also note that Mr. Davies is publishing a weekly series of sermons preached at his Brighton chapel, under the title of "The Holland-road Pulpit." (1d. each. Elliot Stock.)

THE BIBLE IN THE PACIFIC. By Rev. A. W. Murray, author of "Martyrs of Polynesia," &c. 6s. Nisbet & Co. Various and abundant as missionary books and pamphlets are now, this volume covers new ground and fills many gaps. The author, himself an experienced missionary of many years' standing, gives, by the aid of other missionaries, a detailed account of the origin and perfecting of numerous versions of the Scriptures in South Sea dialects. The glimpses of missionary life are most interesting. This able book should be in the hands of all friends of missions, and assailants will do well to study it.

THE GREAT VALUE AND SUCCESS OF FOREIGN MISSIONS. By Rev. John Liggins. New York: The Baker & Taylor Co., 740 and 742, Broadway. A manual of great interest at the present time, although the compilation does not exhibit much care. The testimony of diplomatic agents, consuls, naval officers, travellers, and others, is adduced in proof of the title proposition, and the leading facts and statistics of missions in various parts of the world are briefly given. Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson contributes an introduction. We have read the book with much pleasure, and trust it will help somewhat in furthering "the question of the hour."

FIFTEEN HUNDRED FACTS AND SIMILES FOR SERMONS AND ADDRESSES. By Rev. J. F. B. Tinling. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. It is claimed that this is, on the whole, a new collection of pulpit and platform illustrations, no example having been taken from any preceding book of the kind. Excellent judgment is shown in the selection, and the secondary headings admirably indicate the real points of the paragraphs. The indices—one to subjects, and another to Scripture texts—are unusually full, so that the very useful contents of the book may be applied with facility. Preachers and teachers will do well to secure this volume, which may also be commended to the attention of others who require a fund of Christian anecdote and wisdom.

THE RELIGIOUS CENSUS OF LONDON. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a reprint of the figures and summaries which appeared in The British Weekly shortly after the well-known countings were made. The Church and Chapel census took place on October 24, 1886, and the Mission Hall census on the last Sunday in November in the following year. The figures are admirably set out, and the book has evidently been produced with great care. The lapse of time since the facts were first got together will probably limit the demand for this work; but, nevertheless, many organisers of Christian activity will be glad to possess it, while statisticians will find in its pages much food for serious thought.

A VESSEL UNTO HONOUR. By W. Frith. 1d. Partridge & Co. A letter booklet for the New Year, containing much important and practical instruction.

Evans's Temperance Annual this year is entitled STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL. It contains several original temperance readings in prose and verse. (6d. National Temperance Publication Depôt.)

Mr. John Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row, E.C., has publish two lectures by Mr. S. J. Celestine-Edwards, entit IS CHRISTIANITY A FAILURE?-and ATHEISM A FAILU They are marked by considerable vigour of stateme (1d.)

Rev. J. E. Shephard, pastor of John-street Cha Bedford-row, London, has written a very readable sket of the history of this place of worship, so well kno as being the scene of the labours of the Hon. and R Baptist Noel.

SIX HYMNAL GEMS. 6d. the set. Marshall & Co. The are beautifully designed quarto wall cards with the follo ing hymns: "Abide with Me," "Lead Kindly Ligh "My God, my Father, while I stray," "O God our H in ages past," "Rock of Ages," "Sun of my Soul."

BERTHE DE PARIS. Par G. Appia. 10 centim Paris: Société des Ecoles du Dimanche. An interesti and instructive presentation of the story of the Christi wife of Ethelbert, King of Kent, and the important p she took in the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons in t sixth century.

Messrs. Iliffe & Son, 98, Fleet-street, E.C., have publish a volume entitled THE INDISPENSABLE HANDBOOK TO T OPTICAL LANTERN. It has been compiled and edited W. D. Welford and H. Sturmey, and contains a la amount of information on lanterns, slides, and accesso apparatus. (2s. 6d.)

WOMEN ON WOMEN'S WORK. Messrs. D. Wyllie & S of Aberdeen, have published a Report of the Wome Conference on Women's Work, held in October la under the auspices of the Aberdeen Ladies' Uni Some of the addresses were well worth preservation this collected form. (1s.)

OUR LITTLE DOTS' PICTURE PUZZLES. 6d. Religi Tract Society. Here are twelve cards, chaotically ill trated. It will delight children to cut them up, and p the pieces in order. Moreover, the key contains sugg tions which will enhance the pleasure, and render t occupation quite instructive to the young.

POETIC PHOTOS OF THE CONFESSIONAL. This is No of a series of pamphlets against Ritualism. It conta some vigorous and witty verses illustrative of Romani in Ireland, and Puseyite practices in England. T author is apparently a warm-hearted Irish Protesta well acquainted with modern religious controversi (3d. C. W. Brabner, 150, Kingsland-road, London, E.)

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has made a very useful additi to the anti-infidel literature with which his name associated. The CONVERTED INFIDEL SERIES of trac published in shilling packets of fifty, is devoted to t exposure of Atheism, by means of narratives of instanc in which Gospel light has dawned upon the minds those who had previously been known as Secularis and Infidels. (J. Snow & Co.)

ROCKS AHEAD. By the author of "Maranatha." The people of Australia are warned not to place co dence in man. It is shown that personal union wi Christ is the only safe attitude, in view of the fact th the earth is ripening for God's judgments.—In SEVEN DAY ADVENTISM the same author (Rev. G. W. Gillin shows that those who would observe Saturday as t day of rest overlook developments of the Divine purpo which lie at the root of the subject. (1d. Partridge.)

COMING CONFLICT OF THE CHURCH. By Rev. Samu Garratt, honorary canon of Norwich. 6d. W. Hunt Co. A very thoughtful pamphlet, expounding the Bo of Revelation on historical lines. The claim that the pages give "present truth for the present day" will allowed by all earnest Christian readers, while studen of prophecy, whatever method of interpretation th may follow, will generally agree that many of t independent suggestions which Mr. Garratt has ma are both interesting and important.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY has published so very attractive birthday cards. "Birthday Blessing in packets of four, costing 1s., contain beautiful origi verses by M. S. Haycraft. In packets of twelve for 8 the cards registered No. 19, bear appropriate Scriptu wishes and benedictions. "Birthday Greetings," N 29, four small embossed cards for 6d., are very chas The same house has also published packets of il minated texts, with outlines for painting by you people, twelve for 6d.

Among penny illustrated story-books which may recommended for purity and brightness combined m be named: ROY THE SILENT, a South American Ste by Sydney Watson; DONALD MCDOUGALL'S REVENGE tale of the Covenanters, by James J. Ellis; and FRED PERIL, a tale of Saxon England, by M. E. L. These all recent additions to Messrs. W. B. Horner & So "Penny Stories for the People" series. Two me "Memoirs of Mighty Men" have been published Mr. A. Holness, the one on JOHN BUNYAN, and the oth on ROBERT MOFFAT. These are all illustrated, and s at a penny each.

DR. THAIN DAVIDSON, of Islington, l tured on Monday evening last to the Y.M.C. at Rochdale, and on Tuesday evening at Leed he also addressed young men at Sheffield Wednesday, and was announced to speak to a la gathering of the same class yesterday (Thursd in Manchester. Dr. Davidson has during the p year travelled ten thousand miles, chiefly in t interest of provincial branches of the Y.M.C At the annual meeting of his congregation, l week, however, it appeared that the work at ho does not suffer, the various agencies at Colebro row and the Agricultural Hall maintaining th efficiency.

Letters to the Editor.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—We are now supposed to be in the "Crisis of Missions," and Christians are being stirred up to make sacrifices of themselves and of their purses towards the "evangelisation of the world." If The Christian be a test of the pocket sacrifice, I fear we are not doing much. In your issue of January 18 you received donations for about 120 objects amounting to £493, of these there were donations of about £56 for 17 missions towards the evangelisation of the heathen.

Yours very faithfully,
(Major-General) W. Hatt Noble.
Redhill, Surrey.

MISSIONARY SUPPORT.

Sir,—No one, I think, can complain that the methods of action adopted by the London Missionary Society should just now be subjected to criticism, and it is well that matters are being ventilated in our religious newspapers. Such a discussion should be friendly; and, in order to that, I think it is very desirable that those who take part in it should not shrink from being known. Much has already been made of the salaries paid to the officers of our Society, and comparisons are drawn between these salaries and those paid to the pastors of country churches. Is this fair, when the work required of the officials necessitates their being men who are on a level with the ministers of our leading churches? Surely, a fairer comparison would be the salaries of these two classes, not of the extremes.

Another matter criticised is the salaries of the missionaries. Let me speak for myself. I commenced work twenty-two years ago with a salary of little more than half of what I now receive. That salary was not sufficient to enable me to keep out of debt; nor has there been a time since, when I have found myself able to make any provision for the future. In fact, the few years when I could feel that my expenditure was clearly within my income have been specially happy times. I receive now what would no doubt seem a large salary to some of the struggling country brethren whose churches I lately visited; but, though we live as economically as we well can, and though the school fees of one of my four children now in England are being paid by a generous friend, I shall not be out of debt at the close of this year; and my wife is anxiously looking forward to the time when some of next year's salary can be drawn upon in order to procure needed things for the children at home.

In this case, too, the comparisons made should not be misleading ones. Some time ago a son of one of my brethren obtained a situation in a wholesale store in the town where his father is missionary, and his salary exceeded that of his father. My own boy of nineteen commenced work this year as assistant in a public school in a colonial town, at a salary only twenty pounds less than that upon which I commenced life as a married missionary. He has to pay sixty pounds a year for board and lodging. Last month a storekeeper died here, and his son was asked to reside on the premises as caretaker until the official meeting was held. His idea of a suitable recompense was a pound a day. I sent some work to the smith lately, and though it did not take him half a day to do it, I was charged twenty-eight shillings for the job. I plead that when comparisons are made, they should be of things that can fairly be compared.

Another point is the expense incurred in connection with deputation work in England. Who is responsible for this? I know that when I was at home last year, I always charged third-class fare, and also carried my bag from the stations to my entertainers' houses. Let me give one experience which may not be very exceptional. I was down on the list for Sunday services in a large town, and three week evening meetings in neighbouring villages. A bitterly cold Sunday told upon a weak lung; and, though I managed to struggle through the three Sunday services, I could not possibly do more. One of the two ministers of the town very kindly took the Monday night's meeting, but for the other two meetings another misionary was telegraphed for to London, a distance of about a hundred miles. Our time of service before furlough has lately been shortened, and I am told that this change was partly necessitated by the pressure of the demands made by the churches for missionary deputations. "Unless a missionary goes no money will be given," is what is generally heard. When our brethren complain of the expense of the deputation system, let them remember that the officials at Blomfield-street did not originate the system, nor can they do much to control it; while most of the missionaries of the Society would gladly give up such frequent visits to England if the funds could be raised in some other way.

And then there is the contrast between the economical methods adopted by some new organisations and the very expensive methods of the L.M.S. A quotation from a religious paper just received may suitably come in here. "Of 140 persons who have gone out in connection with Bishop Taylor's African Mission, he reports that fifteen have died, and thirty-four others have left the service. A large proportion of this loss may be charged to two causes—want of care in the selection of those who were sent out, and insufficient provision for their health and comfort after they reached Africa."

I have recently had an opportunity of observing the economical methods of the Salvation Army. During the past month two of the officers forming the Bechuanaland advanced guard have been at my house. Both of them arrived almost prostrate; and in one case the young brother acknowledged that he was suffering from hunger as well as weakness. I wonder if his story illustrates the methods of the Army in other parts of the mission field. He had been suddenly summoned by telegraph to leave a colonial town and proceed to Bechuanaland. His railway fare was paid to Kimberley, and he was told that a certain officer there would help him to go on. He found this officer absent, and he received no help from his own brethren at Kimberley. He found a Boer's waggon on which he could have a passage to his destination, but he had to arrange with the owner to be paid at the end of the journey, as a few shillings was all the money he had, and he needed that to procure food on the road in a country where such food is not cheap. The waggon was laden with cases, and on these he had to lie as best as he could, for the little tent at the end of the waggon was fully occupied by the Boer's family. I heard of the poor fellow arriving at the first station of the L.M.S. "hungry and ready to faint, and without a penny in his pocket," but the missionary entertained him for the day the waggon stayed there, and gave him a little money to buy food. He arrived at my station after a four hours' walk on a hot morning in heavy sand, having left the waggon and come on, in the hope of getting a little food and rest. I could see, when he came to my door, that any but a kindly welcome on my part would have led to a complete breakdown on his; but of course we were glad to receive him for the day, and thankful that we had a comfortable bed to offer him for the night. Both of the men I have mentioned acknowledged that they did not feel fit for work in Bechuanaland, and the last comer especially was confident that he should not stay long.

Now I would take leave to ask: Is this the method which the Congregational churches of the present day would like to see adopted in the case of their messengers to the heathen? Is it either necessary or desirable that such a system should be adopted? Is it not rather to be feared that such a system, so much akin to the barefooted friar's method of olden time, will result in some of its evils? That such a system can result in anything permanent, I should find it difficult to believe. We are now looking forward with some interest to the "drastic resolutions" which a special finance committee at Blomfield-street was expected to propose; and I do not think that the missionaries of the L.M.S. will be found backward in adopting any plans that may be proposed which will be likely to improve the financial position of the Society, and advance Christ's cause in the world. At the same time, I must express my opinion that the falling off in the funds cannot point to an increased interest in mission work in heathen lands. I cannot forget that what is at present lamented is not even a lack of progress, but a decided going back, and this in the face of the manifest signs of increasing wealth which returned missionaries have no difficulty in discerning after every ten years' absence. Handsome churches with luxurious fittings, and larger houses with more expensive furniture seem to have been associated with the giving up of missionary prayer-meetings, a waning of the missionary interest, and a falling off in contributions. When I call to mind some of my varied experience in deputation work, that of one Sunday morning stands out distinctly. A beautifully appointed church, a handsomely dressed congregation, and two evidently well-to-do deacons in the vestry, each of whom thought it incumbent upon him, after shaking hands with the deputation, to say that their people did not like long sermons. No doubt the deputation was wanting in fire that morning, and the collection was very likely a little less than the previous year.—Yours faithfully,

John Brown, London Missionary Society.

FASHION AND CRUELTY.

Sir,—There is a connection between fashion, pleasure-seeking, self-indulgence, and cruelty, not sufficiently noticed, and often ignored by those who show considerable sentimental dislike to cruelty. Fashion must have its bird-ornaments, seal-skins, &c., and the ordinary supply must be supplemented by slaughtering the mother-seals and the nesting-birds, leaving the young to starve. Pleasure must have its excitement, and poor little children are trained, flogged, and broken-in, to do strange, useless feats. Who thinks of the amount of unnoticed horror to humanity, and brutes "behind the scenes" of popular entertainments?

Self-indulgence may not now demand some of the older unmentionable methods of preparing and killing animals for food, but while a pâté de foie gras is imported, or wretched birds and beasts are "crammed" and fed into disease and monstrosities, cruelty is a true charge that many may lay to heart. T. R. H.

"THE CONVERSION OF ENGLAND."

Dear Sir,—Your paragraph in "Notes and Comments," with reference to the Tableaux recently represented, calls most timely attention to that which is, at any rate, a very possible danger.

The right of Rome to "The Conversion of England" is but a part of that arrogant assumption which would claim all our old institutions as peculiarly her own. I have no knowledge of the clergy who took part in this revival of mediæval miracle plays, and can, therefore, express no opinion whether it be as you suggest, "A clever and subtle attempt to pervert England back to Rome." While admitting and deploring the existence of a Romanising party, yet, the instance upon which you comment, I view more as a serious mistake, open to grave misinterpretation. This perversion party to which I refer is in reality opposed not only by "Evangelicals," but by Churchmen technically classified as "High." Indeed, the paper which is peculiarly their organ, had recently a leading article against this Romanising tendency.

Though taking, therefore, a less pessimistic view of the object of the Tableaux in question, I agree with you that such may produce great mischief in the minds of those who have little or no knowledge of church history. Certainly to date "The Conversion of England" from the time of St. Augustine (to whom no doubt, however, honour is due) is to imply that we owe our first knowledge of Christianity to the zeal of the Roman Mission. This, as many of your readers are doubtless aware, is absolutely contrary to fact. May I, therefore, for the strengthening of the faith of those who have not hitherto thought much about the matter, briefly refer to the position of the Anglican Church as regards its absolute independence of Rome?

Whether the good news of "the glorious Gospel of the grace of God" came, as is quite possible, from Paul himself; whether from Claudia, our British princess, or Pudens, her Roman husband; or whether from others moved by the gross darkness that covered our land, it matters not. Well may we be content with the historic fact that a British Church, founded in the Apostolic age, was existent in the second century. Further that British bishops were present at the Councils of Arles, A.D. 314, Nicæa, A.D. 325, and Sardica, A.D. 347, more than two hundred and fifty years before St. Augustine landed, A.D. 597. Among many other proofs, Celtic crosses in England, Wales, Scotland, and particularly in Ireland, bear witness to this day, how false is the loudly reiterated claim of Rome to "The Conversion of England." Never has such been the result of her influence; never will it be, unless, purged of her error, she will declare that "the Church's one foundation is Jesus Christ her Lord."—Yours faithfully,

George F. E. Scott.

BURTON-ON-TRENT Y.M.C.A.—Mr. W. J. Mayger, hon. treasurer, assures us that all the work done here has for its object the salvation of souls. With reference to our recent notice of the annual report, he says that next to nothing has been done outside the higher aims of the institution.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 3.—Genesis XVIII.

THE Lord Jesus is here giving some anticipation of what He is ready to do for all saintly and separated hearts (John xiv. 23; Rev. iii. 20). And Abraham knew well that the High and Lofty One, who inhabits eternity, had come to dwell with him. Others might only have seen three men, but he recognised his Divine Friend, addressing Him as "my Lord" (3). And when the two angels went forward alone to do their awful work in Sodom, there arose high converse between the mortal man so honoured, and his Almighty Friend who lingered still.

(1) Entertainment (2—8).—Abraham was prompt. He lost no time. Twice we are told "he ran"; once, that he hastened. Neither he nor Sarah was unaccustomed to perform the common acts of domestic life. And he insisted on this personal service to his august guest. Oh that we might do all we do for Christ our Lord. The very best was chosen, fine, tender, good. And in such a home the Lord found comfort and rest (4—5). Why should not each heart so open itself towards Him. "Abide with us."

(2) Communion (9—12).—Christ tells his secrets to those He loves (Ps. xxv. 14; John xv. 15). Secrets about their domestic life. The promised son was not only to be Abraham's, but Sarah's also. The mother laughed with incredulity and then denied it. And yet the memory that this mysterious stranger had discerned her laugh through the curtain which concealed the women's quarters must have assured her of his ability to read the future also. The question of ver. 14, is answered Jer. xxxii. 17. Reckon on God's faithfulness and omnipotence. God also can tell his secrets about the world and its destiny to those whom He knows (19).

(3) Intercession.—Amid all the mysteries of God's moral government of men, we must cherish the conviction that he is doing what is right. But we must draw near Him to feel so (23—25). Abraham's faith grew at each answer to his prayers. Thus God leads on our weak hearts to further and yet further flights of trust, till we ask what we had not dared to imagine, but which we would have asked at the first, had we known God better. And even then God does exceeding abundantly.

MONDAY, FEB. 4.—Genesis XIX.

Here is the God of judgment. With the forward He shows Himself froward. And amid the terrors of the scene there are signs of mercy. He simply did at one stroke what must have been the inevitable result of the sin of Sodom. And the blow did not fall until means had been used, both through the deliverance from Chedorlaomer and the words of Lot (7), to turn them from their evil ways. Moreover, Christ said (Matt. xi. 23).

(1) The awful symptoms of depravity.—Before doing anything, the Lord went down to hold a solemn inquest (xviii. 21), and so ver. 1. The angels who had come gladly to Abraham's tent refused Lot's first appeal (2); but were soon made aware that the streets were not safe. When vice walks the midnight thoroughfares, and the sanctity of home is invaded, then be sure that the judgments of God are not far away.

(2) Mercy towards Lot.—How he had deteriorated! At first he only pitched his tent in the vicinity (xiii. 12); then he dwelt in Sodom (xiv. 12); finally he sits in the gate as one of its aldermen (1). But though he had gone up in worldly honour, he had gone back in God's esteem; for He would not come to his home at all, and his servants with great difficulty. A backslidden child—one in whom the good seed had been crushed out by the cares of the world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of many things. Yet God had mercy on him, and saved him so as by fire, while the fabric of his life-work was burnt up (1 Cor. iii. 15). The angels had four hands, and each was full of work (16). Lot left Sodom, yet took Sodom with him.

(3) The example of judgment (Jude 7).—God is love, but He will most certainly punish sin, and we must look on it from our standing-ground with God. Do not look up at God from the burning of Sodom, but down on Sodom from the presence of God (27).

TUESDAY, FEB. 5.—Genesis XX.

What a terrible fall was here! First, in perpetuating an evil compact entered into years before, and which ought long ago to have been cast off (ver. 13). Secondly, in returning to a course of action, which had already proved disastrous (xii. 18). Thirdly, in not believing that nothing could annul the distinct promise of God as to the promised seed. Yet how sweetly did the grace of God step in to avert the evil consequences of the patriarch's fault! And what a delightful assurance there is in the words, "I withheld thee from sinning" (6). Let us claim 1 Cor x. 13; 2 Pet. ii. 9.

See what Abraham was by nature.—The Scripture often draws aside the veil from the character of the loftiest saints, that we may see that originally they were not a whit nobler or greater than ourselves. What they were was due to no native grace, but to the grace of God. Their exploits were entirely due to the power of God, received by faith. And what God did for them, He can do for any one of us who yields entirely to Him.

Learn God's shielding care.—Even though Abraham had seriously deflected from the straight path of obedience, yet God did not let the full results of his evil conduct descend upon his head. He said to Abimelech, "Thou art but a dead man"; and of his servant, "He is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee." God may have to chastise his children for their backslidings, but He will not deliver them wholly into the hand of the oppressor. "The Lord God is a shield." Who is He that condemneth? (Rom. viii. 34).

The stringency of God's dealing with secret sin.—He who has eyes as a flame of fire to detect, has a sharp sword to amputate. Never again did the patriarch fail after this fashion. It was needful to take this vein of sand out of the bed of his character, that there might be a firm platform for the faith which would soon be demanded (xxii.).

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 6.—Genesis XXI.

At last the promise was fulfilled at the set time (2). God never is before his time, or after. As the appointed hour strikes, his messenger stands on the doorstep, the looked-for gift in his hand. Faith may be put to a long test, but never in vain (Ps. xl. 1; Isa. xlix. 23). Meanwhile, look, not at circumstances, but at the word and power of the living God (Rom. iv. 20). And God will keep his word. Then comes the happy laughter of fulfilled hope, which wipes out the bitter memories of the past. When God bids you to laugh, laugh (6; Ps. cxxvi. 1).

The conflict.—Ishmael represents the covenant of works spoken from Sinai; Isaac the promise of grace in the Gospel (Gal. iv. 23). There always has been and will be conflict between these two principles, whether in the world or in the heart (Rom. vii. 7). The law is not sin, but it stirs up our evil propensities, as a pure sunbeam brings out the fœtid odour of a pond. We must therefore cast out the legal principle from our heart, as a method of sanctification as of justification, and give up our nature to the sole indwelling and operation of faith. It is impossible for the two to co-exist.

The tender pity of God.—Are you alone, failing, wondering what will come of your little ones. The bottle of water soon gets spent; you need the fountain of John iv. 10. But if you are on God's plan, as Hagar was (12), God will certainly provide. He has heard. He will open sources of supply where all seems desert (Isa. xli. 18). God listens to the voice of lads when mothers cannot catch a syllable (17). Take heart, the boy of whom you have almost lost hope has already begun to pray. The time of extreme anguish will reveal an earnestness you know not of. Is there not compensation in this?

THURSDAY, FEB. 7.—Genesis XXII.

In this chapter we have an anticipation of Calvary: and we learn the meaning of those words, He spared not his own Son. Though it is clear that God saved his friend from sorrow, from which He did not spare Himself. Jesus died, whilst Isaac lived. God never tempts to sin (James i. 13), but He puts his children to the test, to bring out into clear daylight the good that is in them, and to force them to take up a position which they had never realised, but from which they shall never recede. So did Jesus test the woman of Canaan (Matt. xv. 27). That which can endure fire must go through fire (Num. xxxi. 23). The branch that bears fruit must be purged (John xv. 2).

Abraham's obedience.—It was immediate; God said: Take now, and he arose early in the morning. It was exact; finding place of which God had told him. It was performed in the spirit of worship (5). It was contagious; for Isaac behaved and spoke to his father, after the same manner as his father to God: "Here am I." Everything in the way of promise and blessing (17, 18) depends on our prompt and exact obedience.

His faith.—He did not for a moment expect to return without Isaac. He knew that Isaac was the link of promise, and indispensable to God's plans. If needs were, he would be raised from the dead (Heb. xi. 19), so he told the young men that he and the lad would return to them (5). And such faith could not be disappointed. In the very moment of direst need, the Angel-Jehovah arrested his hand. Do not be surprised if God delay up to the very last moment ere He appears to your help, but He will provide. In the Mount is his deliverance seen (14).

The obedience of Christ (Phil. ii. 8).—Isaac asked, "Where is the lamb?" That question is answered (John i. 29). That fire and knife had their counterparts in the sufferings of our blessed Lord; but He shrank from neither, because it was his Father's will. "They went both of them together." The Lord, like Isaac, bore his own wood; was bound, not by rope, but by iron; made no resistance, and was quiet in his death (Isa. liii. 7). And out of that has come a seed vast as the sands and the stars. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied.

FRIDAY, FEB. 8.—Genesis XXIII.

Sarah was the last relic of that old life beyond the river. It was no common loss when she died; no wonder the aged husband wept. His confession.—Times of great sorrow remind us of the lightness of our tenure of all things earthly and human (4). A confession often repeated in after times (1 Chron. xxix. 15; Ps. xxxix. 12; Heb. xi. 9, &c.)

His business habits.—Ephron proposed to make a gift of it, but the patriarch would only take it as a gift from God, and insisted on paying purchase money (9). And his payment was made before proper witnesses, and with great exactitude (16). It becomes us, as Christians, to be specially accurate and careful in all business engagements, because men will judge of our religion by our precision in such things.

His anticipation of the future.—The patriarch might have taken the beloved remains back to Charran. But he felt sure that his children's children would never go thither; and, on the principle that the graves of the dead mark the homes of the living, he resolved that the burying-place should be in the heart of the land which God had promised to his seed (Jer. xxxii. 8). His faith anticipated the return of his people thither (xv. 16), and until then, in that ancient cave, he and Sarah would await them. Machpelah was the expression of his unwavering belief that Canaan was to become his.

SATURDAY, FEB. 9.—Genesis XXIV.

How important that the children of godly parents should marry only in the Lord (1 Cor. vii. 39). So only can we hope to perpetuate a godly seed (Mal. ii. 15). But those who have long followed the guidance of God may confidently calculate on an angel being sent to bring this desirable issue to pass (7).

A model prayer (12).—As we enter upon a new day, or a fresh engagement, it is always well to ask for good-speed. Good-speed is God-speed. Praying times are not lost times. The reaper does not lose time when he stops to whet his scythe. The old man had learnt to respect his master's piety, and felt it was a sure plea with God. How much more may we utter the name of our Master, Jesus (John xiv. 13).

The answer.—Whilst he was praying, the answer was approaching him, and as he finished, Rebekah stood at his side (Isa. lxv. 24). God often gives his waiting children a sign which falls in with the impression made by his Spirit on their hearts, and indicates his will. So the knock of the servants of Cornelius led Peter (Acts x. 17). Compare the use of the word prosper (21, 40, 42, 56). The sure clue to prosperity is Ps. i. 3.

The answer of the soul to the call of God.—Can you wonder that the old man's visit and invitation sounded as such to the young girl. Her friends persuaded her to delay. But she insisted on an immediate response; she said, "I will go" (58). Then the jewels of her unseen bridegroom hung heavily on her person, the foretaste and pledges of his love, when she should see him, and share his wealth for ever. Thus does the Holy Spirit give us foretastes of our inheritance (Eph. i. 14).

Sunday Afternoon, February 10.

SATAN CONQUERED.

MARK v. 1—20. GOLDEN TEXT: MARK v. 19.

THE scene of this remarkable miracle was "the country of the Gadarenes" (1). But the town of Gadara was several miles south-east of the Sea of Galilee, and would, therefore, be too far inland to suit the details of this incident. The R.V. reads, "Gerasenes." The ruins of the town of Gerasa or Kersa, and traces of the wall that once enclosed it, may still be found on the east coast of the Sea.

There is no miracle concerning which more difficult questions may be raised to which at present no certain answers can be given. It is wiser, therefore, to avoid profitless speculation, and to see in this incident a most conspicuous example of our Lord's power and grace.

A DESPERATE CASE (2—5).—Matthew mentions two demoniacs, Mark and Luke only one. Probably he was the more prominent, and the more desperate case. "Unclean spirit" (2).—Cases of demon possession were frequent in our Lord's day. Was it because Satan was putting forth all his strength to oppose Him who came to destroy the works of the devil? If so, it only made the Saviour's triumph the more complete. "Unclean."—If, as some suppose, this connects his unhappy condition with previous indulgence in sin, as delirium tremens results from drunkenness, then how powerfully we are warned against even the beginnings of sin (3, 5). "Tombs."—"An immense mountain rises directly above Chersa, in which are many ancient tombs."—Dr. Thomson. There were no asylums in those days where maniacs could be kept under proper restraint. The abode of the dead was therefore his chosen dwelling. The other details of the description prove him to have possessed superhuman strength, so that chains and fetters were snapped asunder by him (4). He startled the district night and day by his hideous cries, while inflicting torture upon himself (5). Matthew adds that he was "exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way"; and Luke "that he wore no clothes." What a terrible picture of Satanic influence over men! Except the form and the voice there is hardly anything human left. Even the man's consciousness is so possessed by the demon that it is difficult to say whether he speaks or the demon speaks in him. It is hardly likely that the Saviour ever met with a more desperate case than this. It may serve to illustrate the case of the most desperate and hopeless sinner. Even such are not beyond the Saviour's power.

THE STRANGE DELIVERANCE (6—15).—There were many things strange in connection with this miracle, but all were calculated to serve a wise purpose. "Ran and worshipped Him" (6).—This was strange. As soon as Jesus landed (2), the demoniac ran from "afar off." Was this act of worship that of the man himself, or was the demon constrained to it by the presence of Jesus? Probably the latter. It is a mysterious and awful thought that there are beings constrained to worship Jesus, who yet find his presence a torture to them. The unclean—whether demons or men—cannot endure the presence of the Holy one. "What is thy name?" (9).—If this question was directed to the man, it seems to have been answered not by him, but by the spirit. The answer reveals the man's terrible condition more fully. Not one demon, but a legion, a great number, possessed him. Often the first contact with Jesus serves to bring out more conspicuously a man's sinful condition, and so enhances the value of the deliverance.

The demon's request is even more strange (10—12). There is much in it that we cannot fully understand. Yet it recognises the power of Jesus to send the spirits to a worse torture ("abyss," Luke viii. 31); and confesses that they could not even enter into the swine without his permission. We might be in terror when we think of the demons' power to degrade and destroy man; but we can be at rest when we see the Saviour's authority extending even to them. "He gave them leave" (13).—This is also strange, though not without excellent reason. Swine, under the law, were unclean animals. If these people were Jews, they acted unlawfully in driving such a trade. And evidently they were so debased that they preferred to keep their swine rather than see the demoniac healed. Such people required strange treatment. Was not this a call to repentance? Rob Roy speaks of "a steep so close to the water as to make it sure that if a herd ran violently down they would go into the sea." And so 2000 swine were destroyed in connection with this man's deliverance. That such a desperate case could be healed at all is a marvellous testimony to the Saviour's power; that he was healed in such a manner involved important lessons to the man, to the people, and not less to us.

THE RESULTS OF THE DELIVERANCE (15—20).—The people beheld the change (15). To see the man who had been the terror of the district now sitting, clothed, and in his right mind with Jesus, ought to have been cause for unbounded gratitude. But they needed the lesson which the destruction of the herd was calculated to teach. They thought more of their swine than of that unhappy man, and so they grieved more over the loss of the swine than they rejoiced over the salvation of the man (17). It was a terrible request. It seemed like a deliberate rejection of Jesus, in spite of the convincing miracle He had performed, and evidenced the basest ingratitude. Yet they are not alone. Their guilt is equalled by all those who prefer gain of whatever kind to the Saviour. It is a solemn thought that Jesus answered their prayer (18), and never during his earthly life visited that place again, so far as we can tell. But upon the man the result was very different (18—20). After receiving such a blessing, was it not natural that he should long to be in the company of his benefactor? It is the inevitable result when any man is truly saved. "Jesus suffered him not" (19).—He had other work for him. In grace, He would leave him as a witness to the district which had rejected Him. Every saved person is intended for similar work. The sphere of the witness-bearing is first the home and the friends there; then the district where the previous life was known. "In Decapolis" (20).—Not a single city, but the district of ten cities.

How important was this brief visit of our Lord! The man who, up to that time, had been the terror of the neighbourhood, was left behind him perfectly healed, and a monument of the saving power of Christ. He found him a curse; he left him a blessing. The visit had also discovered the wickedness of this people. The demoniac's dreadful condition was hardly so sad as the base and ungrateful spirit they showed. Yet even this spirit serves to reveal more of the Lord' patience and grace. To them He will send the man to bless them by his testimony. They had returned Him evil for good; He responds by giving more good for their evil.

PARALYSED AND EPILEPTIC.—The annual meeting of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, W.C., was held on the 22nd ult. Every effort is made to help those patients who are unable to help themselves, and it would be a matter for deep regret should the Committee be compelled to curtail their field of labour in consequence of a diminution of income. Full particulars of the Society may be obtained of Miss S. Whitmore, clerk to the Ladies' Committee, at the Hospital, Queen-square, Bloomsbury.

LADY MISSIONARIES FOR PALESTINE.—At the Keswick Convention in 1887, an appeal was presented by Mr. H. F. Bowker from Rev. J. R. L. Hall, Church Missionary Society's missionary at Jaffa, for ten ladies to go to Palestine as honorary missionaries. The whole ten are now there. Four of them have gone in connection with the Church Missionary Society, two in connection with the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, and four in connection with Mrs. Meredith's scheme for a Deaconess House at Jerusalem. Ten were asked for and ten God has sent.—The Life of Faith

DUSTMEN AT TEA.—On Monday week the dustmen, sewermen, scavengers, and watchmen in the employ of the Hackney District Board of Works were entertained at tea by Mr. J. J. Jones at the Homerton Evangelical Hall, High-street, Homerton. The men having been regaled from a bountiful supply, were each presented with a "button-hole," with a text of Scripture attached, and a meeting was then held in the hall, at which Rev. F. R. Blatch, vicar of Homerton, presided, and made a short introductory speech. Mr. J. Lovegrove, chief surveyor to the Hackney Board of Works, followed with a few words to the men. Rev. Frederick Evelyn Gardner, rector of Hackney, Mr. J. J. Jones, and Mr. McMillan also gave suitable addresses. The proceedings were freely interspersed with singing, and they were at length brought to a close after a very enjoyable and, it is to be hoped, profitable evening had been spent.

AN ARABIC JOURNAL.

HAVING made up my mind to publish an Arabic Spiritual and Moral Journal in this poor country, which is in great need of it, and as the printing-press alone, without the type, will cost me £80, I hope the Christian brothers and sisters will help me in making up the required price with as much as they can, and God will reward them with his goodness.—Yours obediently, AISA FARAH.

Received from T. Murray, £2 1s.; W. Mackintosh, 8s.; J. D. Dewar, 10s.; C. C. T. Fagan, 4s.; J. D. Briscoe, 4s.; S. H. Fagan, 4s.; O. Hay, 2s.; S. P. Fish, 8s.; Macleod Brash, 8s.; Maciver Macleod, 8s.; Sir W. Green, £1; W. M. Lewis, £1.

Rev. C. T. Fagan, English chaplain, Tangier, Morocco, has kindly offered to receive any donations that may be given to the Arabic Printing Press.

Tangier, Morocco, Jan. 11.

GAELIC SERVICES IN LONDON.—Highlanders in London will be glad to know that Rev. Gustavus Aird, D.D., Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, will preach a Gaelic sermon on March 3, in the Whitefield Church, Drury-lane. Rev. John Macmillan, of Ullapool, will preach in the Whitefield Presbyterian Church on Sabbath next, February 3.

SEAMEN'S INSTITUTE, ROTTERDAM.—The British Seamen's Institute in this large city is sadly in need of a good circulating library. This port abounds in places of temptation for drinking, gambling, and other vices, and we are trying to make this Institute an attractive centre for good to old and young seamen. Our doors are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. every day, and many British seamen spend their spare time here. Parcels sent to Rev. E. W. Matthews, Seamen's Institute, Mercer-street, Shadwell, London, E., will be sent here by steamer. Please direct fully as below.

J. JONES, Seamen's Missionary.

Seamen's Institute, 113, Boompjes, Rotterdam.

BRIBES IN BUSINESS.—We have more than once denounced the growing practice of giving bribes in order to obtain orders. The subject was discussed at the annual meeting of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association. It was admitted that a dishonest system had crept into the business life of the country, and the evil was very strongly condemned. Mr. George Williams has instructed all his travellers to have nothing to do with bribery. We hope, however, that Christian merchants will go beyond bribery—which is generally acknowledged as an evil—and will try to annihilate the system of "treating," which many good men are, unfortunately, willing to tolerate. Hundreds of smart young fellows have become hopeless drunkards through this habit.—The Young Man.

"STRANGERS' RESTS."—In a penny booklet having this title, and now in its second thousand (Partridge & Co.), Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe asks respecting these institutions: "What are they? How may they be multiplied?" Answering the questions, she briefly recounts the history of the movement for providing Rests for strangers, giving some details of the large amount of blessing which has attended their operation in Liverpool and elsewhere. Men of many nationalities have been benefited both temporally and spiritually, and the need for more such institutions is very clear to those who know their great usefulness. Mrs. Radcliffe has a special word to say to American Christians on the subject of the great immigration, which includes many foreigners, on whose behalf definite endeavours should without delay be made in the great cities of the Union.

AN ENGLISH MISSIONARY SHOT IN CENTRAL AFRICA.—On Thursday last week information was received by cable from the agents of the London Missionary Society at Zanzibar of the death, under very painful circumstances, of Mr. Arthur Brooks, one of their missionaries in Central Africa, he having been shot dead by natives on the previous Monday, at Mkange, close to the coast. Mr. Brooks was returning to England on furlough, and had succeeded in making his way in safety through 500 miles of country, but lost his life when he got into the region which has recently been the scene of much disastrous strife between the Germans and the natives. The news was evidently brought to Zanzibar by one of the porters who saw Mr. Brooks shot dead, and then fled. An eye-witness states that he was killed simply as being a white man, and in revenge for German cruelties.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Lord Chancellor has offered the City living of Holy Trinity, Minories, to Rev. Dr. Samuel Kinns, F.R.A.S., who has accepted it.

Rev. Charles Melville Pym, rector of Cherry Burton, East Yorkshire, died suddenly at his residence, on Saturday morning. He was in his usual health up to Friday. The deceased was a well-known mission preacher, and was formerly in the Army.

Two Church Army evangelists have lately been sent out to India—Captains Perry and Jessop. They have commenced work in Santhalia under the direction of Rev. A. J. Shields, of the C.M.S. They are sent out on very small allowances, but, of course, are never allowed to lack the necessaries of life.

Rev. A. Bernstein, missionary of the London Jews' Society at Frankfort-on-Main, reports with joy the admission of two sons of Abraham into the Church of Christ by baptism. Both are German Jews, and have been diligently studying the written Word of God for a long time, at last being led to put their trust in Him whom to know is life eternal.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale's congregation in Somer's Town, held its annual meeting on Wednesday, last week. The report shows great spiritual prosperity, 263 have been added to the membership during the year. The total number of members on the church roll is now 917.

The London correspondent of The Scotsman says that Rev. John McNeill's advent at Regent-square Church is looked for with a good deal of curiosity. Dr. Oswald Dykes drew his hearers from every quarter of London, and some of these, it is stated, have already ceased to attend the church, and many of the old members are said to express sincere regret at the breaking up of old associations. The immediate neighbourhood of Regent-square will, however, furnish ample scope for missionary efforts without going very far afield.

Mr. McNeill, preaching on Sunday last in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, alluded to his impending settlement in London. Taking for his evening text Luke xix. 1—10, he dwelt with great power upon the work of Christ in seeking and saving the lost, and deduced many lessons from the story of Zacchæus. Mr. McNeill added: In the day when Regent-square Church ceases to be a sycamore tree, into the branches or benches of which poor London sinners may climb to see Jesus, when they expect Him to be passing by, then may God destroy it or take me out of it.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The new buildings at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., have now been completed. Eighteen additional rooms are thus provided.

A new mission-hall at Eccles, near Manchester, in connection with the Congregational Church, of which Rev. H. H. Carlisle is pastor, has lately been completed. Following the opening services, a twelve days' special evangelistic mission is to be held by Rev. W. A. Blake.

Mayer's-green Church, West Bromwich, reports an addition of thirty-five members since the settlement of Rev. T. P. Hookey as pastor in April last; the roll now numbers 252. Efforts amongst the children, and evangelistic work amongst the poor, are carried on with vigour.

Lewisham High-road Church, S.E. (Rev. J. Morley Wright, pastor), reports steady progress and increase, the membership being 850, and the Sunday scholars numbering nearly 2000. The mission work of the congregation has been extended, and the various classes and auxiliaries are well sustained.

Rev. George H. Lea, who went out to Africa in 1887 to join the Lake Tanganyika Mission of the London Missionary Society, but had to return home at once in consequence of his having been completely prostrated by disease immediately after arrival, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the churches at Four Paths and Brixton Hill, Jamaica. He leaves for the West Indies at the end of February.

BAPTIST.

Rev. T. R. Stevenson, late of Derby, arrived in China and commenced his labours as pastor of the Union Church, Shanghai, several weeks ago. Already his ministrations have borne good results.

The Baptist is publishing a symposium on the subject of "Our Dead—Where are they?" Drs. Culross and Clifford have already contributed to the discussion. A paper from the pen of Dr. Bickersteth, Bishop of Exeter, is announced to appear this week.

The annual meeting of the church and congregation of Regent's Park Chapel, London, and the first anniversary of the settlement of the pastor, were celebrated last week, Rev. F. B. Meyer presiding. Reports presented showed that not only have all departments of Christian work in connection with the church perceptibly revived, but that others have been successfully commenced.

A series of united meetings of General and Particular Baptist and Congregational Churches in Leicestershire and Rutland was held in Leicester on Wednesday, January 16. The meetings, says a contemporary, arose out of a growing desire for closer brotherhood and co-operation amongst these sections of the Church. Representatives were present from nearly all the churches in town and country, and the proceedings were characterised by great harmony and enthusiasm, while a tone of deep spirituality was evident through all the engagements of the day.

In accordance with the arrangement made to attach the attendants at the various halls of the McAll Mission in Paris to the churches of different denominations, a Baptist Church has been inaugurated at 133, Rue St. Denis; M. R. Saillens is the pastor.

Colonel J. T. Griffin was introduced as president for the year of the London Baptist Association at its annual meeting last week. Dr. Clifford made mention of a proposed new departure. He said the Association is engaged in mission-hall work, but the thing needs to be enlarged. They want to open some great central hall among the masses of the people, conducted by a man of the people, from which others will afterwards spring. He has the support of many members in this new departure. They need something of this kind to stir up the enthusiasm of the churches.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The last Ulster quarterly meeting, held in Belfast, sent a letter of sympathy to the illustrious and Christian statesman, John Bright.

The twelfth annual report of Pales (Radnorshire) Mission shows the work to be in a healthy state, and progressing. Anne E. Warner, on account of weakened health, is spending the winter at Long Sutton and Somerton, Somersetshire.

The Friends of Newcastle and Sunderland have held a series of Gospel meetings in South Shields, and are establishing an adult school there, which, it is hoped, may sustain missionary work where it is much needed. Charles Dymond, of Newcastle, has taken an active interest in the services.

The Christian Worker gives a very interesting account of the remarkable conversion of an infidel in Des Moines, Iowa, under the preaching of Seth C. Rees and wife. He did not rest till he had apologised to everyone to whom he had spoken sharply, and afterwards decided that himself and family should join the Friends.

Bristol and Somerset quarterly meeting was held in Bristol on the 15th ult., and was largely attended. John T. Dorland was very acceptably present, and has since been holding meetings in the city. Five Bible-readings have been given by him in the Redland Meeting-house to crowded audiences, from twelve to one o'clock daily. He has also had special meetings with young Friends. His very clear and convincing expositions of Friends' specific views of truth have confirmed many. This was specially so in Plymouth, just before his visit to Bristol. What good one consecrated young man may do. John H. Williams and Henry E. Clark, returned foreign missionaries, also addressed Missionary Helpers' Union and foreign mission meetings at Bristol on the 14th ult. They pleaded for more men, women, and money.

METHODIST.

A District Convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held in Willow-street Chapel, E.C., last week. Addresses and testimonies were given and prayers offered, and the meetings were marked by deep spiritual feeling.

Rev. T. Champness from time to time receives interesting and encouraging letters from the evangelists whom he has sent to Shimoga, Madras, and Natal. The men are in good health and spirits, and are addressing themselves to their work of evangelising the heathen with much earnestness and devotion.

A Convention to further the "Forward Movement" in Methodism was held in the Northgate Wesleyan Chapel, Gloucester, on Tuesday, last week, and was well attended by ministers, laymen, and the general public. The proceedings throughout were of a most enthusiastic character, and it is earnestly hoped that the result will be a great impetus to mission work in the district.

At the beginning of January a Primitive Methodist Sunday-school Bible and Prayer Union was started. Cards containing passages of Scripture for each day in the year are issued, and there are already reported nearly two hundred branches formed in different parts of the country, with about seven thousand members. The systematic reading of God's Word by these thousands of young people, and their united daily pleadings at the mercy-seat, are, says The Methodist Times, full of rich promise for future blessing.

The Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, Methodist New Connexion, and United Methodist Free Churches' ministers of Sunderland met together on Monday, last week, to deliberate on the question of a closer union. A conversation took place as to the best methods of cultivating a more practical union, with a view to strengthen and extend the work of God in the different Churches represented, and it was unanimously resolved to form a Methodist Ministers' Union, to meet quarterly. The utmost unanimity and harmony prevailed throughout the whole proceedings, and more united and aggressive work is looked forward to.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. John Smith, of Broughton-place, Edinburgh, has received a call to Claremont U.P. church, Glasgow.

Rev. Dr. Alex. Beith, senior minister of the Free North Church, Stirling, lately attained the age of ninety. He was ordained in 1822.

A public meeting was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on Wednesday evening, last week, to protest against the demoralisation of the native races by the drink traffic. Sir William Collins presided, and many influential gentlemen took part.

By the will of the late Mr. James Smith, of Forbes-road, Edinburgh, upwards of £14,000 falls to be divided among various schemes of the Free Church. To Free St. George's (Dr. Alex. Whyte's church), of which he was a member, Mr. Smith has left £1000 for the poor of the congregation. A sum of £6,000 is to be applied to the building of a new church in or near Edinburgh.

The District Mission, Plantation-street, Glasgow, in connection with Paisley-road Free Church, has re-opened their mission-hall, after repairs and alterations, by a series of evangelistic meetings.

At the quarterly Communion in Trinity Free Church, Glasgow (Rev. J. J. Mackay, minister), fifty-six communicants were welcomed, many of these being the fruits of congregational evangelistic work. The additions for the past year number 199.

DEATHS.

Rev. John Stock, vicar of St. George's, Chorley, Lancashire.—Rev. Robert Fiddes, for fifty-six years a minister of the Church of Scotland.—Rev. J. T. Carno, an ex-moderator of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church.—Mr. John Wear, an elder of Market-place Presbyterian Church, Whitehaven, and an earnest worker in the Gospel.—Rev. Charles Pratt, incumbent of Stanstead St. Margaret's, Ware, Herts.—Mr. Daniel Cook, senior deacon of the Baptist Church, Markgate-street, Dunstable.—Rev. James Nicolson, dean of Brechin, Forfarshire.—Rev. Alex. McColl, Free Church minister of Lochalsh, N.B.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

LAUSANNE.—The January prayer-meetings were very helpful. They were in French, German, and English.

NEW CALEDONIA.—Le Christianisme gives some account of the painful, though certainly not hopeless, work of Pastor Lengereau in this French penal settlement. Some three or four hundred criminals of various classes receive attention at the hands of the pastor, who also visits the other inhabitants of the islands. M. Lengereau's situation is very uninviting, and the difficulties in his path are many, but evidences of blessing encourage him, and his faithful labours cannot but prove fruitful.

THE BLUE CROSS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY has come under serious suspicion in Eastern France through its representative having celebrated the Lord's Supper in a coffee tavern with unfermented wine in the town of Montbeliard, Doubs. This act, said to be in violation of the rules of the Society, has given rise to apprehension that a new religious sect is in formation. On hearing of the circumstance, Pasteur Dieterlen resigned the presidency of the Society. Demand is, however, being made for such action as shall correct the offending agent and reinstate the Society in the confidence of the Protestant churches.

ANOTHER EGYPTIAN PYRAMID ENTERED.—Mr. W. M. Flinders Petrie has at last accomplished the difficult task of forcing an entrance into the sepulchral chamber of the pyramid of Amenemhat III., at Hawara, in the Fayûm. It took skilled masons three weeks to cut a small vertical shaft through the roof of the chamber. Once in, the true entrance was soon discovered, and it proves to be by a long subterranean passage. The pyramid was found to have been plundered long ago. The chamber is all but monolithic, the weight of the block of stone being estimated at from one to two hundred tons.

AGGRESSIVE BUDDHISM.—An attempt is being made to improve the condition and prospects of Buddhism in Japan. Schools have been founded, and other aggressive steps taken; but in Kioto the endeavour has taken the form of a missionary magazine in the English language. The new organ has the curious title of Bijou of Asia, and in its pages Christianity is denounced and said to be declining, while Buddhism is described as appropriate for Western peoples, and reasons are urged for its world-wide acceptance! We regret to learn that persons living in the United States have contributed to the magazine.

PERSECUTION IN RUSSIA.—Not only has Colonel Pashkoff been banished from his native country for embracing and preaching evangelical truth, but his trusted servant, Basil Kirpitchnikoff has learned even more sadly what it means to declare for the pure Gospel of Christ in preference to the Greek Church and its corruptions. Kirpitchnikoff by no means made himself offensive to his neighbours of the Orthodox faith, but simply told those around him that he no longer revered images or believed in the intervention of the saints. False witnesses, however, rose up against him, and, being condemned by the ecclesiastical tribunal, he was sent to Siberia in chains. There he remains, but with a consolation of which his enemies are deplorably ignorant.

LETTERS TO THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES.—Just now multitudes of girls of all ages are for the first time engaged in theatres; should not these have a special claim? The thousands already reached thus each month by the Theatrical Mission greatly appreciate the missives of some 1380 ladies. Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd appeal to their present helpers to increase the number of cases entrusted to them, and may God move many another also to write to the members of Macready House, that all may thus hear the good news of salvation. All communications should be addressed: Theatrical Mission, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.

THE

PEOPLE'S BIBLE UNION, 1889.

BRANCH FOR MEN, YOUNG MEN, AND WOMEN.

This Union is arranged in short passages especially adapted to the capacity of our working people; and is an attempt to get them into the habit of daily Bible Reading. It is suitable for members of Men's, Young Men's, and Women's Bible Classes; Mothers' Meetings, Sunday Morning Schools, and Domestic Servants. Will those interested in any of the above who would like to have a specimen Calendar, containing the Daily Passage and Practical Notes upon the Passage, send a stamped envelope, with address, saying which Branch is required, to

SPANISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

MISSIONARY SUPERINTENDENT OF THE WHOLE FOREIGN WORK—

The Rev. WILLIAM MOORE, M.A., of Puerto Santa Maria, near Cadiz.

THERE are three centre stations, viz., Cadiz, Seville, Huelva, where are missionary pastors, who in addition to their own congregations of Spanish people, carry on evangelistic work in these towns, and missionary itineracy as far as possible in adjacent towns and villages. In these centre stations we have Sabbath Schools, and separate daily schools for boys and girls, with male and female teachers. The boys' school in Huelva is, however, supported and conducted by the English in that town, our Missionary Agent, Señor Jiménez, giving the religious instruction.

In Escornar, Province of Granada, we have Don Juan Ruiz Lopez, Teacher of Day and Night Schools, and Evangelist. Through the evangelical labours of this humble man, the Romish Church is almost defunct in the place, and the priest and his helpers can only get a few old men and women to attend the services. We have also Minor Missions at VILLAFRANCA, PUERTO REAL, EL CARPIO, and THARSIS, which have no placed Evangelist, but are ministered to by adjacent Missionaries.

To the above-stated agencies maintained by this Mission, we must add the work of supplying Spaniards and Portuguese visiting some of our seaports with the Scriptures and evangelical tracts. Many thousands also of Tracts and Gospels are sent from Edinburgh direct to Spain and Spanish settlements.

The whole expenditure for the evangelical work now described, together with all the expenses in raising the funds and in management, amounts to about or under £1,800 yearly. On this moderate expenditure all these extensive agencies are being carried on.

The Rev. Daniel R. Kilpatrick of Glasgow having, in the summer of 1887, undertaken a mission of inspection to this Society's stations in Spain, sent us after his return home a deeply interesting account of his experiences in our mission field. It is now embodied in an Occasional Paper, and can be had free on application to Mrs. PEDDIE.

Contributions in aid of the yearly income of this important Society are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Mrs. PEDDIE, 8, Granville Terrace, Edinburgh, Secretary and Treasurer of the Spanish Evangelisation Society. Cheques and Post Office Orders made payable to MARIA DENOON PEDDIE. Contributions will also be received in England by DONALD MATHESON, Esq., 120, Queen's Gate, London, S.W.; ROBERT INNES, Esq., 6, Adelaide Road, Brockley, S.E., Kent; and by the Rev. HORACE NOEL, White Rose Grange, Woking Station, Surrey. Also by all COLLECTORS and LOCAL TREASURERS.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA—CASE AT LEYTONSTONE.

On August 23 last, I was consulted by Mrs E. JONES, of 23, Forest Drive West, LEYTONSTONE, Essex.

Twelve months before coming to Coombe Lodge, Mrs. Jones had an attack of pneumonia, which was followed by a cough—which she did not lose; and this was followed by bronchitis in the early spring, which assumed the chronic form, and became bronchial asthma.

At this time the cough was very bad, the expectoration tinged with blood, and the breathing short. She had begun to lose flesh, and was becoming weaker daily. She had been under two doctors prior to this.

I received a letter from Mrs. Jones on Oct. 18, in which she says:—"I scarcely know how to thank you enough for your invaluable medicine. I was very ill, and had suffered for many months. I am now quite well and strong. It is a surprise to every one, and I have recommended you to all my friends. You are at liberty to make any use of this."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

CRUELTIES IN MATEBELELAND.

IN The Bechuanaland News of December 13, there is a report of some statements made at Vryburg by the Bishop of Bloemfontein, on his return from a tour through the Bechuanaland Protectorate, and other parts of the interior south of the Zambesi, which are said to be within the sphere of British influence. After telling of the success of his journey in acquiring the knowledge he desired, he says:—

"If by any accident the Matebele people were forced up on to the banks of the Zambesi, there is no knowing what the fearful consequences will be. They will then introduce into the new tribes and nations with which they will be brought into contact a system of slavery, compared with which I consider all the slavery which has ever taken place in Central Africa is as nothing. I have never heard, read, or conceived of such a system of cruelty as is carried on by that nation. I am told that in the Mashona country thirteen different Matebele impis (bodies of warriors) have gone out this year. I do not wish to enter into the details of the devastation wrought by these impis; they are sickening and horrible. I am told they never leave a baby alive in the Mashona settlements they go to. I was at a village this year which another traveller had visited some little time before, when he mentioned that the whole place had been wiped out. When I got there this year I saw that the poor creatures had evidently come back again. Their little plots were made ready to grow the rice, their huts were being erected once more, when the Matebele swept down upon them for the second time that year and hardly one escaped. Not one was living there when I reached the place.

"The horror of a bloodthirsty nation existing and practising their inhuman cruelties here, close to our borders, seems to me intolerable. With the Matebele I have nothing to do. All that I have to concern myself with is that there is a nation called the Mashona, a gentle, industrious, and skilful people, being cut off, man, woman, and child, with no chance of escape and no hope of succour; that their slaughter went on last year, and will go on again this year, beginning in two or three months' time, and there is no refuge, no help. I do not say that England ought to and must interfere, but I do say this—that it would be an act of which England might be proud for ever, if she would exercise a proper protection over that unfortunate country from any people which might wish to reign over it."

London Lock Hospital & Asylum,

HARROW ROAD, W.

DURING the past six months, more than half the Inmates of the Lock Hospital have definitely decided to give up their former sad lives, and have been either restored to their friends, or received into the Lock Asylum, or some other Home.

Will not you help us in seeking "to save that which was lost"?

The Son of Man came "not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

£5,000 is urgently needed, to clear off old and long-standing debts.

This Hospital has no investments, no endowment, and no Government support.

Patients are admitted from all parts of the country.

Treasurers:

THE LORD KINNAIRD and ROLAND Y. BEVAN, ESQ.

Bankers:

Messrs. BARCLAY, RANSOM & Co.

Secretary:

URGENT APPEAL

ON BEHALF OF

The ISLAND & COAST SOCIETY of IRELAND.

ESTABLISHED 1833.

Patrons:

HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN;

THE LORD BISHOP OF CORK; AND THE LORD BISHOP OF KILLALOE, &c.

THIS Society, formed for the Education of Children and promotion of Scriptural Truth in remote parts of the Coast and adjacent Islands, mainly supports Forty-one Schools. Seldom have more pressing appeals beset the Committee. Help for Scriptural Schools is urgently needed in the remote and thinly populated parts of the Country. Local aid is all but gone through failure of rents and the existing agitation. The clergy in these parts, perplexed as to how to maintain their little "Forts of Truth," where children of the loyal and patient Protestant poor are instructed in the way of Life, earnestly look to this Society; and its Committee, with a similar anxiety, look to those whom God has blessed with peaceful homes and means to aid them in their work.

The Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe writes November 17 1887:—

"The Island and Coast Society for Ireland has rendered true and valuable aid to poor and remote parts of the diocese of Raphoe, for which we are very grateful."

The Lord Bishop of Cork, at the last Annual Meeting, says:—

"In his own diocese fifteen schools were supported by this Society, and he was there that day to express what he felt, that the work of this Society had been of very great benefit and advantage to those distant and remote parishes."

Contributions will be most thankfully received by the Secretary, the Rev. C. W. FLEURY, M.A., at the Office, 30, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin; or by the Rev. D. HOLDEN (Hon. Sec. for England), Mickleham, Dorking, Surrey.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

NINE Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year nearly 4,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

IS GOUT CURABLE?

THE following statement is so complete in the evidence it bears to the power and usefulness of Magnetic Treatment, that no comment can add to its worth. It is, however, admissible to remark that it is an isolated case, and the value of this method of treating Gout has been as strikingly illustrated in many similar instances.

Mr. HENRY WARNER, Wormley, Herts.

"Eighteen months ago a stiffness in my limbs and joints gradually but surely increased from day to day without apparent cause, until it prevented me from leaving the house; I could not get up and down stairs, could not leave my room, could do little or nothing for myself, and at length the assistance of a trained nurse became necessary to assist me to move in bed. My doctor prescribed remedies for outward and inward use, but I grew worse. My feet and hands became swollen out of all recognition, and my joints so painful that I could not sleep more than an hour and a half at a time; my breathing and speaking were affected. In May of last year I was carried from home helpless with Rheumatic Gout; I gained some strength and was able to travel to a Hydropathic Establishment in the North of England and take a course of Turkish Baths. These afforded no permanent relief, though I was invigorated by the mountain air, and in July was able to travel to and from business in London for a while. I tried Electric Baths and consulted other physicians with partial benefit, and was able to get about until October, when all the former symptoms set in again with increased severity. Lumps (presumably chalk) formed in various parts of my body—on the lower part of my spine, on the bones of my arms, about my knee-caps and hands. Again I was helpless, and needed the assistance of a nurse in everything. I could not walk or raise my hand to my head; I could not sleep for pain, even with strong doses of morphia; I could not eat, and hated the sight of food; neither doctors nor nurse seemed to know what to do.

"My son visited you on my behalf, and, for your guidance, I described my symptoms as best I could. You advised me to adopt one of your Odo-Magnetic Waistcoats with the use of Magnetic Gloves, saying that I might expect to feel some alleviation in six months. Glad to avail myself of any remedy, I adopted your suggestion, though I had less faith in it than in the many I had tried before, but which had all failed, though recommended as infallible.

"The result will, I am sure, be gratifying to you. My appetite began to return: I felt better in myself; my strength was renewed, breathing better, and sleep refreshing; day by day I gained ground. In January I was able to leave home for the South of England. I began to walk a little, and in spite of the cold, snowy weather of this spring, continued to mend until now, twelve months after adopting your Treatment—without medicine of any kind or attention to diet—I have so far recovered as to enjoy walking twenty miles in the day, and am able to play lawn tennis again. The chalky formations have entirely disappeared, and I am hoping that the little stiffness still remaining in my fingers may continue to decrease, and that I may yet prove 'a perfect cure.'

"What have I done to effect this cure? I have for months past abandoned all medicines, taken no special baths, or paid any attention to diet, but I continue to wear your Waistcoat. I recommend your simple Treatment. I don't know how it acts, but I know that since I adopted it I have gone on improving when everything else has utterly failed, and it looked like being crippled for life. I may add that variations in the weather and temperature do not appear to affect me, nor do I take cold. I shall continue the use of the magnets, and regard them as very good friends with whom I should be sorry indeed to part. You may refer any inquirers, suffering as I have done, to me for my experience of your harmless but potent remedies."

Mr. Garratt advises gratuitously through the post or in personal consultation, and every inquirer submitting the description of a case may reckon upon a thoughtful and candid reply. Information upon the treatment of any complaint may be had free by post. B. COPSON GARRATT, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

Fifth Thousand.

From Footsteps of Truth:—
"Mr. Meyer writes with all the warmth of one who tastes, handles, and feels the Word of Life. In this book he stretches out a loving hand to his fellows in the Christian course, eager to help them in the pathway of holiness."

From The Christian Commonwealth:—
"Every page is full of stimulating thought for Christian workers; and we heartily commend its earnest admonitions, and cheering appeals for a higher life. From beginning to end it is a live book; and is worthy of a place in every Christian library."

ELIJAH:

And THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

Sixth Thousand. Nine Original Illustrations.
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Rock:—
"The lessons to be learnt from the life of this prophet are well drawn out and emphasised in the pages before us. . . . Mr. Meyer's language is clear, forcible, descriptive, and interesting; his doctrine is always pure and elevating."

From The Presbyterian Messenger:—
"This is a most stimulating book. It sparkles with heavenly light, and glows with heavenly fire from beginning to end. We honestly and heartily recommend it."

ISRAEL:

A PRINCE WITH GOD.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

With full-page Illustrations of the RIVER JORDAN and JACOB'S WELL. Sixth Thousand.
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled bds., gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Baptist Messenger:—
"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life; and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the readers some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."

From The Sword and Trowel:—
"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical."

ABRAHAM:

Or, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

With NINE Illustrations Specially Engraved for this Work.

"This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from its perusal without feeling consciously strengthened in God and inspired afresh for the godly life. Our teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the sacred Word."—Gospel Magazine.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 20,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY

By A. L. O. E.

With Attractive Frontispiece in Colour.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"We have walked through 'PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY' with great pleasure, admiring the chaste productions of a rich fancy, and the skilful interweaving of the moral with the picturesque. We would recommend our readers to follow our example."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Percival is a bright, gifted, true-hearted young artist. His 'PICTURE GALLERY' consists of representations of Scripture incidents from the Old and New Testaments, which are here delightfully narrated, and no less clearly expounded. For the young the volume will prove deeply interesting and instructive."

The Baptist Messenger.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY BIRTHDAY BOOK.

With Beautifully Illuminated Frontispiece.

Presentation Editions: Morocco, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; rich coloured leather, padded, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read as BOGATZKY'S "GOLDEN TREASURY." In addition to the issue of BOGATZKY in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition, ARRANGED AS A BIRTHDAY BOOK, a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "BIRTHDAY" Edition four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty, or thirty-one blank square spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries; consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to OVER FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

Cheap Edition: Cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

MORGAN & SCOTT'S COMPLETE EDITION.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF EARLY CHRISTIAN AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD. With Frontispiece Engraved on Steel, and Twelve Full-page Illustrations.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"This is a new edition of Foxe's useful and standard work. It is a most masterly exposure of what Popery really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery could find no place where 'FOXE'S MARTYRS' is studied.—Christian Progress.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

For the last year a Technical College to supply a course of training in the Domestic Arts to Gentlewomen over the age of sixteen has been carried on by Miss Forsyth at 1A, Victoria Square. The course of training has comprised instruction in dressmaking, millinery, cookery, household management, and domestic economy, fine laundry work, upholstering, book-keeping, hygiene, and finance.

Over 120 students have attended the classes, and the need for technical instruction is being widely felt and expressed, numerous letters having been received from all parts of the Kingdom approving of the scheme.

This Company has been formed to take over the College from Miss Forsyth, and to carry it on in the name of "The Forsyth Technical College Company, Limited," upon the same general lines it has hitherto been carried on by her.

Miss Forsyth will occupy a place as Managing Member of the Council, and take an active part in the supervision of the College.

It is proposed to remove the College from its present inadequate premises to a larger and better house in a central position, with accommodation for resident students.

According to prepared estimates, the fees from eight resident pupils and an average of twelve day pupils at each course of lectures will cover the annual expenditure. It is anticipated that these numbers, especially those of the day pupils, will be largely exceeded.

Nearly one-half of the required number of Shares has been already taken by the Council and their friends, and applications for the remainder are now invited. As it is estimated that £3 per share will be required for the purposes of the Company at once, that amount is payable on application.

A copy of the Memorandum and Articles of Association can be seen at the offices of the Solicitors to the Company. Also of the Contract with Miss Forsyth.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained from the Company's Solicitors, or from the SECRETARY, at the Offices, 1A, Victoria Square, S.W.

ASHLEY MISSION, Bethnal Green, E.—Assistance is earnestly asked for, to maintain this Mission. Large Mothers' Meetings. Classes for Factory Girls, for Men and Lads. Sunday-school. Band of Hope. Tract distribution and Temperance work. All in efficient working order. Cast-off Clothing thankfully received, and the smallest contributions.—Miss BONTEIN, 22A, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, W.

Educational.

LONDON.—First-class education for the Daughters of Gentlemen in an establishment of long standing, conducted by members of the Church of England, occupying a spacious house in a most healthy locality in the West-end. The pupils have the advantage of loving care and safe training while pursuing their studies under first-rate professors; their health, individual temper, and disposition carefully and tenderly watched over, and the whole system based on Christian principles. DELTA, MacLaren's Library, Notting-hill-gate, W.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Signor Gavazzi.

The title of Mr. Francis Peek's article, "Ideal Sabbaths," in the current Contemporary Review, noticed elsewhere, is derived from the following modern "Society" view and ancient Scripture views of the Sabbath:—

The Ideal Sabbath of the Materialist.—"There is a club for the express purpose of driving to Richmond on Sundays: on returning one need not be bored, for there are plays and Sunday dances; some of the best 'hops' of the season have been on the Sabbath, to say nothing of the charming entertainments at the Gaiety. There is now no need to retire to bed early, morose and melancholy that there should be such a day in the week as an old-fashioned Sunday."—Society Journal.

The Ideal Sabbath of the Israelite.—See Deut. v. 13 and 14, and Exod. xxiii. 12.

The Ideal Sabbath under the Prophets.—See Isa. lviii. 13.

The Ideal Sabbath of the Christian.—See Matt. v. 17, and Mark ii. 27 and 28.

The New York Herald, with its London Sunday edition, will certainly contribute to the realisation of the "Ideal Sabbath" of the Society journal, and to the further desecration of the Ideal Sabbath of the Old and New Testaments.

A lady in the Isle of Wight writes to us:—

I wish to thank the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN very much for the insertion of such splendid notes on Genesis, and also for papers on Hebrews, which are carefully studied each week for the purpose of reproduction in a class.

We have received other expressions of appreciation, for which we cordially thank the writers.

There is an alarming increase in unblushing rationalistic interpretations of Scripture among professing Christians, calling for constant watchfulness on the part of Christian parents and guardians of the young. There was enough of this poison in one of our contemporaries last week to inflict irretrievable damage on ardent and impressionable minds, with no attempt to supply them with some positive substitute for that which was wantonly assailed. The following items occurred in successive columns: the devil, an idea borrowed from the Persians during the exile in Babylon; the Book of Jonah, an example of the humour of God; the probability of Universal Restoration; sneers at laymen, whose suspicions of this new teaching is great in proportion as their knowledge of the evolution of theological thought is small. Our only hope is that this kind of thing will cure itself, and that earnest Christians will the more readily see and avoid error when clothed in such glaring colours.

We should not question the evolution of anything that was in Scripture, but we are very suspicious of what modern theologians evolve from their own cogitations. We are not at all confident that "the survival of the fittest" is a true law in relation to human interpretations of the Word of God; for what may seem "fittest" in the judgment of men may prove to be abomination in the sight of God.

Two contradictory facts are spoken of in the columns of religious journals. On the one hand, the meagre attendance in the second of the two Sunday services in Scotland is represented as "really becoming serious." The same is true of many towns in England. But, on the other hand, we know of evangelical clergymen who, on the most unobtrusive announcement, can secure a full church of working men on a Sunday afternoon. Has not a restricted pew system much to do with the difference? Why should a seat-holder regard his pew in a place of worship as a man does his castle, so that it is as much held to be his in his absence as in his presence? The restriction and reserve around seats in churches and chapels has much to do with meagre attendances.

An amusing American story is told by Mr. Sankey to this effect. A seatholder found a stranger in his pew. Taking his seat, he wrote, "I pay for this pew," and handed it to the intruder. The other wrote back, "How much do you pay?" "So many dollars a year." To which the Massachusetts man replied, "It's a comfortable pew and worth the money; I'll stay where I am."

We regret that, in referring to Mrs. Raban in our issue of January 4, we made the mistake of attributing to her the hymn commencing, "Quicken, Lord, thy Church and me." This hymn was, we believe, written by the late Benjamin Gough. The hymn we should have named as by Mrs. Raban commences thus:—

Interceding Lamb of heaven,
Advocate before the throne,
Through thy mighty intercession,
May the Comforter come down,
And the riches
Of thy boundless love make known.

The following was also written by her as "a Revival Hymn for the New Year," 1860:—

Now, with the opening year,
O Lord, thy grace display;
Our supplications hear,
Revive thy work we pray;
With saving power, Lord Jesus, come,
And make our fallen world thy home.

And this is the first verse of another:—

Before the glorious mercy-seat
Of their ascended Lord,
The early Church of earnest souls
Appear with one accord,
Pleading with fervent heart and voice—
Panting with strong desire—
Expecting with unwavering faith
The Spirit's hallowed fire.

It was a true word of Dr. Parker, in his talk last week to working men, that mere scholarship in Christianity had made a "puzzle of the heart of God." If ordinary hearers will not come out to a second service on a Sunday, might not preachers put aside the intellectual sermon prepared for them, and fall upon a strain of sincere and fervent talk for the common people? They would probably find that the absentees began to come if popular address as from man to man were substituted for the sermon that is redolent only of the study.

The third of these conferences with working men, last Monday, was chiefly noteworthy because of Dr. Parker's unqualified advice as to the disestablishment of the public-house. If he can induce our sons of toil in London to boycott the brewer and the publican he will earn the eternal gratitude of the community at large.

The British Weekly, having completed its articles on "Tempted London," is now giving a series of articles on "Unknown Paris." They are of a very informing character, and likely to prove useful.

Few things better serve the truth than the carrying of theological negations to their logical issue. In a course of sermons now being preached by Rev. John Hunter in Glasgow on the "Beginnings of Religious Beliefs," there has been one against the belief in a powerful evil personality outside of man exercising influence upon him. The belief was put down to the cabalistic interpretations of Jewish Rabbis after the Captivity, and the use of the common phraseology in the New Testament was attributed either to the accommodation of Christ to popular delusions, or to errors of the Evangelists. This would make valueless one half of the synoptical Gospels, and such notions have always and inevitably opened a pathway to utter infidelity. Surely there are theologians in Glasgow who are equal to expostulate with this superficiality of rationalism.

Our civilisation is developing a large class of persons who from first to last are not sure of a meal or of the common needs of life. Our statesmen, because they know no remedy, take care to have as little to do with the matter as possible.

These words, from an address delivered by the Archbishop of York at the recent annual meeting of the York Association for the care of Young Girls, seem almost commonplace, so familiar have we become with the facts to which reference is made. The Archbishop went on to prophesy that this question would be the agony and the struggle of the next generation and of generations after that. We are unable to admit, however, that no solution of the terribly difficult problem has yet been suggested. If the laws of political economy have been tried and found wanting, the Divine laws proclaimed by Jesus Christ are sufficient for this as for every other human difficulty and wrong. The more the teachings of the Saviour in respect to social relationships and duties are impressed upon the hearts and consciences of individual men, the less likely will it be that the settlement of vexed questions between capital and labour, and wealth and poverty, will be postponed for generations.

The publication of the results of the recent annual collection in Dublin places of worship for the "Hospital Sunday Fund" again brings to light the unpleasant fact that the Roman Catholic Chapels did not contribute in any way to the sum of £4096 collected, although the vast majority of those who benefit from the fund are Romanists. This says little for the Roman Catholic population of the Irish metropolis, but it says less for those who guide the flocks.

Colonel North, of Eltham, in Kent, has set a good example to millionaires. He recently presented Kirkstall Abbey, which cost him £10,000, with adjacent lands, to his native town of Leeds, as an additional recreation ground. He has also given £5000 to the Leeds General Infirmary, and substantial sums to other Yorkshire institutions. In acknowledging the honour of the freedom of the town which had been conferred upon him, Colonel North said in acknowledgment, "What is the use of having money if it is not spent in the way it should be?"

We should like to see an Association of Christian Shareholders in Railways, formed with a view to practical action as to the grave evil of overwork upon some of our leading lines. The receipt of large dividends upon capital invested in lines on which men are compelled to toil many hours per day, involves grave responsibility. That the dividends are not infrequently drawn from such toil is shown by the statement that on one line during the last month nearly 1500 men had to work eighteen hours at a stretch, and no fewer than 5958 were on duty from fifteen to seventeen hours. That much of this labour was done on the Sabbath adds greatly to the pain with which such statistics must be perused.

Those who work in barrack towns frequently become aware of the misery which girls bring upon themselves by marrying soldiers who are not "on the strength" of their regiment. The real facts in relation to these matters cannot be too strongly impressed upon young women. A recent letter from Lieut.-Colonel Gildea, in the Dublin Express, gives particulars as to the misery of women and children "left behind" by men embarking on foreign service. These details are distressing in the extreme. Help is needed, not in the way of funds, for these are forthcoming as the cases are discovered and made known, but in the direction of "representatives to look after and see to the wants of those whose husbands are abroad." If any of our readers are willing to be useful in this work, Lieut.-Colonel Gildea, of the "Soldiers' and Sailors' Families' Associacion," will be glad to hear from them, if they will address him at 7, Knaresborough-place, London, S.W.

From The Nonconformist and Independent we learn that Mr. Edward Crossley, M.P., has retired from an official position in connection with a Halifax Congregational Church, in consequence of what he holds to be defective teaching of the minister respecting the doctrine of the atonement. It is not for those without to enter into the merits of the controversy that has been raised. But is not much that we hear of the impossibility of formulating a theory of the atonement misleading? Etymologically the word, which was continually before the Israelites in the Law, means a "covering." Surely scholarship ought not to throw a cloud of difficulty and ambiguity around such a word, which is plain enough in its bearing upon sin, which the awakened sinner dreads as he approaches unto God. In like usage and higher meaning the New Testament uses the term "propitiation through faith in His blood"; and this is set forth as the transcendent and supreme ground of the appeals and hopes of the Gospel of our salvation.

The Guardians of the Galway Union have, according to the correspondent of The Dublin Daily Express, been guilty of gross injustice and intolerance. An inmate having studied a Douay Bible notified his desire to be henceforth registered as a Protestant instead of a Roman Catholic. Whereupon the Guardians, with two exceptions, decided that he must be a "lunatic" and should be treated accordingly. So scandalous a piece of tyranny should suffice to disqualify such men for office.

Our readers will have seen by recent notices that Mr. George Hatton, of the St. Giles Christian Mission, has commenced a new effort in central London, in connection with rescue work among young women. He is planning large things in this endeavour, and has secured two centres of work, one at Seven Dials, and the other in Drury-lane. We are glad to know that the police will co-operate with him in directing homeless women to the Shelters he is to provide. No kind of Christian work demands or needs more generous support, and we trust it will be freely accorded to Mr. Hatton.

We recently inserted an account from a correspondent of evangelistic work in Rothesay by members of the "Faith Mission." We regret to find, however, that their teachings are more than questionable. We have received a pamphlet entitled "Perfectionism, the False and the True," containing a lecture by Rev. C. A. Salmond, Rothesay (4d. J. N. Mackinlay, Glasgow), on the teaching of the "Faith Mission Pilgrims." While speaking charitably of the teachers and of their work, Mr. Salmond shows by lengthy extracts that they have fallen into the first of the two errors pointed out by Mr. Meyer in this week's paper on the Hebrews, p. 18.

A more fascinating and thrilling bit of missionary history has seldom been given to the public than Rev. J. G. Paton's AUTOBIOGRAPHY, published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton (6s.). While devotion to Jesus Christ can produce men of the heroic stamp of Mr. Paton and his fellow-workers among the degraded heathen, Christianity can well afford to smile at the vaticinations and dubious questionings of rationalistic critics, such as Professor Huxley proves himself to be in this month's Nineteenth Century. We cannot doubt that the reception which Mr. Paton's book will receive will be such as to encourage him in completing his marvellous life history.

We strongly counsel the friends of foreign missions to procure and read the important correspondence, recently published as a Government paper (8½. Eyre & Spottiswoode), relating to the expulsion of Rev. J. Jones from Maré, in the South Seas, by the French authorities. The high-handed action revealed in these documents is one more proof, added to the many constantly happening, that Romish propagandists carry with them strife and oppression as surely as darkness follows the setting of the sun. It is most discreditable to the French Government that they have not compensated Mr. Jones and the London Missionary Society for the damage and loss they have sustained. We purpose in an early issue to give a portrait of this worthy and ill-used man of God, with a sketch of his remarkable missionary career.

Generally speaking, the most wealthy of the Jewish people are the least actuated by religious principle, and those who most enjoy this world's good reflect least of the nation's glorious past, and contemplate least the gracious promises of God which have yet to be fulfilled towards the seed of Abraham. The New York Herald declares that Baron Hirsch, of Paris, a Jewish millionaire, who has long been held in high regard among his people for his benevolence, is desirous of improving the Jews off the face of the earth. His proposal is that the Jews of Eastern Europe shall cease to guard racial and religious separation, and to inter-marry without hesitation with other nationalities. Hebrew sentiment, however, rejects the proposal indignantly. We need not say that the promises of God, as contained in the prophecies of Scripture, undoubtedly involve the continued separateness of the Jewish race.

We understand that the Baptist Union is arranging for a fortnight's general mission throughout the Metropolis, beginning next week. Some ninety churches are to take part. We are glad to see that, in spite of recent controversies, the Baptists are preparing to present a strong front to the combined forces of evil by which we are surrounded. It is much better, instead of crossing swords with each other, that those who are one in polity and faith should concentrate all their endeavours against the common foe. Perhaps it would be impossible to discover a better means of cementing the agreement that has lately been arrived at in the London Baptist Association. At the same time, we become increasingly anxious that spiritual movements should begin with the Church of Christ, the revival of which must ever involve blessing of the world. We should like to see it more clearly defined—whether this mission is to the churches, or to the outside world. Surely, in the primary sense, it should be the former.

It cannot be said that our divorce law (hitherto also the law of Australia) is too stringent, yet even the present restrictions appear to be considered irksome by many in New South Wales. A Divorce Extension Bill has been re-introduced into the Legislature of that colony, which, it is earnestly hoped, in the interests of religion and morality, may never become law. The worst clause of this mischievous measure is one making mere desertion by either party for three years and upwards a sufficient ground for divorce: this obviously opens a wide door to collusion, for the marriage of any couple who may live apart for the required period will thus be practically dissolved, and it will be easy for any unprincipled fellow, simply by three years' absence at the goldfields, or residence in an adjoining colony, to relieve himself with impunity of his family responsibilities. It is satisfactory to note that a determined opposition, in which Churchmen, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics are alike united, is being made to this Bill. The family and the nation act and re-act upon each other; if the atmosphere of the former be tainted, the life of the latter cannot be healthy.

ALSACE-LORRAINE.—For forty-six years vigorous work has been done by the Alsace-Lorraine Evangelisation Society, which last year sent forth Gospel light from thirty-four centres. Grants were made to missions in various towns, and also to the funds of the Church of France.

THE DAY OF REST.

The Contemporary Review contains, amongst other forceful papers, an admirable manifesto by Mr. Francis Peek, on behalf of the Sabbath, or rather on behalf of man, for whom the Sabbath was made. As a Divine institution, the Sabbath is far beyond the defiling touch of the most purblind agnostic or iconoclast; but its disuse or misuse on the part of any people must inevitably carry with it its own revenge in national loss and deterioration. In this matter, as in every other, God is not mocked; whatsoever a nation sows that shall it also reap. Mr. Peek takes a comprehensive and statesmanlike survey of the whole question. He traces the expanding growth and application of the Sabbath principle, which he happily describes as "the consecration of one day out of seven for the rest and refreshment of man." If the Sabbath was necessary in the more primitive stages of human history, its necessity is a hundredfold greater in these days of hot haste and cutting competition. Can any sane, reflecting dweller in our great cities doubt it for an instant?

Mr. Peek shrewdly observes that, in this latitudinarian age, legislation is impossible that "would compel one man to do or to refrain from doing what he wishes because another may deem his conduct irreligious." The grounds for legislation must therefore be social. One day's rest from toil out of seven is not only "the absolute right of man bestowed by God," but it is a social necessity. This may seem to some to be low ground on which to base the argument, but at any rate it is ground that will defy assault. Mr. Peek would not only enforce existing laws (which in itself would be a great matter), but he pleads for the strengthening of the law by fresh enactments, providing that all public servants, such as post-office officials, should have a seventh rest-day; that the same boon be extended to those engaged in occupations which require Government or municipal licence—e.g., railways and all public vehicles; and that there should be a six days' limit on the labour of those who serve in places of public refreshment. Everybody who believes that human lives are greater than traders' profits or shareholders' dividends will say Amen to such legislation, and it ought to be possible by a combined endeavour to bring it about.

Mr. Peek's views of "the Sabbath as a religious institution" will only appeal, of course, to those who regard the question from the Christian standpoint, and all such will, we think, deem them weighty and well considered. We commend the whole article to the careful study of our readers, and especially to those who are to any extent leaders and educators of public opinion.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a month's mission at the Edinburgh Castle.——For blessing on a mission to be conducted by Rev. J. E. Linnell, at St. John's Mission Church, Copenhagen-street, Feb. 11 and following days.——For blessing on a mission by Rev. R. Balgarnie, at Baptist Chapel, Loughborough, Feb. 16 to March 1.——For blessing on a special mission at Hythe and Sandgate, Kent, Feb. 11 to 15, to be conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis.——For blessing on an eight days' mission, by Mr. George Clarke, in St. George's Church, Oakfield-road, West Croydon, beginning Sunday, Feb. 10.——For blessing on evangelistic services at the Wesleyan Chapel, Portrush, Cornwall, conducted by Mr. M. E. Farwell.——For blessing on a special mission to young women, at the Y.W.C.A., Lady Havelock Branch, West-end Chapel, Hammersmith, by Mrs. Beresford Baker, of Dover.——For services being held at Dulverton, Somerset, by Mr. John Elliott.

THE NEW YORK INNOVATION.

MR. FRANCIS PEEK'S most timely vindication of God's wisdom and lovingkindness in his gift of the Sabbath to mankind receives an unexpected emphasis by an event which has just transpired. The proprietor of The New York Herald has thought fit, in producing an edition for the special benefit of England, to introduce the unquestionable evil of an issue on the day of rest. America already groans under the tyrannous chain of seven-day papers. There is not a Christian in that great country who does not deplore the bondage to things of the earth earthy which is effected through the repudiation of the Sabbath Day by the seven-day newspapers. And no protest against this innovation can be too vehement, no appeal to Christian and public opinion too persistent, against this cruel endeavour to fasten such an incubus upon the shoulders of the English people.

If any evidence were wanted of the magnitude of the evil, it is fully furnished by The Herald's own account, given on Monday, of the distribution of Sunday's issue. It says:—

> London had a sensation yesterday. It was the appearance of The New York Herald newsboys in cabs flying over the city selling the Sunday edition on all the great thoroughfares as fast as they could hand out the papers and "make change." Piccadilly, Oxford street, Pall Mall, and the aristocratic districts around the clubs and big hotels were musical with the cries of the busy lads. And there was a good demand during the entire day. Bundles of Sunday Heralds were "closed out" in a very short time, and the cabs sent back for more papers.

The Herald is indignant at the opposition to having "a live journal published every day in the week, and sold on Sunday the same as any other day." Describing the scene in front of the Herald office, which "attracted crowds of spectators to the neighbourhood," it says:—

> A line of cabs stretched away on either hand, each awaiting its newsboy with his bundle. With a crack of the whip and a "whirl," the cabs dashed away, carrying the newsboys to their various routes, so that the entire city was in the hands of the Herald newsboys in a very short time. During the afternoon, Herald representatives visited the routes in different parts of the City, and found the sale of papers still going on, as was the case earlier in the day. This was particularly true in Piccadilly, near the clubs and hotels, while at the great railway stations the boys did a wholesale business as the trains came in."

In the days of Nehemiah men of Tyre brought fish and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath to the men of Judah and in Jerusalem; but that wise governor put a summary stop to their operations, and set his servants at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the Sabbath Day. We need a Nehemiah in like manner to prevent this man of America bringing such a Sabbath Day burden into our country.

"A Protest and an Appeal" has been made purely on humanitarian grounds against this iniquity, but humanity cannot save itself from this or any other evil. GOD made the Sabbath for man, and in the name of God must our appeal be made. It has been well said that the desecration of the Sabbath is an insult to God as Creator, for "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because that in it He had rested from all his work which God created and made." This Sabbath He gave to man, because, as Mr. Peek well says: "The rest which it commands is a universal need of humanity, and, therefore, it is man's universal right to enjoy." It must be those who fear and love the God of love, who must move and keep moving public opinion, if the great calamity with which we are threatened is to be turned aside. On all moral and religious questions Christian men must form public opinion, or it will not be formed at all.

We fear, also, the effect produced on other great dailies, which may be tempted to follow suit. One after another, the sanctions of the Rest-day are being tampered with. It is to the Church of Christ that men look in such an emergency. She is the natural custodian of the Rest-day for the toiling myriads. If every pulpit in London were to raise its protest, and every professing Christian use his influence, a public feeling would be produced, against which the new venture could not stand. The Sabbath was made for man; let it be kept for man. At present it is estimated that three millions out of seventeen millions of wage workers in America are deprived of their weekly rest. Englishmen, beware!

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

FEW public rooms have a nobler history than Exeter Hall, and no effort yet made in this building has been more marked by apparent success than the three weeks' mission by these beloved brethren, concluding January 27. The friends responsible for the arrangements launched out in a way probably unparalleled in any previous mission. In order to ensure the placing of tickets and bills in the right hands, relays of members of the Y.M.C.A. undertook the difficult task of visiting the entrance of the principal theatres and music-halls at the close of the performances, and disposed of large numbers of notices.

Many most interesting cases of professed conversion have come under the notice of the workers. One elderly gentleman came to a service of song with the express determination of "finding Christ," and, need we say, seeking, "he found." An owner of racehorses, who had strolled in to see what was going on, remained to the close, entered the inquiry-room and, we trust, started with an interest in a new "race." A Roman Catholic lady, seeking a scientific meeting, missed her way, entered the hall, and was seen by the writer earnestly inquiring as to "the way of life." Three young warehousemen, employed at one of the largest City houses, yielded themselves to God on separate nights, and now, occupying the same dormitory, are seeking to live out the life they have received. At the close of the inquiry-meetings on the last two Sunday evenings, 150 people rose as accepting Christ as their Saviour, 70 on the former and 80 on the latter evening.

The closing service will be ever remembered by the many present. Long before the hour of commencement the Hall was filled, and an overflow meeting was held in the Lower Hall. Breathlessly the people listened to the sweet message of love sung most touchingly by Mr. Manton Smith, whose bright face and consecrated voice proved a fitting prelude to the earnest utterances of his brother evangelist. Mr. Fullerton spoke with singular power on the words "Choose life" (Deut. xxx. 19), and the pointed appeal made at the close was inexpressibly solemn; turning to each part of the building, his last words rang out amid a deathlike silence: "Choose life!" "Choose life!!" "Choose life!!!" During the refrain of the closing hymn, he invited all who had received Christ during the mission to rise to their feet, and then they rose, truly a noble band; men, women, and children—old and young, rich and poor, making one grand confession as to the saving power of Christ. Upwards of 500 names of inquirers have been handed in, forming only a portion of those dealt with. E. J. K.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

XI.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

THEIR MESSAGE AND MIRACLES.

IN this legislation for the heralds of the kingdom we have weighed our Lord's commands touching their strange equipment; we have seen them divested of the resources and expedients of earth, and, in lieu thereof, fortified by faith, and supplied with heavenly solace. We have also scanned their instructions as to their deportment in fulfilling their mission.

We now need to give a separate place to that which was the inner kernel of their errand—THEIR MESSAGE AND THE ACCOMPANYING MIRACLES. The record says, "Then He called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases, and He sent them to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick. And they went out and preached that men should repent. And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." They bore the word of salvation, and, as an earnest of the power of Him in whose name they spoke, they performed these mighty works. They had freely received this spiritual power, and freely they were to bestow it.

The commission as given in the end of Mark is much the same, only putting the message in its place of greater relative importance, and adding the direction to baptize believers. It reads, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name they shall cast out devils...they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

A serious question now confronts every lover of foreign missions. It relates not to the methods of work, or to the accompanying signs, but to the work itself—the message to be told out. IS THE CHURCH IN HER EFFORTS ABROAD REALLY WORKING IN THE LINE OF OBEDIENCE TO THIS COMMISSION? Does the modern aspect of foreign missions accord with it? The disciples were instructed to preach the Gospel, and baptize all who believed. Is this now the single object of those who go forth? Alas! no. Abroad, as at home, multiplied aims and ambitions struggle each for the mastery. There is an inordinate tendency towards endeavouring to produce in other lands those secondary and outward effects of Christianity that appeal to sight, and that commend themselves to the natural man. Various philanthropic, educational, and civilising schemes are set on foot. The many are intent upon those forms of effort which tabulate visible and tangible, as opposed to purely spiritual, results, and which make a fair show in the flesh. The reason for this is found, in part, in the Church having lost her pristine power to heal the sick and cast out devils, and in her groping around for some substitute; and in part in the materialising tendencies of the age, which values practical philanthropy above those results which are inner and spiritual; and in part in her comparative powerlessness to accomplish spiritual results in any marked degree by the simple preaching of the Gospel. This is not as it should be. The preaching of the Gospel comes to take its place as one among many objects. It stands as one of sundry summits in the mountain range of mission endeavour, instead of rising in solitary majesty like the Peak of Teneriffe.

It is the more serious as this tendency is so on the increase and is so universally approved and applauded. Some few entertain doubts and look on with apprehension; but what voice is raised to point out the danger? It is supposed that every objection is silenced, and that all qualms of the overcautious are stilled, by the assertion that conversion is the ultimate object in view.

We would say: Let those who wish to do so engage in medical, hospital, educational, and other philanthropic enterprises designed outwardly to benefit mankind; but let them not sail under the flag inscribed with the Great Commission. Why should they? Let things be called by their proper names. There are many diverse forms of admirable Christian philanthropy, and they are sustained respectively by those whose inclinations are towards them. So let it be with these others which have so unsuitably come to be regarded as part of the work of preaching the Gospel. To put forward, as a substitute for the mighty works of healing with which Christ of old authenticated the message of salvation, modern medical missions, admirable as they are from the proper point of view, is utterly to confuse things totally different. Those appealed purely to faith; these to sight. Those were wrought solely by spiritual power and in greatest simplicity; these are wrought by human means and through human wisdom, and require many appliances and much expense. Let it be understood that the simple preaching of the Gospel alone is the fulfilling of the commission. In some fields the unwelcome consciousness of failure has at last come, after years of toil in some of these directions. So, too, we are assured the Church will sooner or later wake up in alarm and disappointment to learn her mistake in having expended her best energies and lavished her treasure on these side issues which are not included within the scope of her marching orders. And herein we think we have the mind of Christ.

We now come to the subject of the signs which followed the preaching of the early disciples. The question inevitably arises in the mind of him who desires to follow the Lord fully: MAY THESE MIGHTY WORKS YET BE LOOKED FOR BY THOSE WHO GO FORTH IN OBEDIENCE TO THE FIRST INSTRUCTIONS OF OUR LORD? Or it may take the more serious form: Can I be assured that I am in this pathway of obedience if I fail to see these signs following? The answer is easily discerned. We have only to be entirely obedient. It is ours to go as Christ commands, seeking to exercise an instructed faith. It is his thus to work with us, confirming the word by outward demonstration of the Spirit, if such be his good pleasure. The seventy went forth with no commission beyond preaching and healing the sick. But Christ exceeded his own word. With surprised joy they returned to report that even demons were subject to them through his name. He then caused them to inherit still fuller promises, giving them supremacy "over all the power of the enemy." Why should it be different now? Who may limit the power of Him who is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever"? Here also the saying will apply: "The world has yet to see what God will do through the man who is thoroughly yielded up to Him." The need is for "vessels meet for the Master's use." Obedience to every detail of his instructions was the condition upon which the disciples exercised power. May it not be then that our departure from them is the secret of our inability to do as they did?

THE QUESTION OF MIRACLES RECURRING IN THE PRESENT DAY IS ONE OF CONFESSED DIFFICULTY. The difficulty, however, is much more in the times than in the subject itself: more in the vision of the age than in the scene that God's Word opens to us. The tendency is to discredit the supernatural, especially in those forms that take hold of material things. Miracles are denied by rationalists, and by professed Christian teachers the life is explained out of them in the attempt to naturalise them. "Christianity without dogma or miracle" is the bad motto of a powerful and growing school. In others there is a disposition to refer everything unusual in the early days of Christianity to the presence of miracle; then, by the short cut of assuming that they are now impossible, they justify the levelling down of all the high hopes and expectations of faith. But whatever theories may be held as to the supernatural intervention of God in Pentecostal times, there is an almost universal concert of agreement, by the nominal and the true, the spiritual and the worldly, the simple and the learned, that they are now out of the question. In nothing has Satan been more successful than in first persuading men that he has no personal existence, and then in palming off upon them as veritable truth, "science, falsely so called," which teaches that God may not supersede the operation of the ordinary laws He has established, and bring into action other and higher laws. These last may be as "natural" as the ordinary laws. Men strangely overlook the disorder that sin has introduced, and how it has broken into and disarranged those primal laws of Eden which obtained before man fell, especially in all that pertains to man's physical well-being. If we knew the whole truth better, it may be that our ignorance would be informed by the discovery that those beneficent laws which come into play when miracles of bodily healing occur, are more normal than the much-vaunted "laws of nature."

We may mention in passing that THE DEVOTEES OF SPIRITUALISM ARE NOT TROUBLED WITH ANY SCEPTICISM AS TO THE EXISTENCE OF SUPERNATURAL OPERATIONS. With them Satan's "signs and wonders" are a daily experience. How well they know the infilling of the evil spirit and the reality of demoniacal possession! How often do they boast of speaking by direct spirit-inspiration! Satan seeks to discredit inspiration, miracle, and kindred truths, in the minds of professed Christians; but meantime he is industriously exhibiting before his own followers their reality. Thus truth suffers, and falsehood thrives.

In view of all this, it is evident that, like much else in this day, THIS QUESTION MUST NOT BE DETERMINED BY THE FALSE CRITERION OF POPULAR BELIEF, BUT BY WHAT IS WRITTEN. Prejudice, or the application of preconceived ideas, will be fatal to a right understanding of it. Let it be viewed with the single eye. While, on the one side, it must be approached with sobriety of mind, on the other, let not our conservatism degenerate into unbelief. At this crisis in the Church's history it is needful that someone should have courage to give utterance to the thoughts that are tremblingly, and almost secretly, entertained by many of the faithful. May we indeed expect again the putting forth in the physical realm of the healing power of our risen Lord? It can no longer be dismissed with the flippant saying, "The days of miracles are past." Its vast importance, in its bearing upon the future of foreign missions, needs scarcely be mentioned; it is apparent.

Is it not true that here, as in every department of spiritual things, IT IS OUR FAITH BY WHICH GOD MEASURES TO US OUR BLESSING? The principle ever holds good, "According to your faith be it unto you." "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" When faith, in those bright early days of Christianity, was strong, miracles of healing abounded. As faith lessened they decreased, until they well-nigh disappeared. Like the sensitive plant, those supernatural results, that yield themselves freely to an instructed and courageous faith, and that bloomed unhindered in the favouring atmosphere of Pentecostal times, close themselves beneath the rough handling of this utilitarian age. The heavenly visitant is neither wooed nor desired by those to whom she is sent; and while she leaves not wholly the confines of the Church, she yet retires from the multitude, and finds welcome in secluded scenes, with lowly ones, where she is still honoured, and where she somewhat reveals her powers, and sends forth hardly credited rumours of her presence still on earth. Thus she will hide herself, until such time as the quickened faith of God's people again invites her open presence.

And now, we are better prepared to inquire what the Word of God warrants us to expect as to miraculous intervention in this day.

A MISSIONARY.

THE CHURCH IN MADAGASCAR.

IN spite of many difficulties, Christian influence is increasing in volume and power in Madagascar. This was plainly indicated by the proceedings at the autumn meetings of the Congregational Union at Antananarivo, described in a recent issue of the New York Independent. During the week of the meetings, representatives from some eight hundred churches visit the capital, and educational and religious subjects are discussed and voted upon with a view to stimulating progress and developing public opinion in truly healthy directions. Much has already been done to undermine the foundations of tyranny and injustice, and it is believed that an ever strengthening influence is still being exercised.

One of the subjects recently discussed was, "What can be done to stem the tide of rampant, shameless immorality which is rising all around us?" Introduced by the eloquent native pastor, who is generally regarded as the Spurgeon of Madagascar, the theme was discussed with vigour, and it is hoped to good purpose. The Union has six native missionaries at work among the outlying tribes in various parts of the island, and the reports from them of the work they had been able to accomplish, all things considered, were quite satisfactory. The conferences between native workers and the missionaries are always helpful. They were so on this occasion, and the Union meetings are said, taken as a whole, to have excelled in interest any that have been held for twenty years past. That the outcome may be to the glory of God, will be the prayer of many who read these lines.

In an article in The Union Signal, Mrs. Mary C. Leavitt describes her recent visit to Madagascar. Referring to the men who conveyed her from Tamatave to Antananarivo, a distance of two hundred miles, she says: I suppose they were all slaves. Some years ago, in consequence of pressure brought to bear by England, the slave trade with Africa was forbidden. The Malagasy government saw no way to enforce this but to free all African slaves, and make it a penal offence to be found holding an African slave. But this did not touch Malagasy slaves. Most of them are descendants of captives taken long ago in wars between the different tribes.

Mrs. Leavitt further writes: I have visited no country more impure than this. The Hovas, living on the great central plateau, the ruling people, are nominally Christians. There are many, many true-hearted Christians, pure and upright; but still, as in all Asiatic countries, the missionaries and pastors are plagued by immorality and lying in the churches. A Malagasy Moody is wanted to preach up and down the country. The London Missionary Society and the Friends work most harmoniously. At the present time both are preaching and teaching. Outside the city they each have their own districts.

MEN WANTED.—The Baptist Missionary Society is opening a new mission station at Bolobo, on the Upper Congo. Miss Edith Butcher writes, after reaching there:—"It is one of the most promising places on the Congo. The towns extend for miles, and there are multitudes of people. We are studying hard at the language, and long to be at work. We want four more missionaries to work these up-river stations well, and for effective work we cannot do without them."

FREE TO SERVE.

FREE to serve: no longer laden
With a chain of sin and care;
We, the servants of Jehovah,
Now his mark upon us bear.

Free to serve: no cruel labour
Is the service of our Lord;
Happiness and peace it brings us,
Peace this world cannot afford.

Free to serve: once under Satan
We were captives led away;
Ours was then a grievous bondage,
Now we work for Christ alway.

Free to serve: He came and sought us,
Broke the chain around us thrown,
From the power of Satan bought us,
Saved and kept us for his own.

Free to serve: ah, yes! who would not Serve the Friend who for them died?
'Tis indeed a willing service
For our Saviour crucified.

Free, yet bound: held tightly to Him,
Serving here till life is o'er;
And when face to face we see Him
Serving still for evermore.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Mr. G. W. Panes, who lately went from England to join this Mission, writes home stating that blessing in testimony was given to him and his fellow-travellers on the outward voyage. He also speaks well of the work of the Mission as he found it on arrival at the scene of his labours.

THE PRESENT APOSTASY.

I HAVE never read 2 Thess. ii. without finding my thoughts led away to the Papal Apostasy; and still I believe the Holy Spirit refers, in this chapter, to Rome. But, as history, which someone has defined as a record of fulfilled prophecy given in detail, is said continually to repeat itself, I am now compelled by circumstances to believe that a special reference is made to "the falling away" of these last days, which, to my own mind, is far more startling, and is soon to become more vast in extent, and awful in result, than even was the relapse of the early Church into the follies of Romanism.

With all her errors, Rome professes a belief in the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in his vicarious sacrifice for the sin of the world. She acknowledges, too, the Holy Scriptures as the Word of God, though interpreting them for her own private ends in a most unscrupulous fashion. But now numbers of men who are connected with Protestant churches, and who appear to the world as ministers of Christ, are rejecting the Scriptures with the greatest contempt, robbing the Lord Jesus of his Godhead, and branding the faith of those who build their hopes on the blood of Christ as "the religion of the shambles."

A very few years ago, and, of all the languishing "isms," Unitarianism appeared most sickly. To-day its adherents, open and secret, gathering in its own synagogues, or assembling in the churches of all denominations, are to be numbered by thousands.

I know this will seem incredible to many good folk; but if, the next time they receive a call from their popular minister, they will press home the question, "What think ye of Christ?" nor be content with a vaguely given answer—if they shall pointedly ask him whether the Scripture, as a whole, be the Word of God; whether Christ Himself be very God, and Christ's blood was shed as a propitiation for sin—some of these may possibly be startled to find that their own spiritual guide has been practically nothing more nor less than a Unitarian himself.

If ever there was a time when we should try the spirits to know whether they are of God, it is the present time. And this is a solemn duty we owe to God, ourselves, and the Church; nor must the dread of being deemed uncharitable prevent us from discharging it. Toleration of error is injury to truth; charity dealt out to Antichrist is uncharitableness to Christ. We must not be deceived with high-sounding words; the emissaries of error deal largely in these, especially when speaking of "the exalted sentiments of Scripture," and the character of Christ. We must remember that either the Scriptures are the very Word of God, or they form a mass of misleading absurdities, self-contradictions, and glaring falsehoods. The Christ who claims to be One with the Father must either be God, or the greatest impostor who ever walked the earth; and the sacrifice of Christ must either have been for the sinner's salvation, or a useless parade of self-endurance. Nor can the written Word and the Living Word be separated; for if it be possible to disprove the Divine origin of the one, the Godhead of the other vanishes as a matter of course. If Christ be not the Divine Saviour of the world, the Bible that reveals Him as such is worse than valueless; and if the Bible be not the Word of God, then the Christ it reveals can have no claim to the regard of the men of this century. But if the Bible be the Word of God, and Christ the Son of God (I only use the word "if" for convenience sake), how about those who reject the Divine claims of each? We have not here a matter of mere views and opinions, in which men who cannot agree may yet agree to differ. It is a matter of life or death—eternal life or eternal death. It is the teaching of Scripture, because the teaching of Christ, that all shall honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. What about those who refuse this honour to the Son? Again, it is written that "In none other is there salvation; neither is there any other name under heaven that is given among men wherein we must be saved" (R.V.). But what must be the fate of those who will not come to Him that they may have life, and who, while they profess to regard Him as a great teacher, and admire Him as a great pattern, refuse Him as the only Saviour?

Once more, there is no more plainly expressed truth in the Word of God than, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin." What, then, becomes of the sin of such as trample under foot the blood of Christ, and blasphemously make mention of it as savouring of the shambles? We constantly hear of men who are said to be good men, though "rather shaky" on the doctrine of the Atonement. But if "shaky" here, of what value to themselves or others is their soundness elsewhere? And yet when we question the right of such to minister in the Church of Christ, we are "uncharitable"; and most uncharitable, if we venture to expose their errors to the unwary souls they would fain beguile with their soul-destroying doctrine. It is a strange state of things, but many of my readers will have noticed as well as myself that one is told to be charitable, if speaking of the Unitarian who denies Christ's Divinity, the Romanist who steals his priesthood, or the Infidel who denies his very existence; yet, if it is some one who confesses Him as Christ and Lord, and is contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, that may be the subject of conversation, no word shall be too severe for such a one, because of his narrow-mindedness. A significant fact; but happy those who go forth to Jesus, outside the camp, bearing his reproach!

One thing with regard to the present apostasy must be specially noted — that many of those who now deny the Lord that bought them were once ultra-evangelicals both in views and doctrine. What does it mean? What, but this—that they refused to use the light God gave them, and have been given over to judicial darkness? It was said by one of these men, but a few months since: "My present belief can neither give joy to me, nor will allow me to administer cheer to anyone else." Yet the poor man remained bound, as it were, in chains of darkness. His pulpit work had become most bitter bondage, yet, like blinded Samson at the mill, he felt compelled still to "grind on." "Where are we?" asked another, whose name had become famous through all the English-speaking world, of a friend of mine who was standing by his dying bed. "All, to me, seems dark," he added. Yet there appeared no disposition to return to the light from which he had wilfully wandered. Nay, and here is the danger that threatens so many—loving darkness rather than light, we may choose the darkness rather than the light, and God may set his seal on our choice. Then, as Whittier sings:—

> For ever round the mercy seat,
> The guiding lights of love might burn;
> But still, if habit-bound, the feet
> Would lack the will to turn.

THE BIBLE A MIRACLE.

EVERY study of the Bible is a study of the evidences of Christianity. The Bible is itself the greatest miracle of all, and the Son of God more wonderful than any of the wonders that confirm his claims. The believer feels this in every fibre of his being. Rob me of miracles and of prophecy: you have not robbed me of Him. Before Him I bow, because of what He is. The morning star pales and fades at sunrise. There is a glory, in the presence of which all else is dim.

A PRESENT-DAY PERIL.

The world's attentions are more deadly to the Christian than its antagonisms, and it is against these that we must be especially on our guard. When religion becomes respectable, or, to use John Bunyan's phrase, when it walks forth in silver slippers, and its adherents are taken notice of by those who care nothing for their faith; when they are invited to the feasts at which the ungodly do homage to their own deities, ah! then, like the Pergamenes, they are in danger of being swept into the doctrines of Baal and the practices of the Nicolaitans. These influences break down the boundary between the Church and the world, and let the world into the Church, thereby destroying its vitality and ensuring its destruction. —Dr. W. M. Taylor.

THE UNCHANGEABLE CHRIST.

The world has been the scene of incessant revolution and struggle and mutation. Think how many different great men have risen, each trying to carry out some great plan for his nation or for the world; how many great names have risen and passed and been forgotten. The face of the earth has changed since our Lord lived and died and rose again. The ruling powers the world over are changed, the world's philosophy has changed, and political ideas and science and the conditions of social life. Countries that were barbarous are now the foremost in civilisation, and the seats of old civilisations have become dreary wastes. Scarcely anything has remained unchanged. And the process of change is going on to-day as rapidly as ever. The mercy is that Jesus Christ is unchanged amidst all these changes. He is One who is not affected by these changes, who is "the same yesterday and to-day and for ever"—the same, that is, through all the cycles of time, the same to the human race.—Rev. Dr. Culross.

Y.W.C.A.—The second annual meeting of the Lady Havelock Branch was recently held in the West-end Lecture Hall, Hammersmith. The report read by Rev. W. Page showed that the work is progressing steadily, although under some difficulty on account of the late hours of business. Forty-five new members joined during the year. Interesting and earnest addresses were delivered by several friends.

PRECIOUS PRIVILEGES

PROCEEDING FROM THE PERCEIVED PERPETUAL PRESENCE OF CHRIST.

FEW believers need to be told that in theory our Lord will be with and in his people perpetually by his Holy Spirit. Yet how few really act upon that belief, or make it, not a theory, but a fact in themselves! If our Lord's words (John xiv. 16), "that He may abide with you for ever," mean anything, they mean just what they say—that, if we will, the Comforter shall abide with us (not come as a visitor and leave again), and that for ever. Only He does not force his blessings upon us; we must be willing and give Him the whole heart, and then He will enter and never leaves us. How many among us are starved Christians, because we offer the Master half a heart, or perhaps try to reserve just one chamber for self. But if we are to receive his full blessing and presence, it can only be by whole-hearted surrender (Jer. xxix. 13). What need to pray daily "unite my heart," and plead the promise in Jer. xxxii. 39. So shall we have and realise more and more the perpetual presence of Christ.

Let us think for a few moments on seven precious privileges which are the promised portion of the child of God.

(1) PERPETUAL PARDON.—How different is God's pardon to man's! Man says, "I will forgive, but I cannot forget"; God's perfect pardon is sin forgiven and forgotten. It is a perpetual pardon, given once for all, and not cancelled if we offend Him again; and given the moment we really seek Him with our whole heart. Have you thus sought Him? If so, it is because his Holy Spirit first reproved you of your sin and of God's righteousness, and then, when you were crushed with a sense of it, He showed to you God's judgment by which Christ triumphed over the powers that enchained you (John xvi. 8, and Col. ii. 13). That loving Spirit first drew you to the Saviour, or you could not have come at all, and it is through Him that you understand God's perfect pardon—sins forgiven and forgotten (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34). Then, when your sins rise up before you as a thick cloud to tempt you to doubt, think, if you remember them (and it is well we should (Ezek. xvi. 63), God has forgotten them, and as a cloud blotted them out. But you so often stumble you say: ah, once forgiven ever forgiven but as you travel through life your whole body shall not need again to be washed, but only your earth-stained feet; and for that too there is perpetual cleansing (1 John i. 7).

(2) PERPETUAL PROTECTION.—Why should we so often stumble? We need not; but do, because we prefer to walk by sight rather than by faith (Hab. ii. 4). Are you part of Christ's vineyard? Then He is pledged to keep you, lest any hurt you; HE keeps you night and day (Isa. xxvii. 3). It is as we give up keeping ourselves and look to Him our feet are plucked out of the net (Psm. xxv. 15). Will you look at Col. ii. 6, 7? In the R.V., margin, this is still clearer: "as therefore ye received Christ Jesus the Lord (not through merit of your own, but simply through faith in Him), so walk in Him: rooted and builded up in Him, and stablished by your faith, abounding in thanksgiving." We often act as if we thought, "Jesus saved me and started me in the new life, but I must keep myself in it." No, we soon sadly prove we cannot do that; but, thank God, He is able to keep you from falling (Jude 24). Dear fellow-believer, will you not let Him? If you would even now enter into rest, you must cease from your own works (Heb. iv. 10, and Isa. xxxii. 17). Yield yourself to the leading of the Spirit, and you shall hear the voice saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it" (Isa. xxx. 21). Throw the burden of living for Christ on Christ, and say with David: "Be thou exalted, Lord, in thine own strength: so will we sing and praise thy power. (Ps. xxi. 13). So shall you not, only have perpetual protection but perpetual praise.

(3) PERPETUAL PEACE.—For what does the human heart long so much as peace? Perfect peace is only realised as we cease from self, and leave all to the Lord, and rest on Him. In proportion as we feel our weakness and lean hard upon the Lord in whom is everlasting strength (the Rock of Ages) shall we know nothing but peace, peace, perfect peace (Isa. xxvi. 3, 4). Not the world's peace shall you have, felt to-day and gone to-morrow; but the very peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your heart and mind (Phil. iv. 7), if you lean all on Him in perpetual prayer and praise. It is a precious last gift of Jesus, and He wishes you to have it (John xiv. 27). Will you not have it for yourself?

(4) PERPETUAL PLEASURE.—Ah, is that too good to be true? "At thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore," and "in his presence is fulness of joy" (Ps. xvi. 11, xxxvi. 8). Trouble may come, and will come; but, if you are in the hollow of his hand, what hurts you hurts Him first and more (Isa. lxiii. 9); and in his presence even sorrow shall be sweetened, and you shall even take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake (2 Cor. xii. 10).

(5) PLENTIFUL PASTURAGE. — Christ not only saves and keeps the soul, but He teaches and feeds it. He says, "I will water it every moment" (Isa. xxvii. 3). You cannot need more frequent care or food than that. His sheep shall not starve, for they shall find pasture (John x. 9). You shall not want, but shall lie down in green pastures (Ps. xxiii. 2). How does Christ feed the soul? By a prayerful study of his Word (Jer. xv. 16), by his ordinances, and by prayer and silent waiting towards Him (Ps. xxxvii. 7; Zeph. iii. 17, margin). Do we not need more silence in our waiting on God? I fear our prayers are often so full of wants, we cannot wait and listen for what He has to say to us, and will say, if we will let Him. See what the Psalmist says, Ps. lxxxv. 8 (P.B.V.)

(6) PERPETUAL PRODUCTIVENESS. — Who does not wish for more fruit for God's glory? Perhaps we mourn that we bring Him so little. It is only by abiding in Him that we can yield any at all; but so abiding that the life sap of the vine can flow into you, you shall bear Him much precious fruit (John xv. 4, 5). "From Me is thy fruit found" (Hos. xiv. 8). Abide in Him, and you shall yield your fruit, not once a year, but "every month"; yes, every day, in love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, virtue, patience, and brotherly kindness. Have you thought of the wonderful condescension of the True Vine, in so ordering it that He cannot bear fruit without branches? If you are your Beloved's, oh, his desire is towards you (Cant. vii. 10). Will you not let Him have fruit in you for his Father's glory? (John xv. 8).

(7) PERPETUAL POWER. — Do you mourn that you have so little power over others for the Master? It is only by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost that you can receive it (Acts i. 8). If you are filled with the Spirit your life shall be one of perpetual power over the souls of others for Him. Apart from Him you can do nothing in your own spiritual life, much less for others (John xv. 5); but united to Him you shall wax valiant in fight, and turn to flight armies of aliens. You shall do it through faith in Him, not in your strength, but in his. Be not like those who are not valiant for the truth (Jer. ix. 3); but, if you would overcome the world around you, have faith in his real, perpetual, abiding presence (1 John v. 4).

These are some of the many blessed privileges of those who abide in Jesus. Will you not, dear fellow-believer, look up to Him, and say, "Lord, I do abide in Thee," each moment you have time for self-recollectedness in your busy life, and leave the rest to Him; all the guiding, all the teaching, all the power shall come just as it is needed, for "the Lord will PERFECT that which concerneth me" (Ps. cxxxviii. 8).

EDWARD J. BELLERBY.

THE LONDON HOSPITALS.

ROUGHLY speaking, the annual deficit of the London hospitals is £100,000; this, too, notwithstanding all the noble efforts made to decrease it. Mr. A. C. P. Coote has propounded a scheme whereby this state of things may be remedied. He proposes a penny a week collection in the workshops of the Metropolis, which would more than raise the required sum. The working classes are chiefly benefited by the hospitals, and it is believed that on the subject being wisely laid before them they will very generally follow the example of several northern towns, and regularly contribute their pence towards the support of the institutions. The Hospital Saturday Fund having taken up the movement, a meeting in its furtherance was held on Tuesday last week in the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor presiding.

Mr. Coote having addressed the meeting in explanation of his proposal, which is by no means a new one, but rather an oft-made suggestion put into a definite form, Sir Sidney Waterlow, vice-president of the Hospital Sunday Fund, spoke words of hearty commendation, being followed by Sir Arthur Blackwood, who declared the customary bazaars, balls, dances, and so forth to be highly objectionable means of raising money for such charitable purposes. After a few words by Canon Fleming, a resolution, describing the proposal as one "deserving of the hearty co-operation of employers of labour and others interested in the welfare of these institutions," was carried unanimously.

Mr. George Howell, M.P., was of opinion that if properly approached on the subject, the working classes will heartily respond. Mr. F. C. Carr-Gomm, chairman of the London Hospital, and Mr. George Shipton, of the London Trades Council, also approved the scheme, the latter maintaining that if it is to work satisfactorily it will be needful to allow the working classes some influence in the administration of the institutions. A discussion followed, in the course of which it was shown that the present management of the hospitals does not altogether meet the needs of the people. Working men say that they ought to be able to attend and get medical advice in the morning or the evening, so as not to be compelled, as at present, to lose half a day waiting for their turn. Other matters, important in their way, were also mentioned, and it is hoped that with these attended to, the scheme will be translated into practical utility.

The Nature of Christian Unity.

BY THE LATE DR. JOHN HARRIS,

Principal of New College.

Author of "Union," "Mammon," "The Great Commission," &c.

I.

Wherein does Christian unity consist? We reply, first, that the foundation of a Scriptural union among Christians is laid in the belief of those truths which are essential to our union with Christ. Here, we presume, the following propositions will be admitted as soon as read:—That Christianity, in common with every other system, contains some principles which serve at once to identify and distinguish it; that as the inculcation of morality is not peculiar to the Gospel, its essence must be sought for in that in which it is peculiar—in being a remedial system, a provision of mercy for a sinful world, through a Divine Mediator; and that as Christianity is a provision of mercy, its fundamental truths may be expected to be few and simple, if only to be in accordance with its kind and compassionate design.

But how are these truths, few and simple as they may be, to be discriminated and determined? Had this question never engaged our attention before, we should naturally adopt some or all of the following methods:—We should inquire whether, on a devout and careful perusal of the Gospel, as a whole, Christians generally have received an identity of impression as to its scope and design; whether it contained within its pages anything professing to be an epitome or abridgment of the system which it reveals; whether the Apostolic preaching contained any one leading feature, or, whether the question of fundamental truth was ever agitated in Apostolic times, and determined by Apostolic authority. Now, on adopting this course of inquiry, we not only obtain replies—and these replies not merely agree—but, by the unanimous verdict of the orthodox Church, they all prove to be one; and that one, the doctrine of justification by faith in the atoning sacrifice of Christ.

Let us hear the final commission which our Lord gave to his Apostles when He charged them with the duty of evangelising the world; they were to "preach repentance, and the remission of sins, in his name, among all nations." If we inquire of St. Paul the subject of his preaching, he replies, "Christ, and Him crucified"; or the substance of Apostolic preaching generally, his answer is still the same, "We preach Christ crucified"; and the reason assigned is, that "He is made of God unto us, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." The prevailing impression of the Christian Church is, that the New Testament is, in brief, "a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners," and this, too, is its own compendium of itself.

But if ever the Apostle referred to the fundamental truth of the Gospel, it was surely when he uttered the fearful anathema, "If we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached, let him be accursed." Now, here the point to be remarked is, that the Galatians had not renounced the Christian profession; they still retained the doctrines they had been taught, but some part of those doctrines they were in danger of surrendering to false teachers, and that part is considered by the Apostle as so fundamental that he puts it for the whole Gospel. What, then, is the vital and essential truth, the belief of which amounts to a belief of the Gospel, and the rejection of which, either by a Christian or a church, is a rejection of Christianity? Let us seek an answer by inquiring, what was that counter doctrine for which the Galatians were in danger of renouncing this fundamental truth? The entire drift of the Apostolic argument shows that it was justification by the works of the law. In opposition to this fundamental error it is that the Apostle affirms the fundamental truth, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us": fearfully denouncing the teacher of the antagonist error, to whatever order of beings he might belong, and from whatever region of space he may come, as a subverter of the entire Gospel; and declaring, concerning every man who seeks justification through any other medium, "that Christ can profit him nothing." Here again, then, we meet the one grand doctrine in question; so that from whatever point of the circle we may commence our search, we find this to be the central truth; and, however we may vary the inquiry, "What is truth — fundamental truth?" the response of the living oracle is invariably the same, Justification by faith in the atoning sacrifice of the Son of God.

This parent truth necessarily involves in it (according to our apprehension) the divinity of Christ, the necessity of renewal and sanctification by the Holy Spirit, and whatever is commonly called evangelical in doctrine; while it sprinkles the path of duty with atoning blood, and is the seminal principle of universal holiness. But whatever the precise amount of truth which it may comprehend, it is evidently the doctrine by the humble and hearty belief of which a man becomes united to Christ, and, consequently, one with his people. Whatever variety of sentiment he may hold on subordinate points, the cordial reception of "redemption through the blood of the cross" unites him to "the Head of the body," and through the Head to the body itself. Whatever the order and discipline of the particular church to which he may belong, his union to Christ, being derived from an independent and superior source, is left untouched, as well as his union to the body of Christ. And that Church itself, teaching this faith, and composed of such members, is a true Church, and an integral part of the great Christian community.

Thus the basis of the unity of the Church is laid in the unity of the faith. By giving us "one Lord" to provide for us a "common salvation," the "one God and Father of all" has wisely ordered that all the saved shall be generalised and united in "one faith" concerning Him, by the "one baptism" of the "one Spirit," who actuates and lives in them as "one body."

PLEASANT HOMES FOR WORKING PEOPLE.—Writing on this subject to a Birmingham paper, Mr. T. Freeman, of Stoke-on-Trent, says:—A large proportion of our lads and men have, strictly speaking, no homes; they have sleeping places, but, except where there is a thrifty wife or mother, a place corresponding to the parlour of the middle-class is unknown. The tavern becomes a resort from sheer necessity, and intemperance naturally follows. In every town and village there are school and other rooms attached to places of worship. Why should they not be open all day long for use every day of the week? Can we wonder at the working classes fighting shy of these buildings on Sunday? Get them to make them their homes, with firing and light, during the days and evenings of the week, and on Sunday they and probably their friends and relatives will hardly like to be absent if kindly hospitality has been shown them on the other days.

ROME, THE SORCERESS.

Amongst many matters of interest connected with the Oxford movement of fifty years ago, which are brought to light in the late Dean Burgon's "Lives of Twelve Good Men," none is more interesting than the revelation afforded of the wonderful change which came over the mind of the present Cardinal Newman as to the character of that system which he formally adopted as his religion in the winter of 1845. Thirteen years before, when travelling in Italy, he thus wrote on first approaching Rome:—

It cannot be denied that Rome is one of the four monsters of Daniel's vision. Do Christian travellers keep this enough in mind? I think not...But, further, Rome is put on a level with Babylon in Scripture; nay, it is worse than it. The vengeance has fallen on Babylon, and it is no more. On Rome, too, plagues have come, but it survives. Does this circumstance imply that further judgments are in store? I fear it does. Rome, the mightiest monster, has as yet escaped on easier terms than Babylon. Surely it has not drunk out the Lord's cup of fury, nor expiated the curse! And then, again, the fearful Apocalypse occurs to my mind. Amid the obscurities of that holy book, one doctrine is clear enough—the ungodliness of Rome; and, further, its destined destruction. That destruction has not yet overtaken it, therefore it is in store. I am approaching a doomed city.

Upon which Dean Burgon remarks, "This is terrible reading truly, though it be Scripturally true." We are surprised to be presently assured that:—

In the Book of Revelation the sorceress upon the seven hills is not the Church of Rome, as is often taken for granted, but Rome itself, that bad spirit which in its former shape was the animating principle of the Fourth Monarchy, and now has learned by experience a deeper cunning. If anyone thinks this a refined distinction difficult to enter into, and useless if understood, I admit it is most difficult, but not useless. Not in good only, but in evil also, the old spirit has revived; and the monster of Daniel's vision, untamed by its former judgments, has seized upon Christianity as the new instrument of its impieties, and awaits a second and final woe from God's hand.

Truly this is a distinction without much difference. But, subtle as the distinction is, it is borne out by Rev. xii. and xiii., which chapters both relate to Daniel's fourth beast; in chap. xii. seen in its pagan, and in chap. xiii. in its professedly Christian, phase. Newman's "refined distinction" is, therefore, quite true, although he lacks consistency in denying that the sorceress of Rev. xvii. is the Church of Rome. However, about six years afterwards he fully admits that the evil spirit of Rome in its revived form (as we might say, in the form presented in Rev. xiii.) is the Church of Rome, for here are his own words, written in 1838:—

If we are induced to believe the professions of Rome and make advances towards her as if a sister or a mother Church, which in theory she is, we shall find, too late, that we are in the arms of a pitiless and unnatural relative, who will but triumph in the arts which have inveigled us within her reach.

What a sad commentary on this is afforded by Dr. Newman's own course. When one possessed of such a mind as his has fallen a victim to this "pitiless and unnatural relative," it would seem that they are safest who deny the relationship altogether! Let us, however, hear what more he had to say in 1838 of the Church of Rome.

We need not depart from Christian charity toward her. We must deal with her as we would towards a friend who is visited by derangement; in great affliction, with all affectionate tender thoughts, with tearful regret and a broken heart, but still with a steady eye and a firm hand. For in truth she is a church beside herself, abounding in noble gifts and rightful titles, but unable to use them religiously; crafty, obstinate, wilful, malicious, cruel, unnatural, as madmen are. Or rather she may be said to resemble a demoniac...Thus she is her real self only in name; and till God vouchsafe to restore her, we must treat her as if she were that evil one which governs her.

How strange it seems that one who could write thus of the apostate Church of Rome should seven years later fall himself a victim to her wiles. Does not his case illustrate the "strong delusion" of which we read 2 Thess. ii. 11, which is sent as a judgment to those who are not faithful to the light they have? There is a solemn parallel between the falling away of heathendom from the light of nature which made them "without excuse," as described in the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, and the falling away of Christendom, as shown in 2 Thess. ii. In the first case, "Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind"; and in the second, "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved...God shall send them strong delusion, that they might believe a lie"; and what is true of Christendom as a whole, is true of each soul that, like Cardinal Newman, once saw and received what God's Word teaches as to Rome's true character, but, like the moth fluttering round the candle, is at last lured to its own destruction.

At the very time that Dr. Newman first visited Rome, and, on approaching the city, wrote what is contained in the first extract in this paper, he yet so far yielded to the fascination of the Sorceress that he called, with his companion, Hurrell Froude, upon Monseignor (afterwards Cardinal) Wiseman, at the English College, to know on what terms they might be admitted into the Church of Rome!

We got introduced (writes Froude) to him, to find out whether they would take us in on any terms to which we could twist our consciences; and we found, to our dismay, that not one step would be gained without swallowing the Council of Trent as a whole.

The consciences which could not be twisted in 1832 were more pliable afterwards. Two or three years later Froude joined the Church of Rome, and Newman followed in the year 1845. The latter's secession led to that of many others, and, as the late Lord Beaconsfield said, "The secession of Dr. Newman dealt a blow to the Church of England, under which it still reels." H. E. B.

BRAUNTON, NEAR BARNSTAPLE.—Since 1880, a coffee-tavern in this place has served as a useful counter-attraction to the public-house, and a centre for much quiet Christian effort. The house has been only partly self-supporting, about £40 per annum having been raised by Mrs. D. A. Robinson, of Succoth Lodge, Braunton, to meet the management expenses. The present premises being required by their owner, Mrs. Robinson has had to find another house. It is proposed shortly to enter a more suitable place, where, it is hoped, the work which has been associated with the old tavern will be successfully carried on. The rent, however, is higher, and the help of friends would at present be very welcome. Mrs. Robinson will be glad to supply particulars.

Dr. Talmage on Revivals.

A COURSE of special revival services is now in progress at the great Brooklyn Tabernacle, conducted by Dr. Munhall. Many are professing conversion, under the stirring and convincing appeals of the evangelist. On Sunday morning January 13, Dr. Talmage preached an intensely earnest discourse on the need of a great religious awakening. We reproduce some parts of his sermon:—

"The pulpit must preach to itself before it preaches to the pew. The simple fact is that many of our pulpits are struck through with dry rot. We are dying of conventionalities and are blasted with metaphysics; and none of us in pulpits or in Sabbath-schools or in reformatory circles is doing one-half of what he ought to be doing for God, and the betterment of the world's condition. I tell you, ministers of religion, and Sabbath-school teachers, and Christian workers, let the work begin at home. Brother ministers, what is the use of telling men they are all right when they know they are not all right? There is a throne in every man's conscience which tells him that when he accepts Jesus Christ as his Lord he does right, and when he refuses to accept Jesus Christ he does wrong. But, oh! the temptations which we in the ministry have—you laymen know nothing about them. In this age the temptation is so mighty to smooth down the truth and hush the alarms of the Gospel, and pat men on the shoulder, or as the old poet said—

Smooth down the stubborn text for ears polite,
And simply keep damnation out of sight!

Oh, my friends in the Gospel ministry, if you are hiding any of the truths of God's Word, quit the folly or you had better stand away from that soul in the last great day, for that soul will cry out: 'I admired your philosophical disquisitions; I liked your gestures, I liked your sentences, but you never told me about this great day of test and trial. Cursed be your rhetoric. Witness, all ye hosts of light and all ye hosts of darkness, I am going down and I am going to take that minister with me. It is his fault. He never told me.' And worlds of darkness echo it back: 'His fault! his fault!'

"I argue the need of a mighty awakening from the cold heartedness in the experience of a vast multitude of professors of religion. I am not stating an abstraction now. I am stating what you know. If a church have a membership of eight hundred, seven hundred are sound asleep. If a church have a membership of six hundred, five hundred of the members are sound asleep. If a church have a membership of one hundred, ninety are sound asleep. If a question of a religious meeting comes up and that same night there is to be some entertainment or a meeting of a lodge or a meeting of a social circle, or a meeting of a literary circle, and a man has to choose between the two, which does he take? I do not answer the question, but in your own silence answer. Does Christ or the world get that occasion? Hundreds and thousands of Christians stand asking themselves the infinitesimal questions: 'Shall we dance? shall we play cards? shall we go to the theatre?' and a thousand questions like that without asking the one question, 'What is to be the destiny of millions of souls now marching on toward the bar of God? Where are the men and women who are making religion the primordial thing, the first and the last? Oh, ye backslidden Christians, if you die as you are, all the communion tables at which you ever sat will lift up their hands of blood crying for your condemnation, and neglected Bibles and prayerless pillows will cry: 'Let him go down. He broke the sacramental vow. Out of the seven days of the week he gave not five hours to Christ. Let him go down.' I verily believe that if the professors of religion who are living far away from God and neglect their duty could see their condition this morning they would bite their lips until the blood came, and wring their hands until the bones cracked, and utter a shriek that would send this whole audience to their feet.

"I argue the need of a great arousal from the fact that the cause of God is comparatively so slowly progressing. More Christians now than ever, more churches than ever, more religion in the world than ever; but at the present ratio of increase do you think this world will ever be brought to God? Why, it is a mathematical impossibility. There are more people born into the world than are born into the kingdom of God. Where one man enters the kingdom of God ten drop into dissipation. Where one church is built fifty grog-shops. Churches here and there flaming with religious zeal; multitudes of them sinking back to spiritualism and humanitarianism and nothingism and devilism; and if a man stand up and tell people unless they are born again they cannot see the kingdom of God, kid gloves, diamonds bursting through, come up to the forehead in shame and humiliation. It is not elegant.

"Oh, that God would whelm us with the realities. Oh, that He would kill our stupidity, that He would pull from under us our couches of ease, that He would hurl us to the front. It seems to me, it is time for something almost desperate if this world is to be saved at all, if these mighty abominations abroad in our cities are to be overthrown and God is to be honoured in the salvation of men and nations. Ordinary solicitation will not do the work. We need a momentum born of whole nights spent in prayer."

THE HACKNEY ROAD MISSION has taken a new departure in arranging for a series of brilliantly illuminated Dissolving View Exhibitions on Tuesday evenings at a late hour to allow opportunity for the working classes to attend. These exhibitions are of a high class. The subject on Tuesday week was "The English Bible: Its history and defenders." There is a system of visitation employed around the neighbourhood, so that all have a personal invitation. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Mr. Charles Girling, 33, Queen Margaret's-grove, Mildmay Park, N.

INVALID HOME AT SAN REMO.—This Home is intended to enable ladies in delicate health to enjoy the advantages of a winter's residence here, whose means are not sufficient to bear the expense of living in a hotel or pension. It offers every comfort, including medical advice and nursing, when required, at a low figure. Many applications for admission have had to be refused this season, and the committee have determined to enlarge it. A bazaar will be held on Feb. 26 and 27 towards this object. The secretary, Miss E. C. Macdonald Lockhart, Villa Teresa, San Remo, will gladly correspond with any disposed to help, and will receive their gifts.

MR. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM,

Anglo-American Evangelist.

THE subject of this sketch is personally known both in eastern and western hemispheres, and in many countries which he has not visited he has for some years been held in high regard, as an evangelist whose efforts have been owned of God to the salvation of many souls. He claims to be "a plain man, telling a plain story, in a plain manner," and he would in all probability not feel in the least complimented if described as scholarly, smart, or eloquent. The simple truth, however, is told concerning him, when it is said that he is at once a conscientious and industrious worker in the Lord's vineyard. He is, furthermore, well qualified, in the best sense of the word, for the calling of an evangelist. His life story will in some measure exhibit his religious principles and evangelistic methods.

(From Photograph by Messrs. A. & G. Taylor, Manchester.)

GEORGE NEEDHAM first saw the light on the shores of the Bay of Kenmare, not far from the far-famed lakes of Killarney. His parents were Irish Protestants, and, with nine brothers and sisters, he enjoyed careful religious training. When but five years of age, he was decidedly impressed by an elder sister reciting what she remembered of a sermon she had heard on the second coming of Christ. But it was not until his 18th year, in 1861, when the great revival wave had swept over Ireland, that he found peace in believing. Nine years previously he had stood by the bedside of his dying mother, whose departing blessing was a prayer for the spiritual welfare of her large family. That prayer was heard and answered in a remarkable way. George has long been a successful preacher of the Gospel, ever keeping in mind the great evangelical truth by which he was early impressed; while his three younger brothers have also made good proof of their active ministry for Christ.

At the age of nineteen, young Mr. Needham entered upon business life, obtaining work in a Dublin office. He soon won the respect of his employers. Detecting and exposing a system of fraud which had for some time been in vogue in the office, he became established in the confidence of the firm. Though naturally timid, he boldly preached the Gospel in the surrounding district, and at the close of a year became convinced that the great harvest field was the sphere of his life work. To the great disappointment of his employers, Mr. Needham resigned his business position. After having for some years proclaimed the Gospel with much power and acceptance in Ireland, he was invited to visit England. While in Essex he was thrown into contact with Mr. Spurgeon, then on a visit to Kelvedon, his native place. The Pastors' College was in its infancy, and Mr. Needham was disposed to avail himself of its advantages. Mr. Spurgeon, however, having seen great cause for rejoicing at the results of the young preacher's efforts, recommended him to give uninterrupted attention to evangelisation. Settling down to hard work, Mr. Needham was content to draw his theology from the Bible, in the exposition of which he has ever shown an independence of theological formulas or systematic prestige.

In 1866, Mr. Needham accompanied Mr. H. Grattan Guinness on an evangelistic tour through the North of Ireland. The visit was one of extraordinary interest. Thousands flocked to the services, and conversions were numerous. In the following year our friend met Mr. Moody in London, and formed an acquaintance which has been cherished with mutual affection ever since. Shortly afterwards he went to America, accompanying a sister who was out of health, and not only needed the sea voyage, but desired to visit her sisters in the United States. He carried a letter of introduction to the American churches from Mr. Spurgeon, and intended to stay about three months. Having begun preaching, he found himself in such great demand that returning was indefinitely postponed. In 1869, in company with his newly-married wife, a Massachusetts lady, he spent three months at Chicago. He spent his honeymoon hard at work preaching. Being the guest of Mr. Moody, he enjoyed the visit, and had the pleasure and profit of spiritual communion with Major Whittle and others who have since that time been prominently before the Christian public.

Mr. Needham's distinguishing power lies in the way in which, to use the words of a friendly critic, he "emphasises and elucidates the Bible." Wherever he goes, the same testimony is borne concerning him. God owns and blesses his own Word. The people may be met on Bible ground, the preacher who devotes himself to explaining the Book will infallibly find willing hearers. The Scriptures are still "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." Desiring to prove himself "a man of God...perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works," Mr. Needham has, therefore, made the Bible his rule and its teaching his theme. He has from the first shown himself a really hard-working evangelist. Not only has he preached in all the principal cities of the United States, and organised many branches of the Young Men's Christian Association, but also used his pen with much diligence. Mr. Needham has likewise organised many large conferences on Prophecy and Christian teaching and effort, the latest being one at Philadelphia, on the Inspiration of the Bible. As a public speaker, he enjoys a power of lively fluency which finds many examples among the Irish race. He is now travelling through the counties of the "Isle of Saints," and we are glad to find that he has had a ready hearing in many distinctly Roman Catholic centres. He knows well that loving solicitude and faithful Gospel appeal will touch the hearts of Papists as well as other people.

Mrs. Needham, who usually accompanies her husband in his travels, is widely known through her writings. She is a native of Manchester-by-the-Sea, one of the oldest towns in New England, and of Puritan descent. From her childhood she has known the Scriptures, and has acquired a remarkable facility of exposition. Several American journals have for a long time published articles and poems from her pen. Her meetings for Bible-study and public testimony have been helpful to many. It may be added that, in giving time and energy as a public teacher, she has not neglected her maternal duties. She has two children, both sons, and it is hoped that they are both maturing in wisdom as well as stature, with a view to lives of self-denial in the service of God. Mr. and Mrs. Needham have conjointly prepared for the press a new work, called, "Bible Briefs; or, Studies for Scripture Students."

Doubtless the influence of Mr. Spurgeon and Mr. Guinness were a great help to Mr. Needham in his younger days. In a letter to us, however, our friend recognises another agency which has, under God, been much blessed to him. He says:—

I have been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN from its birth, and all these years it has followed me weekly in my peregrinations. It has had a marked influence upon my life. Having been a pioneer evangelist through many of the States and Canada, and, when far from home and friends, having been frequently looked upon with suspicion, and at times suffered bitter opposition in my efforts to win sinners to Christ, the paper has often come to me like a veritable angelic messenger. The reports of other workers, their afflictions and their successes, have nerved my arm afresh, and kindled a new hope within me.

And more besides, but this meets the case. We sincerely trust that Mr. Needham and his excellent helpmeet will yet see much fruit of their work of faith, labour of love, and patience of hope: moreover, that they will take renewed comfort in prospect of glory and joy which awaits all true workers "before our Lord Jesus at his coming."

THE REVIVAL IN CARDIFF.

THERE has been no cessation of the revival influence here during the week. In the central district and in Cathays three meetings per day are held with manifest blessing, and in Roath marvellous conversions are taking place. The feeling has rested on many minds that a large neutral building is needed to reach those who, from various causes, will not enter any of the chapels. The new Exhibition building if it can be secured will in good measure supply the want thus felt, and efforts are being made to secure it. The Wesleyan friends have rendered noble service in giving up their own work so largely, and lending their fine chapel and schoolroom for united work; but, as that cannot continue, the meetings will again circulate among the chapels, until a great united effort can be made either in the Exhibition buildings, or Park Hall, or on some other neutral ground.

In addition to the districts named, meetings have been held daily with the Taff Vale railway men; at the Docks; and the work has spread to Penarth. Besides there have been morning prayer-meetings in Canton. Inexpressible gratitude rests on the hearts of Christians for the gracious manifestations of the Spirit of God; for the real unity felt and shown; and for the results already seen, as well as the prospect of permanent and lasting good confidently anticipated.

Beginning about the same time, though quite independently, the "Sunday afternoon services for the people," held from three to four o'clock, have been a real success. Large crowds have been attracted to the Park Hall, Christian life quickened, and several known cases of conversion have stamped the work as Divine.

W. HOBSON.

THE STORY OF A TRAMP.

MORE than two years ago the story of C——'s conversion was told in THE CHRISTIAN, but the sequel of his story is so interesting that I have been asked to relate it. He came first to Gray's-yard about four or five years ago. Though we had spoken to him and had helped him to obtain a seaman's berth on board ship, it was not until his return to Gray's-yard in June, 1886, that we heard his story. He was then living for only one object—revenge on the man who had broken up his home in Australia, and gone off with his young wife. This it was that had brought C—— to London, and he seemed determined to take the life of the man, whom he had been following from place to place for three years. His heart, we believe, was touched, and by God's grace he was led to see his own need of pardon, and to seek strength to forgive his enemy. Not long afterwards he met both in Piccadilly, and, avoiding them, turned up Bolton-street. "It would have been very different," he said, "if this had happened a few months ago."

Now comes the sequel. About a year since, I was suggesting to him that he should return to the colonies where he would be more likely to find work. He had come back to Gray's-yard in rags; for, after working in the country during the summer months, another tramp, whom he had befriended, had robbed him of his savings and clothes, and he was once more in the greatest poverty. He seemed, however, very bright, but shook his head at my suggestion, and said he could not leave London yet. I found that he was still hoping to have his wife back again, as she had left the other man; and on asking him if he knew where she was, he replied: "Yes, she was here to-night." She had slipped out immediately after the meeting, but I determined to look out for her another time.

The following Sunday, when I arrived at the mission-room, I saw a girl sitting by the fireplace, with her head hung down and her eyes on the ground. Although it was the depth of winter she was clothed in rags that would hardly hold together, partially covered by a torn and threadbare old waterproof. C—— came in rather late, and took his place on the other side of the room, and I instantly saw that she knew that he was there, and her head went lower still. When the meeting was over, I went up to her, and, finding that she was the one I was looking for, asked her to come to the other end of the room and have a little talk with me. She at once complied, C—— making his way towards us and taking his seat by her side. I have often thought of the picture they made as they sat there, both in rags, but he with his face beaming with delight, and she too much ashamed to raise her eyes.

She seemed thoroughly penitent, and as I talked with her, he continually put in a little word of comment. I asked her if she believed in her husband's forgiveness. "Oh, yes," she replied, giving him a tearful look full of gratitude and affection. "And why do you believe it? Is it not because you believe he loves you?" "Yes," she answered; and then I was able to tell her how far more willing God was to receive and forgive her, and how much greater was his love. As she listened, the light seemed to break in, and we believe that she too accepted Christ as her Saviour; and both went away rejoicing.

C—— was very anxious to have a home of his own once more, as he said he would not take her back to a common lodging-house; a few days afterwards he found a room which we assisted them to take and furnish. They were easily satisfied, for their requirements were very simple. "You will want a table," I said, offering to lend them money for its purchase. "Oh, no," said C——, "there's a cupboard in the room, and the shelf does quite well." "Have you got a bedstead?" "No, we don't want one, the bed on the floor is all right." A teapot I considered quite indispensable and suggested it, but C—— said he had an old tin can that answered every purpose. So they set up housekeeping once more, with a bed, blanket, and quilt, two broken chairs, a penny lamp, one or two other necessaries, and a pail which they purchased cheaply because it had a hole in the bottom; the whole suite of furniture costing 16s.

When I went to visit them in their new home, I understood their fear of over furnishing, for there certainly would not have been space for either table or bedstead, the bed rolled up in the corner leaving only just space for one to sit down comfortably in the tiny little room. But how proud they were of it all, and told me they had never been so happy in their lives before. "Oh, miss, isn't it pretty?" said Mrs. C——, several times during my visit, as she looked proudly round her home, which was as clean as soap and water could make it, and explained to me the mysteries of housekeeping on a very small scale—how long a halfpenny worth of oil would last, &c.

C—— set up as an orange-seller, but found it very difficult to make ends meet, in spite of the strictest economy, and we were very glad when by the kindness of several friends we were able to send them out to Canada. I have had several letters from them, each telling of slowly brightening prospects, and in one lately received from C——, he says, "I have been in constant work since Sept. 11, so that we have got a snug little home at last, but it cost £4 10s. without the stove, that cost 12½ dollars; but it is worth more—we got it at a sale. We have a barrel of flour in for the winter, but I thank God for the little we have got, and that I am able to work for more; thank God for it. Good news! Caroline has started a mothers' meeting with four members besides herself. Sometimes I am allowed in the kitchen to hear the singing if I am very good."

Surely we may expect this little effort may be used of God who has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the mighty." After the joint signature to the letter, C—— adds, "We are Simply trusting every day,

Trusting through a stormy way,
Even when my faith is small,
Trusting Jesus, that is all."

Such cases as this, and others that we might relate, encourage us to go on with a work which is often disheartening, and always sad. Those who know Gray's-yard will be interested to hear that a fresh branch of work is begun. The basement of the new premises is to be used as a men's lodging-house, the charge being fourpence a night, including food evening and morning. We hope soon to have over sixty beds, although we begin with a smaller number. There has been considerable outlay in furnishing the lodging-house and soup kitchen, which is to be opened shortly, but we hope that when this has been subscribed they will be self-supporting. Rev. F. B. Meyer, who has had valuable experience in this sort of work, has kindly promised to superintend the lodging-house. Nearly £2200 are still required to cover all the expenses of the building of the new premises.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—The usual all-day meeting was held on Friday last, and was a time of much spiritual refreshment. It was remarkable that, without any pre-arrangement, the addresses, morning, afternoon, and evening, all took the same general tone—viz., the call of God to his people to self-sacrifice; the necessity of putting away all self-dependence; and the unlimited resources we have in the Lord Jesus Christ, through the Holy Spirit, for the accomplishing of God's purposes in the earth.

XVI.—THE PRIESTHOOD OF CHRIST.

HEBREWS vii.

VARIOUS fancies have gathered around the person of Melchizedek, investing him with extraordinary qualities, but it is better far to think of him simply as the head or chieftain of a large family or clan, which gathered around the site to be known, in after years, as "the holy city." Already its name was shadowed forth in the term, "Salem," that designated the clustered rude huts or tents. Amid the almost universal lawlessness and depravity which swept over Palestine, righteousness and peace seem to have fled for shelter to this little community, where alone due reverence was given to the Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth.

How this oasis had come into existence amid the surrounding moral desert, we cannot tell; but it may have been due to the commanding personal influence of the king, who, according to patriarchal custom, as father of the family, was not only the ruler of the family life, but leader in the family devotions; and thus, whilst Melchizedek was king of Salem, he was also priest of the Most High. Moreover, it would appear that he bore a special commission, and was raised up for a specific purpose, as the ordained messenger between God and men, and as embodying a striking portraiture of the priesthood exercised for man by the Son of God.

Note the significance of the words, made like unto the Son of God (3). Christ's eternal Priesthood was the archetypal reality, after the similitude of which that of Melchizedek was fashioned. It was as if the Father could not await the day of his Son's priestly entrance within the veil, but must needs anticipate the marvels of his ministry, by embodying its leading features in miniature. Let us now study some of them.

I. CHRIST IS KING AS WELL AS PRIEST (1).—History gives its unanimous judgment against the temporal and the spiritual power being vested in the same man. In Israel the two offices were kept rigorously separate; and when, on one occasion, a king passed the sacred barriers, and, snatching up a censer, strode into the inner court, he was at once followed by the remonstrances of the priestly band, whilst the white brand of leprosy wrote his doom upon his brow; "and he himself hastened to go out, because the Lord had smitten him." But the simple monarch, of whom we write, living before gathering abuses forbade the union, combined in his person the royal sceptre and the sacerdotal censer. And herein he foreshadowed the Christ.

Jesus is King and Priest. He is King, because He is a Priest.—He is highly exalted, demanding homage from every knee, and confession from every lip, because He became obedient to the death of the cross. He bases his royal claims, not on hereditary descent, though the blood of David flowed in his veins; not on conquest or superior force; not on the legislation that underpins the kingdom of heaven among men; but on this, that He redeemed us to God by his blood. He is the King of glory, because He is the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. The cross was the stepping-stone to his throne.

And He cannot fulfil his office as Priest unless He be first recognised as King.—Many fail to derive all the blessing offered to men, through the Priesthood of Christ, because they are not willing to admit his claims as King. They do not reverence and obey Him. They do not open the whole of the inner realm to his sceptre. They endeavour to serve two masters, and to stand well with empires as different as light and darkness, heaven and hell, God and Satan. There must be consecration before there can be perfect faith, coronation before deliverance, the King before the Priest.

The order is invariable; first King of Righteousness, and after that also King of Peace (2).—Peace, give us peace, is the importunate demand of men; peace at any price; by all means peace. But God, in the deep waters, lays the foundation of righteousness, "and the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever." It is of no use to heal the wound slightly, saying, "Peace, peace," when there is none. Infinitely better is it to probe them to the bottom, and to build up from a sound and healthy foundation to the surface of the flesh. And the King of Peace will never enter your soul until you have first acknowledged Him as King of Righteousness, submitting yourself to his righteous claims, and renouncing the righteousness which is of the law for that which is by faith.

It is lamentable to find how few Christians, comparatively, are realising the full meaning or power of Christianity. Joyless, fruitless, powerless, they are a stumbling-block to the world, and a mockery to devils. And is not the reason here? They are not right. They are harbouring traitors and aliens in their souls. They constantly condemn themselves in things that they allow. No doubt they excuse themselves, and invent special reasons to palliate their faults, so that what would be inadmissible with others is pardonable in them. What special pleading! What ingenious arguments! What gymnastic feats are theirs! But all in vain. Let any such who read these lines learn that it is peremptory to make Christ King, and King of Righteousness, before ever they can appreciate the peace which accrues from his Priesthood on our behalf.

II. CHRIST'S PRIESTHOOD WAS NOT INHERITED (3).—This also comes out clearly in the history of the priest-king of Salem. The Levitical priest had carefully to trace his connection with Aaron, and hence the elaborate genealogies with which some parts of the Bible are full. The priests, at the time of the return from Babylon, who could not prove their pedigree, were suspended until a priest rose up with Urim and Thummim. But Melchizedek's priesthood had evidently nothing to do with his descent. He was independent of priestly pedigree. Of course, it is not necessary to infer that he really had no human parentage, and that he knew neither birth nor death. This is neither stated nor assumed. The argument is simply built on the omission of any special reference to these ordinary events in human life; and aims to prove that, therefore, this old-world priesthood was quite independent of those conditions, which were of prime importance in the Levitical dispensation. It was of an entirely different order from that which officiated in the Jewish Temple; and was, therefore, so capable to represent Christ's.

As God, our Lord had no mother. As man, no father. He did not spring from a family of priests, for it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning the priesthood. What was allegorically true of Melchizedek was literally true of Jesus; who has had neither beginning of days, nor end of life. His Priesthood, therefore, is utterly unique. He stands amongst men unrivalled. None like Him before or since. His functions derived from none, shared by none, transmitted to none. Made what He was from all eternity by the foreknowledge and counsel of God.

There never was a beginning to the priestliness of our Saviour's heart. There is no date in heaven's calendar for the uprising within Him of mercy and pity, and the intention to stand as the advocate and intercessor for our race. Before the mountains were brought forth, or the heavens and earth were made, there was already in his thoughts the germ of that marvellous drama which is slowly unfolding before the gaze of the universe. He was Priest, as well as the Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world. Love is eternal. Sacrifice is one of the root principles of the being of God. Priesthood is part of the texture of the nature of the Second Person in the adorable Trinity. There need be no fear, therefore, that He will ever desert his office, or lay it aside for some other purpose, or cease to have compassion on the ignorant and erring, the tempted and fallen.

III. CHRIST'S PRIESTHOOD IS CONTINUAL (3).—The priests of Aaron's line were not suffered to continue by reason of death. But of Him "it is witnessed that He liveth" (8). Hallelujah! a Priest has arisen "after the power of an endless life" (16). "The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a Priest for ever" (21). "Because He abideth for ever, his Priesthood is unchangeable" (24). "He ever liveth to make intercession" (25). "Consecrated for evermore" (28). What explicit and abundant testimony! Our High Priest shall never ascend Mount Hor to be stripped of his robes of office and die. The secrets confided to Him need never be told again to his successor. The tender love which links Him and us shall never be snapped or cut in death. No one else will ever be called in to take his place in the superintendence of our souls.

This teaching rebukes two errors.—(1) The error of those who teach sinlessness in the flesh—It is impossible to exaggerate the mischief which is being wrought just now by some who take advantage of the universal yearning for a higher experience, and are holding out to credulous souls the prospect of reaching a position in which they will no longer need to confess sin, no longer require perpetual cleansing in the blood of Christ, no longer be sensible of their sinnership.

Such teaching confounds sin and sins. It applies the term infirmity to acts and dispositions which the Word of God calls by blacker, darker names. It lowers a man's standard of sin to suit the erroneous doctrine which he has imbibed. It is contrary to the distinct teaching of Scripture that the flesh in the believer may yet lust for the upper hand. It is in opposition to all deeper experience of the Christian life, which goes to show that, even when we know nothing against ourselves, yet are we not hereby justified, because there may be many evils of which, for want of clearer light, we are completely ignorant, but which stand out patent enough to the eye of Him who judges us, the Lord who searches the heart and reins.

(2) The error of those who teach the perpetuity of a sacrificing priesthood.—Of course all believers are priests, in the sense of offering the sacrifice of praise and prayer, the burnt offerings of self-denying love. But there are many among us who persist in affirming that they are called, in addition, constantly to offer the perpetual sacrifice of Calvary, in the elements of the Lord's Supper. Amid the ceremonial of the mass, as offered in too many of our English churches by professedly Protestant priests, it is hard to see any trace of the simple institution of the Lord's Supper. And it makes one tingle with righteous indignation to see the way in which these blind leaders of the blind are deceiving the multitudes to the ruin of their souls.

Sometimes one longs for the withering sarcasm of an Erasmus, the sturdy common sense of a Latimer, the vehemence of a Knox to show up the unscriptural pretensions of these men; tricked out in the gaudy finery of pagan costumes, and going through mummeries which would provoke to laughter, if the whole system were not so inexpressibly sad. How long, O Lord, how long!

But, after all, the true way to meet these errors is to insist upon our Lord's continual and unchangeable intercession and priesthood. Surely if He lives and continues his work, it is a piece of impertinent and arrogant folly to intrude upon his functions. We must revert to the earlier methods of Scriptural interpretation and exposition before ever we shall be able to forearm our young people against the monstrous errors of our times, or win back those who have been so disastrously led astray.

JEWS IN CAIRO.—DEAR SIR,—My sister, Miss M. L. Whately, and the helpers and friends of the Cairo Medical Mission have been long anxious to extend its benefits to the numerous Jews in the city, many of whom are miserably poor and very sickly, from the unhealthiness of their special quarter. We now find this could be done if £50 a year were added to the very moderate Medical Mission funds. Will some friends of Israel help to raise this small amount? Miss Jourdan, 21, Westbourne-park Villas, London, W., is hon. secretary.
—Yours faithfully, E. JANE WHATELY.
Cairo, Jan. 19.

HOUNSLOW.—A generous officer began a Soldiers' Club at Hounslow two years ago, and said he disapproved of cramming religion down the men's throats; but, after reading the memorials of Miss Elizabeth Wesley, who did such a noble work among soldiers, he came forward as a changed man. He declared publicly that he had been brought to see how essential the religious element was, and handed the Club and its furniture over to be converted into a true "Soldiers' Home." This Home now bears Miss Wesley's name, and an effort is begun to secure a large and permanent institute, to be designated "The Miss Wesley Soldiers' Home." Hoping to see this object accomplished, Mrs. Wesley and her husband have promised £100 to the fund for the purpose. Hounslow, more than any other garrison in England, needs such a Home.

MISSIONARY ARROWROOT.—The missionary arrowroot, by which the native communicants in the New Hebrides islands of Aneityum and Futuna, in the Pacific Ocean, maintain Divine ordinances among themselves, and purchase copies of the Word of God in their own tongue, has just reached Edinburgh. Orders for any quantity above one pound should be sent to Messrs. Dymock, Guthrie & Howden, 135, George-street, Edinburgh (telegraphic address, "Dymock," Edinburgh), who have kindly undertaken, on behalf of the Foreign Missions Committee of the Free Church of Scotland, to supply this finest arrowroot at 1s. 3d. per lb. Last year's consignment yielded above £200 net, making the two Aneityum congregations of Anelcauhat and Anamè, to which Rev. J. Lawrie has ministered for the past ten years, practically self-supporting, while they send out native teachers to still heathen islands.

For the Young.

"GOD FEEDETH THEM."

How I wish I could have you here at my cottage window, far away in the cold North, one of these keen, frosty January mornings (I am writing, you must know, in the very heart of our winter), to draw aside the curtain very softly and to peep out upon the green, mossy grass, exquisitely silver-spangled, in the bright beams of the newly risen sun. You would see the prettiest sight imaginable — brown-coated thrushes, yellow-beaked blackbirds, scarlet-vested robins, merry, chirping sparrows, black-and-white wagtails, nearly a score, with now and then a big, awkward rook in the midst, evidently deemed an intruder by the rest of the party, all enjoying a most sumptuous breakfast.

"Breakfast! How came breakfast there?" you ask.

Let me explain. Every night I scatter upon the same spot, a plentiful supply of bread crumbs; and so well do my tame feathered pets understand this, that no sooner do they unfold their wings, with the first glad streaks of dawn, than they fly away where they never for a moment doubt they shall find ready waiting for them their morning meal. Dear, beautiful birds. They have neither storehouse nor barn; through my humble hand, "God feedeth them." What precious lessons they teach me of daily spiritual expectancy, and of simple, unwavering trust.

But our Heavenly Father permits you and me to do far more than feed robins and blackbirds. I wish to secure the loving prayers and the practical help of every young reader of THE CHRISTIAN for the boys and girls day-by-day—exactly like the ravens and the lilies—God-fed and God-clothed under the roof of our Highland Orphanage.

To those of you in Australia, India, Canada, and our other British colonies, whose parents are Scotch, if not actually Highland, and whom you have often heard speak so enthusiastically of the loved old country—

> Land of brown heath and shaggy wood,
> Land of the mountain and the flood—

I send a special appeal. Please tell my request to father, or mother; to uncle, or aunt; or, best of all, to dear old "grannie," if the grey hairs have not yet gone down with honour to a foreign grave. I know the answer, the bright responsive smile mingled with the sudden tear, which you cannot possibly comprehend, as long-buried memories of thirty, forty, fifty years instantly flit back—dreamlike, beautiful. "Help! to be sure! An Orphanage in Inverness—why, we never heard of it before, and these poor children so tenderly cared for—by all means, let us help!"

Help is continually needed to keep our porridge and broth pots boiling, and to get Maggie and Jeannie new frocks and hats, and Willie and Donald new boots and jackets. This year, too, in July, we hope to have a sale of work to clear the debt, and to complete the furnishing of the recent addition to our Orphanage, the Victoria Home. Mrs. Forbes, of Culloden, Inverness, N.B., will be pleased to receive boxes of foreign handiwork, curiosities, pictures, shells, fruits—in short, anything and everything that you are able to send us.

When April comes, laden with its violets and primroses, I quite expect that my present morning visitors will thank me in concert by many a sweet carol; and if you ever cross the sea, and take a summer trip to our romantic Highland capital, I can promise you that thirty-five happy little singers will welcome you with the most charming song of gratitude. The first sight of their bonnie, sunny faces will infinitely more than repay you.

Dingwall, N.B. CLARA ST. CLAIR.

TWELVE YEARS OLD.

BY THE LATE Dr. A. RALEIGH.

No word is spoken in the Gospel story about the earliest years of the Saviour's life. We never see Him after He is presented in the Temple till He is twelve years old. Not one thing about Him is told us from the time He was an infant until now, when He is a lad. Some people have thought this very strange, as no doubt it is, that the Son of God should grow up in a human home, in a house, in a street; should be fed and clothed, and go out and come in, and meet with other children, and learn lessons, and talk to his mother and to other people, and pray to God his Father—strange that He should do all this for twelve years, and yet that we should not be told one word about it. We do not know anything He said; we do not know anything He did for all that time.

Well, I think it shows this—that God can carry on his greatest work, and say nothing about it. His own dear Son was in the world twelve years, and no one knew about Him; at least no one but his mother and Joseph. During all that time He was a perfect child—just what a growing child ought to be—and yet no one really thought that He was the Son of God, the Saviour of the world. His mother knew a good deal; but even she did not know all, and sometimes, I daresay, could hardly tell what to think of his wonderful childhood.

I think this twelve years' silence shows us this, that little boys and girls, if they want to be God's children, ought to be quiet—they ought not to be much seen or much heard. They ought to listen more than they speak. They ought to learn. They may talk to one another or to their parents; for God means children to talk, just as He means the birds to sing; but they must not try to put themselves forward as if they were great persons, for they are not. Jesus was great, the greatest of all, yet He was quiet and retiring. You, dear children, are not great, although you are so very dear to many; do not act as if you were. Be silent; be busy; be humble.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Feb. 10, Luke iii. 1—14; Mon., Feb. 11, Luke iii. 15—23; Tues., Feb. 12, Luke iv. 1—15; Wed., Feb. 13, Luke iv. 16—32; Thurs., Feb. 14, Luke iv. 33—44; Fri., Feb. 15, Luke v. 1—15; Sat., Feb. 16, Luke v. 16—26.

SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—In compliance with an invitation from a united meeting of the Baptist, Independent, and Wesleyan schools, Mr. Josiah Spiers has conducted a fortnight's mission to children and young people in the Fuller Chapel, Kettering. The ground was well prepared by various meetings for prayer and conference, &c. The services were well attended. Many anxious ones remained behind for personal conversation. At the final meeting regrets were expressed that the mission had been brought to a close, and many prayers offered for the work of the Special Service Mission.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Home of Industry, Bethnal Green, Feb. 3—8, 7 p.m.; Finsbury Park Hall, Feb. 9—19, 7 p.m.; New Barnet, Feb. 23—24. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Christ Church Parochial Room, Cancell-road, North Brixton, workers' meetings, Feb. 22—24, at 8; childrens' meetings, Feb. 25 to March 9, at 7. Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Cotton-street, Poplar, Feb. 5—8; Caterham, Feb. 17—22.

BIBLE STAND, CRYSTAL PALACE.—The total receipts of last year exceeded those of 1887 by nearly £300, while the number of Gospels disposed of was also greatly increased. The circulation is carried on chiefly through the book post, and unpaid agents. The Bible carriage in France still continues its work, and is a great success. Help is needed for the work in Ireland, Spain, Vienna, and Berlin, as well as for the general fund.

SPANISH EVANGELICAL MISSION.

In its general features the work carried on by Pastor and Madame Lopez Rodriguez in the province of Gerona, north-east Spain, is well-known to our readers. With Figueras as a centre, the operations are steadily extending, and while the past is a record of blessing, the future is full of promise. The Gospel is now preached in eight halls, and there are five Sunday-schools in which the workers and converts exert themselves in the interests of the young. Night-schools and mothers' meetings are also carried on at the chief stations.

The medical mission is a great power for good. During last year some 1760 patients attended, and received advice and medicine; many of them also received copies of the New Testament. Words and deeds of sympathy have transformed into friends some who had previously been bitterly opposed. The success with which cases of intermittent fever were treated last year gained for the Mission a high medical reputation, and priestly denunciations were but little regarded when the cheering effects of the Mission remedies were observed.

Prejudice has thus been effectually removed, especially in Castillon. Only four years ago Pastor Lopez Rodriguez and his brother were compelled to flee from this place under a shower of stones; now there is a Gospel hall open, and among the officials and the public there are those who will befriend and protect the evangelists.

Colportage work proceeds actively among the mountains, and much success attends it. Sometimes fanatics insult and illtreat the colporteur, who has, however, to be ready to take unkindness as a matter of course. El Heraldo, the monthly illustrated Mission paper, is making many friends. The converts engage in tract distribution, and thus become confirmed in the faith themselves. In the fifth "Letter from Spain," just issued, Pastor Lopez Rodriguez gives an interesting account of the work. We cite one remarkable case (details of which have reached us since the "Letter" went to press) which occurred in a town some distance from Figueras, in which a branch of the Mission exists.

From curiosity, a notorious character was induced to listen at the foot of the stairs to the preaching in the hall. Becoming interested, he crept upstairs, and was invited to enter by the converts, who could hardly believe that he really desired to join their number. For three months he never missed a meeting. One night, weary from work, he went early to bed. Living next door to the hall, he was awakened by the sounds of the harmonium, and, springing up, he dressed and hurried into the meeting. Before all the converts he told his sad story. Asked by Pastor Rodriguez if he would accept Christ as his Saviour, he replied, "Only one thing keeps me back. I have yet one debt of revenge to pay. There is one enemy I can never forgive. In the war I was taken prisoner. On my knees, clasping a crucifix, I implored for mercy. It was granted by all but one, who turned the tide against me. Aim was taken; in a moment more I should have been shot dead had not some friends suddenly arrived to rescue me. That man I can never forgive, and would take his life if I could." The pastor laid his hand on the man's shoulder, and reminded him that Christ on the cross forgave those who were taking his life, and added, "Who can tell that your enemy may not come here, be converted, and ask your pardon?" The poor man tried hard to keep back his tears, and, in a tremulous voice, replied, "It is true! It is true! There is now nothing to keep me back."

We recorded last year the very serious illness of the pastor, which greatly impeded the work; we regret to have to state that he is still under medical care.

Among the present needs of the Mission are medicines and bandages, electros for illustrating El Heraldo, magic lantern slides, materials for sewing classes and mothers' meetings, and old and new clothing. Parcels may be sent to Miss Smith, Fairfield House, Hampstead-hill Gardens, N.W. The treasurer is Rev. J. C. Stewart Mathias, Aldringham Vicarage, Saxmundham, Suffolk. The address of the Mission is Calle Pedro, 3, Figueras, Spain.

REFUGE WORK IN MANCHESTER.

A truly excellent work is done by the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes and Children's Aid Society, which has just entered upon its twentieth year. The report of operations during 1888 is full of interest. The Committee is made up of true-hearted workers, under whom devoted servants of Christ labour with much earnestness in sheltering the weak and caring for neglected children, with a view to establishing their feet in the paths of wisdom and virtue.

The Central Refuge and Industrial Home in Strangeways is the headquarters of many agencies of love and mercy. There are Homes for orphans and working boys, for girls and young emigrants in training, and other valuable institutions, making thirteen in all. Altogether 506 children were under care in the Homes during the year, and of that number eighty-five were placed in good homes in Canada. Over 200 little ones enjoyed a brief stay in the sea-side Home at Lytham; upwards of 400 poor Manchester boys had a week under canvas in the summer at Ansdell; and 232 little ones were received into the Shelter for Wandering Children, the door of which is never closed. No fewer than ninety-one of these waifs and strays were introduced by police officers, and a still larger number were admitted between the hours of ten p.m. and three a.m., a fact which eloquently shows the need for this agency. At the prevention of cruelty to children branch, the cases of 443 children were investigated; while the industrial brigades were conducted with success, a number of boys having also been provided with situations. The Prison Gate Mission, carried on by a band of devoted Christian ladies and gentlemen, is a specially interesting department of work. No fewer than 11,425 discharged prisoners accepted invitations to the mission-room, and 3534 voluntarily signed the pledge. Moreover, 57 girls and women entered Rescue Homes, while a large number, chiefly young women, were assisted to lead better lives.

The Institution at Strangeways is being extended, and a Home for Crippled and Incurable Children is being established at Cheetham Hill. It is hoped that by structural improvements and additions the important work of the various Homes and agencies will be materially facilitated. The committee's desires are efficiently carried out by a staff of earnest workers, and seconded by a considerable number of volunteers, who have contributed in no small degree to the attainment of results which are as gratifying as they are truly blessed. Manchester, however, needs unflagging attention at the hands of its Christian philanthropists. The report shows that, with God on their side, and cheering supporters behind them, the committee intend to go forward with their grand work. We are confident that their endeavours will redound to the glory of God, and trust they will also make an impression upon the misery and crime which prevail among the poor and neglected classes of the population.

MALTA.—Evangelistic meetings have been conducted by Major Sherrard, Royal Engineers, at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home. The evangelist's clear and persuasive way of presenting the Gospel has been blessed of God in the winning of some souls.

Personalia.

Mr. W. Noble.—Late accounts from Malvern give the satisfactory intelligence that Mr. Noble is progressing favourably, if slowly, towards recovery.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon is recovering, but somewhat slowly, from the effects of his recent accident. He writes to his congregation that he hopes to be with them on Sunday, 24th inst.

Miss Frances E. Willard is writing her autobiography. It will contain illustrations in colours, representing some of the State and national banners of the peaceful army waging war for God and home and native land.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, has lately been suffering severely from neuralgia. He has been advised to take a sea voyage to restore him to health, and he is leaving this week for New Zealand to visit his brother, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, the pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle at Auckland.

Dr. Ziemann, we are sorry to hear, is laid aside. Just as he was starting to resume his work in Germany, his health, long failing, gave way. His doctor pronounced the symptoms to be such as threatened a serious malady, and ordered immediate and entire rest. Our readers are asked to pray that it may please God to restore him.

Mr. George Muller was preaching in Calcutta on Sunday, January 6. At the Methodist Church, Dhurrumtollah-street, in the morning, after reading and commenting upon Ps. ciii., he referred to the history of his conversion, "sixty-three years and six weeks ago." "The veteran of eighty-five," says The Indian Witness, "spoke with a vigour, earnestness, and force that are seldom seen even in young men."

Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke purposes sailing from England for West Africa on Saturday, March 16, and hopes to reach Lokoja, a C.M.S. mission station some 300 miles up the Niger River, about May 10. For a time Mr. Wilmot-Brooke will be associated with the Church Missionary Society's Niger Mission in his efforts as an independent pioneer missionary to reach the Mohammedan Soudan.

Mr. David Macdonald, a well-known Canadian business man and evangelist, is about to visit this country, and purposes to conduct Gospel services in England and Scotland, as the way may open up. He is highly spoken of by Rev. Dr. Parsons, of Toronto, and other Canadian workers. Any friends desiring his services should communicate with his secretary, Mr. E. Farnol, 28, Waldemar-avenue, Fulham, S.W.

Mr. Cuthbert Nairn and Miss Jessie Nairn, who lately left England for Morocco, North Africa, as missionary representatives of the Ayrshire Christian Union, safely arrived at Mogador on Thursday, January 10, after a pleasant journey, and in excellent health. They were accorded a hearty welcome by Mr. E. F. Baldwin and his family, in conjunction with whom they are to engage in work in and around Mogador.

Dr. F. W. Baedeker writes from Sevastopol, Jan. 22:—The Kaukasian fever has followed me, and, after repeated attacks, has left me very weak. I take it as a call from the Lord to come home and rest awhile. I hope to be able to visit one or two prisons before I break off my work, and I trust the Lord will enable me in a few months to take it up with renewed vigour. It is like going into the very breeding-dens of sin and iniquity, yet we know that "where sin aboundeth, the grace of God doth much more abound." I hope yet to revisit Odessa on my way home. Praise the Lord for all his goodness hitherto!

A MISSIONARY CONGREGATION.—The Free Church congregation at Pollokshields, Glasgow (Rev. James Wells, minister), undertakes to pay £150 a year toward the salary of Dr. Kerr Cross, one of the missionaries in Livingstonia, Lake Nyassa, and at the same time to support a native Santhal boy in Central Africa, and one of the rescued slaves who have been taken to Aden.

A CHILDREN'S CRECHE has been opened in connection with the Wesleyan West Central Mission, at Lincoln House, Greek-street, Soho. A registry office for domestic servants has been opened at Wardour Hall. Applications can be made personally, every Wednesday and Saturday, from eleven to one. Letters should be addressed to Sister Mary, Lincoln House, 60, Greek-street, Soho, W.C.

MR. MOODY IN SAN FRANCISCO.

ON Sabbath morning, January 6, Mr. D. L. Moody commenced special services in this city. For many weeks previous great preparations were made. This earnest work, combined with prayer going up daily for a rich blessing, and backed by the co-operation of the different churches, is already bearing fruit. Over a thousand people were turned away on the first evening, the enormous pavilion seated for 6000 being packed. The interest has been kept up; every night sees the doors closed and many turned away unable to gain admittance. The work in the inquiry-room has grown to such an extent that the workers are unable to go in until after Mr. Moody has addressed the seekers, because there are so many desiring to know the way of life.

Little over a week has passed. The Bible-readings have been moved from a large church to the largest in the city, in order to accommodate those who come every afternoon to hear the Word of God. The singing of the Gospel songs, led by Mr. George C. Stebbins, is soul inspiring, as are also the solos and duets by Mr. Stebbins and Miss Boole.

The churches—nay, the whole city, seems to be aroused. Mr. Moody's mission will be followed by one under Mr. Sam Jones. The Christians are praying and working, and who knows but that the name "Wicked City," which has so long been coupled with that of San Francisco, may be changed to "City where God dwells." ROBERT S. BOYNS.

San Francisco, Cal., January 14.

The San Francisco Pacific, of January 16, says:—

The interest in the Moody meetings is unabated. A prominent and very intelligent layman in one of our churches said the other day that he thought no class received more benefit from these meetings than the ministers. Mr. Moody's earnest, plain, direct, practical preaching has a lesson for them which they need to learn and which they do learn. Some of our ministers from the country are attending the meetings. We wish many of them could spend a week or two here now. On Sabbath afternoon a brother said, "How many of these thousands in the pavilion do you think are church-goers?" "Not one-half," was the reply. At no religious meeting held for years in this city have there been so many non-church-goers.

OBITUARY.

M. ROSSEEUW ST. HILAIRE.

ANOTHER star has gone from the earthly horizon to be for ever with the Lord. This aged and much-loved servant of God, whose vital union with Christ and whose loving spirit was a felt power in his daily life and intercourse, earnestly desired that the love of Jesus should be known and accepted by his French countrymen. For this he laboured personally, and sympathised heartily with all efforts to promote it.

MR. BENJAMIN WIGMORE.

This gentleman, for many years Literary Secretary of the Eastbourne Y.M.C.A., was buried on Saturday with public honours. Deceased, who had been eight years on The Eastbourne Gazette, was fifty-eight years of age, and was a very useful, able, and popular Christian man; The Sussex Daily News gave a copious record of his high gifts. character, and well-spent life. At the funeral most of the societies in Eastbourne were represented, and all the local papers.

MR. T. A. BEWLEY, DUBLIN.

This gentleman, a member of the Society of Friends, met with his death in a sad manner a few days ago. With his wife, he was ever engaged in works of love and mercy, and it was whilst arranging for the comfort and enlightenment of others that he met his end. As he was providing for a magic-lantern entertainment, he had occasion to carry some hydrogen in a steel bottle. The vessel exploded, however, and he was shockingly mutilated, death being instantaneous. Mrs. Bewley is quite prostrate under the terrible shock.

Evangelistic Notes.

Maindee, Newport.—A marked work of revival has been in progress at the Baptist Chapel here, in connection with the evangelical labours of Rev. F. C. Spurr, of Cardiff.

Mr. Alexander McGrimman, from Canada, has been conducting a series of evangelistic meetings in Richmond Hall, Huntly. The meetings have been fairly well attended.

Messrs. Middleton and Hogben commenced a month's mission at the Edinburgh Castle (Dr. Barnardo's) on Sunday last. Meetings will be held every week evening except Friday.

Mr. E. J. Parker has closed a fourteen days' mission at Emanuel Church, Falmouth. The word, in speech and song, was with power; a large number of adults and young people professed to decide for Christ.

Mr. A. A. Harmer conducted evangelistic services in the Baptist Chapel, March, Cambs., from Jan. 20—30. Men and women were convinced of sin under the preaching of the word, and led to trust in Christ. Among the converts are a goodly number of the elder scholars of the Sunday-school.

Miss Smith and Miss Bax have concluded a successful mission at Tunbridge Wells. The addresses on Christian living were particularly blessed; while whole families came to the Lord in answer to prayer. The solo and duet singing were a means, through God, of drawing hearers to the Saviour.

Mr. and Mrs. Evens (The Gipsy Lass) have closed a successful mission at the Coton-road Congregational Church, Nuneaton. A goodly company professed conversion, many of them being young people connected with Bible-classes. The singing of Mrs. Evens produced a marked effect upon the crowded congregations.

Mr. Arthur Cook, of the Evangelisation Society, during January, was working in the Spalding district of Lincolnshire with many tokens of blessing. In every place he has visited it has been pleasingly made manifest that the Gospel is the power of God to salvation. Mr. Cook requests prayer for special services being held at Luxborough until Feb. 24.

Rev. E. P. Hammond in Michigan.—Mr. Hammond has been holding united services in Saginaw City. The Spirit of God has been working among the young and old. Only those who work in the inquiry-meetings can fully realise this. One evening about one hundred spoke in a "praise meeting." Many teachers testified that nearly all in their classes had professed conversion; and parents told how they had seen a great change in their children.

An eight days' mission has been held in connection with the Ryde Y.W.C.A. and Sea-side Home, by Miss Naish from Weston-super-Mare. There were many indications of God's blessing, in the earnest inquiry of some, and in others a deep conviction of sin, while several were brought to the saving knowledge of the truth. A request was made by the women for Miss Naish to continue longer among them, or to return soon to Ryde.

Mr. Charles Inglis.—During the whole of January, Mr. Inglis conducted meetings in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. The sight witnessed, especially on Sunday night, will long be remembered; nearly five thousand people have been crowded into the building, and the vast audiences have been spell-bound, while the preacher told out the Gospel in all its fulness, and warned the careless of their doom. The Spirit of God worked mightily among the people. The many workers were occupied often till a late hour in pointing the anxious ones to the Lord Jesus. Mr. Inglis is now holding meetings twice each day in Huntingdon.

Douglas, Isle of Man.—Mr. Henry Thorne has held a ten days' Gospel mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A. The Bible-readings were owned of God, in strengthening believers. The Association Rooms were packed by members of the different churches, gathered to unite in waiting upon God and feeding on his Word. The Gospel meetings in the Wellington Hall were largely attended, and accompanied with power. Hundreds remained to the after-meetings, and many professed to have found peace in believing. The Association was burdened with a debt of £60, which was removed through Mr. Thorne's efforts, before the close of the mission.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is conducting a successful mission in Bethel Congregational Church, Wortley, Leeds. Friday nights are set apart specially for sceptics and others, and the evangelist answers questions put to him by those present.

Rev. G. C. Grubb has conducted a week's special mission services at Manorhamilton, Ireland. assisted by the rector of the parish, Rev. Isaac Coulter. The addresses of Mr. Grubb were most solemn and searching, and were greatly blessed to many.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has lately held a successful week's mission at the Congregational Church, Luton. Over a hundred persons went into the inquiry-room, and professed to have decided for Jesus Christ. A week's mission has also been conducted by Mr. Balgarnie at the Balham Congregational Church. The services were well attended, and the mission resulted in some sixty persons giving in their names as having decided for Christ. The occasion was rendered more impressive by the sad loss sustained by Mr. Balgarnie in the death of his son at the beginning of the mission. The courage and self-denial shown by the missioner under these trying circumstances were thoroughly appreciated by his audiences. The evangelist has also had a week's mission at Vicar-lane Chapel, Coventry. A large number of young people have been deeply impressed, and many led to decision for Christ.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—Special missions by preachers of the Church Parochial Mission Society are shortly to be held at Newcastle on-Tyne, Ramsgate, and Reading. At Newcastle services will be held in eleven churches, there being fifteen missioners, including Revs. W. Hay Aitken, H. Armstrong Hall, W. Haslam, Dr. Morris, J. Stephens, and others. At Ramsgate four of the churches will unite in the mission, and at Reading ten. The following missions have also been arranged in connection with the Society.. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Revs. W. Hay Aitken and J. Stephens: to Feb. 11, St. John's, Waterloo, Liverpool. Rev. C. I. Atherton: Feb. 9 to 18, North Molton, Devon; Feb. 19 to 21, Totnes. Rev. M. C. Bickersteth: Feb. 21 to Mar. 3, St. Clement's, City-road, London. Rev. C. Boddington: Feb. 23 to Mar. 5, St. Margaret's, Burton-on-Trent. Rev. W. St. Hill Bourne, Feb. 16 to 26, Willesborough, Kent. Rev. R. Catterall: to Feb. 12, St. James's, Accrington. Revs. R. Catterall and G. Thompson: Feb. 16 to 26, St. John's, Smallbridge, Rochdale. Rev. T. Clarke: Feb. 10 to 20, Walsden, Todmorden. Rev. A. R. D'Arcy: Feb. 9 to 13, All Saints', Leyton; Feb. 14 and 15, Chenies, Bucks. Canon Donaldson: to Feb. 11, Mullyon, Cornwall. Rev. A. C. Downer: to Feb. 10, Tempsford, Beds. Rev. Rowland Ellis: Feb. 16 to 26, St. Clement's, Salford, Manchester. Rev. John H. Haslam: Feb. 9 to 19, St. Andrew's, Stockwell; Feb. 23 to Mar. 5, St. Margaret's, Rochester. Revs. G. W. Herbert, T. Bates, R. E. Giraud, and A. V. Cox: to Feb. 16. Mildenhall with West Row and Beck Row. Rev. J. W. Mills: Feb. 18 to 21, Bidborough, near Tunbridge Wells. Rev. R. D. Monro: Feb. 9 to 20, Bleadon, Weston-super-Mare. Rev. S. C. Morgan, D.D.: Feb. 23 to Mar. 5, St. Nicholas, Rochester. Rev. S. A. Selwyn: Feb. 16 to 26, Fisherton, Salisbury. Rev. F. S. Webster: to Feb. 13, St. Luke's, Tittensor. Rev. R. A. White: Feb. 16 to 26, Fleckney, Leicestershire.

NORTH CAMP, ALDERSHOT.—During the last six months about 100,000 tracts, leaflets, and small books have been distributed in the camp, and in house-to-house visitation; the tracts, &c., are distributed also in the highways, &c. I should be glad of tracts, either Gospel or temperance, and Bibles for free distribution. At a recent special mission. conducted by Christian officers, several professed to find peace in Christ. JOHN POATE, Sec.

Sherborne-road, Farnborough, Hants.

BASSES PYRENEES.—Mdme. Pozzi, of the Free Evangelical Church, Pau, writes:—"The Spanish work carried on for many years under our supervision, and for the last four years by Señor Toribio de la Crus and his wife, at Jurançon, Pau, is about to be given up from want of means, and also on account of our leaving Pau later in the spring. We should rejoice to hear of any opening in their own country for them, or to receive any gifts towards their maintenance. We would gladly give any particulars about them or the work to any-one interested."

ORPHAN APPRENTICE HOME (Upland Cottage, Bathwick Hill, Bath).—The report of this institution says: "This Home was established to take the lads from the 'Williamson Orphan Home for Boys,' Claverton Down, when old enough to be apprenticed, and to provide them with a Christian home during their 'term,' at a time of life when they are exposed to many temptations. Those now in the Home are apprenticed to the following trades: cabinet-making, carpentering, bookbinding, printing, and basket-making. Gifts of new and worn clothing considerably save the funds."

HEBREWS IN NEW YORK CITY.

REV. JACOB FRESHMAN, who has been preaching the Gospel during the past seven years among the hundred thousand Hebrews of New York City, is very much encouraged by the success of his work, in spite of bitter opposition. The Lord has given him souls for his hire; many Jewish men and women have accepted Christ as the true Messiah. Among the Hebrew converts, there are now twelve young men who are in different seminaries preparing to preach the Gospel. There is a Sunday-school of Jewish children. At the Christmas festival two hundred Jewish boys and girls were present, and sang "Rejoice and be glad, the Redeemer has come." Mrs. Freshman is an active worker, and stands nobly by her husband. The work is altogether undenominational.

Mr. Freshman is now in London, on his way to Jerusalem. During his absence the work in New York will be carried on as usual. Mr. Freshman receives no salary, but trusts in God, not only for the supply of his own needs, but for means to carry on the work. A property was bought and dedicated as the First Hebrew Christian Church in America. Of the cost, 15,000 dollars have already been paid, and Mr. Freshman is desirous that the remaining debt of 10,000 dollars should be wiped off, that he may be able to throw himself into his work unburdened by any financial weight. If friends in Great Britain could contribute £1000, half the amount due, he would probably, on his return to New York, be able to collect the other half among his American helpers. One Christian friend in Liverpool has already promised £100 towards this object. Mr. Freshman may be addressed care of the publishers of this paper.

LONDON YOUNG MEN.

As the Whittington-avenue Y.M.C.A. finds its various agencies increasingly appreciated, so it is developing its resources, and becoming more and more helpful to young men in the City of London. It is not yet three years since the present home of the Association was first entered, a great improvement upon the inconvenient premises in Gracechurch-street. From that time the progress of the institution has been remarkably rapid, every enlargement of responsibility having been accompanied by increase of blessing.

Last week additional premises, adjoining those already in occupation, were opened, including: luncheon rooms, a general secretary's office, a room in which members may engage in prayer and private study, and an office for the important employment agency connected with the branch. These additions will, it is believed, do much practically to enhance the value of the place to the members, the facilities afforded for working the employment agency being specially welcome. It is a pleasure to learn that merchants and others in the City habitually apply to the Association when in want of clerks. During last week nine of the ten approved men were successfully introduced to new situations.

On Friday afternoon last the new premises were entered, and dedicated to the work of the Lord in prayer; Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, chairman of committee, presiding over the proceedings. The temporal and spiritual work of the Association were laid before God, whose blessing on the forward movement was earnestly supplicated. We sincerely trust that the best anticipations of the workers and supporters will be abundantly realised. Mr. N. R. Hughman is the secretary of the branch.

CLARENDON CHAPEL, CAMBERWELL.—This Baptist place of worship has unhappily been destroyed by fire. The Masonic Hall has been secured for the Sunday services and a neighbouring mission-hall for the week-night meetings, but of course the work in some of its branches will be interrupted pending the erection of a new church. The pastor and congregation will welcome any help given by sympathising friends. The pastor is Mr. John Creer, 260, Kennington Park-road, S.W.

The Book World.

THE REAPER. The annual volume of this excellent monthly contains much vigorous Scripture exposition, and gives a well-digested summary of Christian effort at home and abroad. This magazine serves high practical purposes in an admirable manner. (Monthly, 1d.; bound volume, 2s. 6d. Houlston & Sons.)

WORDS OF LIFE. By David Merson, M.A., B.D. Dickinson. This is a volume of sermons on Christian doctrine, experience, and duty. The subjects cover a wide range, and the treatment is always thoughtful, earnest, devout and practical. The doctrine is evangelical, and the style, though not bright, is vigorous and clear.

In a small but well-packed volume, called NEWLY ENLISTED, Dr. Cuyler gives much valuable counsel to young converts, on questions of practical everyday life. He has the knack of compelling the reader's interested attention by an incisive style and plenty of illustration. The little book is dedicated to Mr. Moody. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

THE LIBRARY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. Messrs. Cassell & Co. have begun a serial issue of this very useful work, as edited by Professor Henry Morley. Accompanying the first part is a large presentation plate, giving facsimile reproductions of famous literary documents and manuscripts. The completed work will contain several hundred illustrations, and form a valuable introduction to the study of a great subject. (6d. each part.)

OUR BOYS' MAGAZINE. Volume ii. of this monthly makes an excellent presentation-book for well-bred schoolboys. We cannot name a serial more calculated to please and benefit such boys than is this monthly paper. The fact that it is edited by University men will commend it highly to the class it is intended to reach. The general features of the paper are at once entertaining and elevating, and we shall be pleased to hear of its increased influence and continued success. (Monthly, 1d.; bound volume, 2s. Schoolboys' Scripture Union, 13, Warwick-lane, E.C.)

COLLOQUIES ON PREACHING. By Canon Twells. 5s. Longmans & Co. The first thing that strikes us in reading these twenty imaginary conversations on present-day preaching, between all sorts and conditions of people, is their exceeding cleverness; they are sketched to the life, and some of them, besides being edifying, are vastly entertaining. At the same time the author has a keen sense of the transcendent importance of his subject, and lays his finger upon many a weak spot, both in preachers and hearers. We resent the occasional remarks that betray the prejudiced ecclesiastic and the bigoted "Churchman," but with this exception we commend the work for its earnest spirit and its sanctified common sense.

HARD BATTLES FOR LIFE AND USEFULNESS. By Rev. James Inches Hillocks. 3s. 6d. Houlston & Sons. We rejoice to find that this remarkable autobiography has reached a third edition, wherein the stirring story is brought fully down to date. By the side of such statements of fact as this book presents, the empty weavings of fiction quite lose their charm and attractiveness. It is hoped that, by reading these pages, many a young person will be stimulated not only to persevere in self-help, but also to engage in zealous endeavour in the service of others. Mr. Hillocks's success has received well-merited recognition; and, in setting forth his life-principles and motives, he has done a conspicuous service to the rising generation. The illustrations of this edition include a portrait of the author.

MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS. By Dr. A. T. Pierson. 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. Nothing is more wonderful in the history of the Christian religion than the triumphant way in which its sacred writings have not only survived the continuous attacks of unbelievers, but have gained a surer position than ever through the ordeal. It is refreshing to meet with a Christian apologist and advocate, at once so able and so enthusiastic, as Dr. Pierson. He has fairly mastered his subject, and handles it, therefore, in no timorous or half-hearted way. Having been once tempted to doubt, he set himself to search diligently into the foundations of the faith, and here we have the result of his inquiries. "Honest doubters" may be recommended to the same course of action, and they will find in Dr. Pierson a faithful and friendly monitor. Even those who have never been belated among the mists of intellectual scepticism may have their faith and hope confirmed by the study of these glowing and convincing chapters.

FEBRUARY MAGAZINES.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION MAGAZINE contains a full report of the New Year's Address to the missionaries by Rev. H. J. Berguer. (1d. Seeleys.)

In OUR OWN MAGAZINE, among other interesting contributions, is a story by Miss Butler Gerds. (1d. Children's Special Service Mission, 13, Warwick-lane.)

EVANGELICAL CHRISTENDOM, the organ of the Evangelical Alliance, gives a comprehensive account of the proceedings during the week of Universal Prayer. (6d. T. G. Johnson, 121, Fleet-street.)

THE YOUNG MEN'S REVIEW (1d.), the organ of the Exeter Hall Association, in its current issue happily combines solidity with brightness and variety. It gives an excellent litho-portrait of the Earl of Aberdeen.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP, the record of the labours of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, describes the new cruising hospital, and tells the interesting story of medical work on the North Sea. (3d. Office of the Mission, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.)

Mrs. Stephen Menzies continues to make "A1" remarkably attractive. Among the most striking contents of the latest part are illustrated sketches of the Philadelphia post-office and its work, and the Reading-room of the British Museum and its visitors.

REGIONS BEYOND contains an article by Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, entitled, "The Devil's Missionary Enterprise," giving a saddening account of the horrible drink traffic among the natives of Africa, India, Polynesia, and other uncivilised or semi-civilised countries.

THE LIFE OF FAITH and THE DIVINE LIFE are two monthly magazines, having essentially similar aims and purposes. The latter presents a greater variety of matter than the former, but both expound the ideal Christian life, and urge it as that whereunto all disciples should aspire. (2d. each, Marshall Bros.)

Rev. Charles Bullock's three monthlies, THE FIRESIDE (6d.), HOME WORDS (1d.), and THE DAY OF DAYS, are always attractively illustrated and uniformly filled with wholesome reading matter. ("Home Words" Office, 7, Paternoster-square.) THE HOME VISITOR is also a capital monthly for plain people. (1d. Hunt & Co.)

Among the smaller publications of Messrs. Partridge & Co. are: THE FRIENDLY VISITOR, THE MOTHER'S COMPANION, and THE FAMILY FRIEND, all excellent magazines for the home. THE BRITISH WORKMAN maintains its high reputation. THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND is in all respects good, and THE INFANTS' MAGAZINE is not excelled by any similar publication. (1d. each).

The smaller serials of The Religious Tract Society include: FRIENDLY GREETINGS (4d.), a magazine that would brighten and bless many a home; THE TRACT MAGAZINE (1d.), a capital collection of instructive articles and sketches; THE COTTAGER AND ARTISAN, a first-class sheet for district visitors; THE CHILD'S COMPANION, well illustrated and varied in contents; OUR LITTLE DOTS, a good serial for the little ones. The last three are one penny each.

REST AND REAPING, edited by Miss Mason, devotes attention to instruction in the Scriptures as well as intelligence as to the progress of Christian work at home and abroad. It appears in an improved form this year. (1d. Morgan & Scott.) THE CHRISTIAN WORKER, edited by Mr. L. K. Shaw, ever breathes the spirit of earnest endeavour and loyalty to revealed truth. (1d. Partridge & Co.) THE BRITISH MESSENGER, filled with sound teaching and entertaining reading matter, is worthy of extended circulation. (1d. Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

Some of Messrs. Cassell's serial publications:—THE OLD TESTAMENT COMMENTARY FOR ENGLISH READERS has reached Part 53, which closes with the beginning of Job xxviii., the marvellous "Search after Wisdom." Part 57 of THE COUNTRIES OF THE WORLD brings this excellent work very near its completion. MILTON'S PARADISE LOST, edited by Dr. Robert Vaughan, and illustrated by Gustave Doré, is now half completed, Part 13 being out this month. Rev. Dr. Wylie's HISTORY OF PROTESTANTISM is a work of permanent value. In Part 9 the reader is introduced to Zwingli and the part he took in the Reformation in Switzerland.

No. 64 of the NEW BIOGRAPHICAL SERIES (1d. Religious Tract Society) is devoted to Reginald Heber, Bishop of Calcutta, author of the hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains."

Letters to the Editor.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

DEAR SIR,—It has long been my practice and delight to give away and send under cover little Gospel books, chosen with care, and, to the best of my judgment, individually suitable to those who receive them. This practice arose through my meeting in the course of business with many whose condition awakened my sympathy and desire for their eternal welfare, but to whom I could in no other way render them the help I wished but by sending a silent messenger. In past years I was able to expend without any imprudence what was needed for this service, but of late years very heavy losses, through the depreciation in value of everything that I possess, has rendered this small outlay more than I can manage.

Having still many opportunities of circulating books of the kind I mention, it has occurred to me that under the circumstances you might be able and willing to introduce me to some Christian who, with earnest desire for the spread of God's truth, and with ample means, has not the same opportunities that I have, and might be willing to assist me in the purchase, allowing me the selection.

I know of no means of procuring this help myself, and object to advertise, as I feel that only one such friend is needed. I should be glad to wait upon anyone within a convenient distance to satisfy them personally as to my bona fides. Can you help me?—Respectfully yours, H. J.

[The writer of the above is only one of very many who would distribute if others would supply. We shall be glad to receive contributions to our Tract Fund, and to supply tracts which may be desired by subscribers or distributors.—ED.]

SALVATION ARMY REPORTS.

SIR,—Our friends of the Salvation Army sometimes complain of the little sympathy shown them by Christians of other denominations. Is there not perhaps a cause for this? I am wondering today if I have found some of the reasons for this want of sympathy. The Army has just commenced operations in Bechuanaland. As yet they have only come into contact with two missionaries of the London Missionary Society, one of these being a venerable brother, who has been exceedingly kind in receiving the officers into his house, and freely giving them opportunities for holding meetings in his church, and making collections. In fact he has from their first arrival at his station till the present time fully shown his sympathy with them in every way, and manifested his wish to help them to the best of his ability. The other of the two is myself; and though I have only as yet seen two of the officers when passing through my station, still I have shown them that I was fully prepared to help them in their work among the surrounding heathen.

Under these circumstances, your readers may imagine the feelings with which I read the following paragraph taken from the South African War Cry of the 15th inst., sent me by a friend. Of a meeting held at Port Elizabeth it is said:—"The Colonel describing the power and accomplishments of faith, giving as an illustration the darkness and discouragement which met Staff-Captain Lewis when he first went to Bechuanaland, caused in a great measure through the missionaries preaching against those 'red-jerseyed' men, and the grand and encouraging results which are now attending their labours." As a commentary on this statement, I may mention that this Staff-Captain Lewis, who is a delicate man, was cared for for a week in the house of one of the two missionaries who must be referred to, and expressed to myself a sense of the kindness he had received from that brother. He also spent part of a day with myself, which was passed in what I thought was the friendly intercourse suitable in the case of Christ's people in a heathen land; and since he left I have received a letter from him thanking me for my help and interest in their work. In addition to this, I may mention that the Army's work among the natives of Bechuanaland has not yet been begun; and where it has been begun among the natives in Griqualand West there are as yet no proofs of "the grand and encouraging results" to which the Colonel refers.

Staff-Captain Lewis passed through my station about a month ago on his way to commence work at Vryburg, a European town forty miles to the north. So far as I have heard, the results of the meetings there are as yet exactly the opposite of grand and encouraging; and in last week's Vryburg paper I saw an advertisement of a lecture on the Army's history that was to be delivered by Captain Lewis, who was leaving Vryburg.

Now, in the face of all this, I fail to see how my interest in the work of the Army can be sustained; and I am wondering whether similar disappointing experience on the part of others may have led to a lessening of their confidence in the successes claimed by general officers, and the statements made in The War Cry. So far as I know, no missionary in Bechuanaland has as yet preached against the red jerseys, or shown anything but a kindly interest in their work. I can, at all events, say this with certainty of the missionaries of the London Missionary Society whom Mr. Lewis has met. I myself have not even yet mentioned the work of the Army to my people, because I thought best not to do so until they are ready to commence.

A request is being made to those who are responsible for the above statement, either to prove its truth or withdraw it; but as such a paragraph is very likely to be copied into other papers, and no one, I think, could read it without receiving an impression unfavourable to the missionaries complained of, I thought it best to deny the statement at once.

JOHN BROWN,
London Missionary Society.

Taungs, British Bechuanaland, Dec. 24, 1888.

Writing again on January 1, Mr. Brown says:—

I have just received a letter from the missionary who, with myself, was charged in The War Cry with preaching against the Salvation Army officers. He unexpectedly met Staff-Captain Lewis who had originated the charge, and of course spoke to him on the subject. He says: "Captain Lewis was here on Sunday, and stayed till Monday morning. I charged him at once with what I saw in The War Cry. He denied having written it. He said the Colonel had misunderstood his letter, and then that he did not think the Colonel had said what was in the Cry. That the young man who had to do with the paper had put it in. I said, 'What did you write?' I said that the Kaffirs said the canteen keepers had told them that the missionaries had preached against the 'red jerseyed men.' He said he would get the statement contradicted, as it was not true."

I give this extract from my friend's letter without comment; and trust that any English paper that may have taken over the charge will also copy the denial when it appears. I shall still hope to do what I can to help the Army when they are ready to begin work here; and I trust they will be prepared to give the missionaries of the L.M.S. credit for zeal in the Lord's work equal to their own, though perhaps manifested after a different fashion.

MRS. SEWELL'S BEST BOOK.

DEAR SIR,—As I have no personal interest in the sale of the late Mrs. Sewell's works, may I say that, to my mind, the one most worthy to be kept in remembrance and circulated is "Patience Hart's First Experience in Service." If a copy of this were given to every girl when she goes to her first place, it might, with God's blessing, prevent many a sad history of sin and ruin.—Truly yours,

DISCIPULUS.

"MY BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE," compiled and issued by Charles Brewer, 13, Perseverance-road, Leominster, contains the names of 131 labourers in different parts of the world, in connection with the "Open Brethren." The list gives the addresses as well as names of many well-known workers, and shows that the Brethren are alive to the importance of effort abroad.

PUTNEY ADULT SCHOOL.—The second annual meeting of this school took place on Saturday last in the Assembly Rooms, High-street, Putney, and was a great success. Alderman White, of Birmingham, gave a most interesting address, which was followed by bright, telling speeches from Rev. William Reed (vicar of Wandsworth), Rev. J. W. Ewing, and Mr. J. Allen Baker. Figures are given in the annual report, which prove that adult school methods only need to be carrird out in London with the same spirit as in the Midlands, to secure the same results. The average attendance for January, 1889, was 116, the highest figure yet recorded. A women's division, which meets in the afternoon, and is managed entirely by ladies, was commenced in December, and has already secured an average attendance of over sixty. A Conference on Adult School work in London, to be held on Saturday, February 16, at the Bunhill-fields School, will, it is hoped, result in the rapid extension of this successful method of "reaching the masses."

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

QUESTIONS.

SIR,—As President of a Bible-class, meeting each Sunday to study the Word of the Lord, may I ask for the following information in your columns?

To whom do the following references allude?

(1) "And so all Israel shall be saved" (Rom. ii. 26).

(2) "Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel" (Ezek. xxxvii. 11).

(3) "Michael shall deliver Israel from their troubles: Daniel is informed of the times."—Heading of twelfth chapter of Daniel.

Yours respectfully, JAS. HUNT.

Westbury Park, Bristol.

REPLIES.

(1) The "all Israel" here referred to are, in our judgment, the believing members of the seed of Jacob through all the ages. There may be a secondary reference to all believers, inasmuch as all such are included in the Israel of God.

(2) The reference is to Israel, as the words stand. Though withered and dead, Israel shall live and flourish. For flesh has come upon the bones, and spirit within the body. The parable is founded upon resurrection truth. Nevertheless, "They are not all Israel which are of Israel." God's mercy will thus be shown to the faithful in Israel, as it will also be manifested to all who are Israelites indeed (see Rom. ix. 7; Gal. vi. 16).

(3) The heading quoted is a fair statement of verse 1. God's people chosen in Abraham will one day be delivered, and, in view of their tribulations, the receiving of them shall be "as life from the dead." In succeeding verses the awakening of the dead to life is spoken of, and "Daniel is informed of the times" as the heading states (see Rom. xi. 15).

Considering the enlarged way in which the New Testament quotes Old Testament truth, it is impossible not to give these passages a wider, if secondary, meaning, inclusive of all saints, inasmuch as all believers are the children of Abraham.

QUESTIONS.

SIR,—I send you some difficulties which I have met with in recent reading:—

What is the meaning of Mark ix. 49: "Every one shall be salted with fire"?

Who is the "blessed and only Potentate," &c.? (1 Tim. vi. 14—16).

Wherein did the faith of Jephthah lie (Heb. xi. 32)? Is it connected with carrying out his vow?

S. P. D.

REPLIES.

(1) Salt preserves; fire consumes. Every man must be a sacrifice to God. The godly present themselves as thank-offerings; the wicked will be sacrifices to God's justice. If we are not salted with salt by self-mortification, we shall be salted with fire, by falling under the wrath of God. Some expositors hold that "salting with fire" is also expressive of the spirit of self-sacrifice, which parts with a hand, a foot, or an eye, for righteousness' sake, by which spirit disciples of Christ are preserved from corruption and destruction.

(2) The "blessed and only Potentate" is God, who will, "in his own times," show, or manifest, "the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." Verse 16 recites the attributes of Him who is the King of kings and Lord of lords.

(3) Jephthah's faith is shown by the way in which he espoused the Lord's cause. It was in dependence upon God that he judged Israel, and overcame the children of Ammon. His faith was not illustrated by his vow, or the execution thereof.

LODGING-HOUSE PEOPLE.—The East London Evangelisation Society and Lodging-house Mission, seeing the great number of lodging-houses in Westminster, has extended its operations, and is now doing a good work in the West-end. The workers in the various lodging-houses are received at the regular Sunday services with marked kindness, and the best attention is given.

SOUTHWARK.—In November last a few earnest workers opened up a field of labour in Whitecross-street, Southwark, and their work has been abundantly blessed. They saw the necessity of opening a ragged-school for the poorest and most destitute children, and in this branch they have been eminently successful. There are Sunday evening services, and the place is open several nights in the week.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 10.—Genesis XXV.

THERE is evidently what is known as dispensational truth in the opening verses of this chapter. Isaac's bride comes from a far country, and in this is the type of the Church, which is so largely composed of those who once were strangers and foreigners (Eph. ii. 12, 13). But after the marriage supper has been consummated, there will no doubt be a wonderful concentration of interest on the seed of Abraham. These things are wonderful, but certain (Rom. xi. 25).

Abraham's death.—The old man, after being for sixteen years contemporary with Esau and Jacob, died without owning a foot of land, which he did not pay for (Acts vii. 5). But all was his, and his soul had acquired a property superior to the fairest earthly land that ever invited the quest of a pilgrim. He died in faith, not having received the promises, but greeting them from afar, and being persuaded of them, and eagerly desiring the city which hath foundations (Heb. xi. 13, &c.). He was an old man and full, satisfied. Gathered to his people, a phrase which speaks not of dust to dust, for his people were far away across the desert, but of the recognition and welcome of the departed. His sons met to bury him; whatever our differences, a common sorrow makes us one.

Two manner of people.—In all time there have been these two classes. The Esaus, jovial, pleasure-loving, addicted to feats of endurance and strength, grasping at present gratification, and indifferent to spiritual issues (Heb. xii. 16). The Jacobs, quiet, home-loving, deficient in many of those qualities which attract admiration and win love, but devoted to the things of the unseen and future—a curious mixture of cunning and spiritual power. These are both dear to God; but it is only of the latter that He can make princes. This is the meaning of Malachi i. 1, 2.

MONDAY, FEB. 11.—Genesis XXVI.

There was no harm in Isaac going to Gerar, as he had a distinct command to that effect (2, 3). But he does not seem to have been morally strong enough to stand the test of residence there. Certainly he failed under it; and he failed because he did not realise that God had made Himself responsible for his safety. What could have been more reassuring than "I will be with thee, and bless thee?" They who have the Divine companionship are absolutely safe, and need resort to no earthly expedients.

His faithless cowardice (7).—He repeated Abraham's sin, endangering his wife, because so careful of himself. There is a sad deterioration here from the time when he was so willing to die beneath his father's knife. That early dawn had become sadly overcast. But, in spite of this, God kept His word with him, and blessed him (12). A sweet illustration of 2 Tim. ii. 13. A man may have outward blessing, but this is no certain proof that his heart is right with God.

Emptied from vessel to vessel (17).—These verses are full of strife and removal. Well was it for him that it thus befell, else he might have become too comfortable in Gerar. God has often to break up our nest, and to pour us forth (Deut. xxxii. 11, and Jer. xlviii. 11).

The path of separation is that of communion and blessing (23).—As soon as he took up the right attitude, "the Lord appeared"; there was a renewal of the altar of consecration; he reared his tent to take up again the pilgrim life; water gushed forth to refresh him; and his enemies were reconciled (Prov. xvi. 7).

TUESDAY, FEB. 12.—Genesis XXVII.

Here was a series of those fatal mistakes which issue in years of misery to all concerned. Isaac ignored and sought to set aside the Divine purpose, clearly revealed (xxv. 23). Esau, notwithstanding his distinct bargain, was now eager to regain the birthright privilege and position which he had despised, and gladly fell in with his father's proposal. Jacob sought to win by fraud what had been promised to him, and would have been secured, by the promise of God. And Rebekah was as deeply implicated as any; deceiving her husband, showing evident partiality, and sowing for herself a bitter harvest of pain, in the enforced absence of her darling, and in the division of her house. We dare not attempt to palliate or conceal the guilt of one of these offenders. Would that this had been the last home, professing godliness, but rent by the same sins, and visited by similar woes.

God keeps us to our choice.—Esau could not change the results of his own act in the sale of his birthright. His bitter cries and tears could not reverse its effect. He might be forgiven, but he could not undo (Heb. xii. 17—20).

The raw material of God's noblest saints is often very disappointing.—Who would have thought, looking at Jacob, covered by the kid-skins, that one day he would have power with God and men, and bless the mightiest monarch of his time? And if God did so much for him, why should He not do as much for each one who reads these lines, if only we are willing to be as clay in the hand of the Great Potter (Isa. lxiv. 8).

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 13.—Genesis XXVIII.

This is the Ladder-chapter, in which a wayward, crooked man is seen holding fellowship with the eternal God; who loves us, not because of our shortcomings, but in spite of them, and who desires to lift us right away from them into a life of power and victory. Fugitive and erring you may be, but never give up your fellowship with God. From the far country of exile you may cry to Him, even from the fish's belly (Jonah ii. 1). And there is no moorland waste so lonely, so man-deserted, so bare, but that it may be the place from which the ladder may reach to heaven.

Sunset (11).—Overtaken on a moor by the swift oriental night, Jacob had no alternative but the cold ground, the hard stone pillows, the exposed position on the hill-slope. But he slept both safe and sound, being sure of Divine protection. His last thoughts would possibly blend in motley combination the mighty slabs that lay around, and the guardianship of the angels (Ps. iii. 5, 6). Hence his dream. Our dreams reflect our waking thoughts.

Night.—"He saw a ladder." There is communication between heaven and earth; the angels come down laden with answers to the prayers which they bear up. Wait for them. Though they delay, they will come. The circulation of tide, and air, and blood, is not more incessant or multiplied. Oh for opened eyes to see these heavenly activities on our behalf! (Heb. i. 14). How full are these gracious words of God of what He is, and will do. "I am with"; "I will keep"; "I will bring"; "I will not leave" (15).

Morning.—The devout soul finds God's house and heaven's gate everywhere. We make our own environment. There was too much bargain-making in Jacob's vow (20); and yet the final resolution was good. Well would it be if all readers would resolve to devote a definite part of their income to Him who guards our nights and guides our days. The ladder of Providence is good, but how much better that of Redemption (John i. 51).

THURSDAY, FEB. 14.—Genesis XXIX.

Well might Jacob lift up his feet (1, marg.). When we have seen God, we receive strength, which enables us to run (Heb. xii. 1). The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord, and we have a special claim on Him in all that relates to the most solemn step of our lives, in our matrimonial alliances. These ought not to be left to fancy, or whim, or the choice of friends (Prov. xix. 14).

There were many qualities in Rachel, as a girl, which bespoke her fitness to be a good wife. Her humility and industry, her patience under the oppression of the stronger shepherds, her haste to share the new-found joy with her father, churl though he were (12); all these received their reward in the love with which Jacob devoted himself to her, and which made the toil of years seem as a few days (20). Oh, that we had such love to Jesus shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, that we might consider hard things easy, and rough ones delightful, for his dear sake (Phil. iii. 8).

The deceiver deceived.—With what measure we mete it is often measured to us again. Jacob was served as he had served his father; and Leah was substituted for her sister. There is a Nemesis in wrong-doing. Misdeeds come home to roost (Ps. lvii. 6).

The compensations of life (31).—Poor Leah, she was very eager for her husband's love, and reckoned the loss of it as her grief (32). Yet she had a noble family of sons. Whilst Rachel, secure of affection, pined for children. So God tempers our joys with our sorrows, and amid them carries forward our education. For the names of her children indicate the inner life of devotion, and the outer life of praise. In all this how accurately God kept the promises made (xxviii. 15).

FRIDAY, FEB. 15.—Genesis XXX.

This is a very humiliating chapter, showing to what depths the child and heir of promise may fall. We cannot wonder at Laban, for he had never been at Bethel, or heard the voice of God, or received the blessed promise. He was one of those described by David (Ps. xvii. 13). A worldly man may be expected to act on worldly principles. But to find Jacob acting thus is without excuse.

In the opening verses, a disordered home. Envy between the sisters (1); and anger in Jacob (2), and the reign of the flesh. Policy, expediency, self-will, and pride of heart, roaming at will through heart and home. What a contrast to the holy home of Abraham, to the vision under the midnight sky! And is it marvellous that children brought up under such influences became infected with every kind of vice? It is of prime importance to maintain the purity of the home life.

Then, a schemer. Heedless of the distinct promise that God would provide for him, we find Jacob using every deceitful art to provide for himself. Instead of allowing God to multiply his flocks, he secures his ends by fraud; and all the while is laying plans to steal away. Throughout he is the supplanter. These years were indeed the wandering of a prodigal into a far country. What disgrace to the name of God! Yet the love of God still brooded over the wanderer, allowing him to learn the full evil of his own nature, and to manifest what was in him. We none of us know how base and evil we are by nature, only God knows the possibilities that lurk within our hearts (John ii. 24). But notwithstanding all, He loves us, and can make Israels out of Jacobs. Contrast 1 Sam. ii. 30; Matt. vi. 33.

SATURDAY, FEB. 16.—Genesis XXXI.

Jacob was a remarkable mixture. He spoke of God as if He had been a party to his own trickery (9, 13). At the same time, his was an eminently religious nature, and when it got the upper hand, he evidently had very intimate dealings with God (3, 5, 7, 13). So flesh and spirit struggle within us all, as St. Paul found it, and only as the grace of God enters into us do we come to know the supremacy of the spirit (Gal. v. 17).

The secret departure (20).—This was very undignified and unnecessary, and wholly faithless. God had promised to keep him in all places (xxviii. 15). Oh, when shall we realise the perpetual keeping power of God (Ps. xxxi. 20)? And yet God did keep him (24), and made Laban realise that he must not touch him (29). How marvellous that the Almighty should undertake the safe keeping of such worthless ones. But He does it for his own name's sake (Ezek. xxxvi. 32).

The altercation between Laban and Jacob is very unseemly. Each meeting the other with craft (26, 36). If only Jacob had realised that his cause was in the hands of God, he would have been able to hold his peace and quietly wait. Do we always commit our cause to God, as we should? The exhortations of Rom. xii. 18—21 need to be engraven on our hearts.

The oath (44).—Here these families part for the last time, into an armed neutrality, God watching between. Laban returns to his money making; and the pilgrim Jacob goes on his way, freed from the shackles which had bound him, though with idols still in his tents (34). He must be delivered from these also; that he may become meet for the Master's use (1 Tim. ii. 21).

WHITECHAPEL WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.—At the invitation of the committee of the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, a number of ladies and gentlemen interested in the work of the establishment assembled at a conversazione last week. Mr. F. A. Bevan, the treasurer, to whom the institution is indebted for so much of its success, presided. The visitors were conducted over the dormitories, class-rooms, and other branches of the institute. Mr. Bevan briefly addressed the visitors and explained that the institution was still in debt to the extent of about £5000, and appealed for subscriptions towards its liquidation. He also urged the suggestion that the premises, which were almost unused in the daytime, might, with advantage, be used as a middle-class school. Mr. Henry Hill, the secretary, later in the evening announced that subscriptions to the amount of about £250 had been received from friends of the institute.

THE TIMID WOMAN'S TOUCH.

MARK v. 25—34. GOLDEN TEXT: v. 36.

THOUGH rejected by the Gadarenes, our Lord found "much people" waiting for Him when He crossed to the western side of the lake (21). This incident took place while Jesus was the centre of a great throng of people, moving towards the house of Jairus (24). The woman's faith is specially referred to by Jesus (34), and the Golden Text suggests the importance of faith in the study of this incident.

Her faith—how formed (25—27).—"An issue of blood" (25).—A distressing malady, which was draining away her physical strength, and involved ceremonial uncleanness (Lev. 15—25). This consciousness of pressing need was the first step to her faith. "Suffered many things" (26).—During the twelve years of her affliction (25), she had spent her living upon physicians, with no satisfactory result. Very literally she had "suffered" from the remedies applied as well as from the disease. Medical science in that day was in a very imperfect condition, and the remedies were often very severe, She knew, therefore, that no human skill could help her; this was another step to her faith. "Heard of Jesus" (27).—The fame of the wonderful works of Jesus had spread abroad, and she had listened with deepest interest. Earthly physicians had failed, but here was One who had power to heal. This was the next step to her faith. In the same way the sinner is led to faith in Jesus as the Saviour. Consciousness of need, arising from the fact of our sin; sense of helplessness, and of the impossibility of salvation apart from Christ; then hearing the truth concerning Jesus as "mighty to save." "Faith cometh by hearing" (Rom. x. 17). He who does not hear cannot believe, and he who is not conscious of helplessness and need will not value what he hears.

Her faith—how exercised (27—29).—She recognised that her faith must lead to a personal application to Jesus. Faith as a mere conviction of the mind could never have healed her. So the sinner's faith must act. To believe that a remedy will heal, that a lifeboat will save, if we do not apply the remedy, or get into the lifeboat, will do no good. Is not this just the difference between this woman's faith and that of many who know more about Christ than she did? "Came in the press" (27).—Her faith met with difficulties. But timid though she was, she mingled with the crowd, and elbowed her way through them to the Saviour. "Touched his garment" (27).—"The hem of his garment" (Matt. ix. 20). According to many critics "hem" means tassel, and is referred to Numb. xv. 38, 39, where the tassels at the four corners of the robe are called fringes. Her faith was such that she believed she would be healed, if she could but touch this tassel (28). Yet her faith was not without defects. Perhaps even in her desire to touch there was an element of superstition. Her attempt at concealment looks as though she doubted the Saviour's will, while believing in his power. Like a great many others in approaching the Saviour she made too much of her own unworthiness, and too little of his love. Yet, see the result (29). It is not the perfection of our faith, but faith itself that obtains the blessings. "Straightway"—not less speedily does He save even the feeblest believer.

Her faith—how confessed (30—34).—"Jesus knowing that virtue='power' had gone out of Him" (30). She had not stolen the blessing without the consciousness of Jesus. He knew the difference between the pressure of the throng, and the touch of faith (31). And the question "Who touched Me?" was in order that the woman might come forth and confess Him. Confession was due to Him. Was it right that she should obtain from Him by a touch what many physicians had been unable to do, and yet make no acknowledgment of it? And equally was it necessary for herself. For she does not really know the Saviour. She is "fearing and trembling" (33), as though He would be angry with her. But when "she told Him all the truth," then He corrected her mistakes, and sent her home "in peace" (34). See then her faith. As a conviction in the mind, it led her to hope for healing; as exercised, it brought her the experience of the blessing; but as confessed, it led her to greater enjoyment of her restored health, to a fuller knowledge of her Deliverer, and consequently to an abiding peace.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Coming to Christ as needy.—A great monarch was accustomed on set occasions to entertain all the beggars of the city. Among the courtiers, who on such occasions sat around the king, was one whose silken apparel was spoiled so that he could not appear in it at the feast. But, if he could not appear among the courtiers, he could appear in rags and enter among the beggars. Thus we may come.

Strong faith.—"You are a woman of strong faith," said someone to an old disciple. "No," was the reply, "I am a woman of little faith in a strong Saviour." The strength to heal and to save is not in the faith, but in its object.

Confessing Christ.—A man who had been living a grossly wicked life was converted some years ago. When he first received the Saviour he had no conscious possession of peace. But that night, for the first time in his home, he read the Bible to his family, and then in prayer before them confessed his faith in Christ. The joy of pardon filled him while thus engaged.

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY.

MESSRS. CASSELL & CO. are to be congratulated upon the completion of THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, which is a new and original work of reference to all the words in the English language, and much besides. For, as its title implies, the work is encyclopædic, and therefore subjects as well as words are defined and explained. Naturally words are the basis, and in these volumes we have a full account of their origin, meaning, pronunciation, and use. Moreover, this work deals with about 50,000 more words than any other English dictionary.

The preface is a literary performance of considerable interest. We there learn that this production has involved seventeen years of labour. The features which distinguish this from all other books of words are likewise set forth, and they are undoubtedly features which give the Encyclopædic Dictionary superlative place and value as compared with its predecessors. The list of those who have assisted the editor, Dr. Hunter, includes the names of scholars of world-wide reputation, and the result of their combined labour is worthy of the careful organisation which the plan of operations entailed. We have here a dictionary which stands alone both for fulness and reliability.

In this work we have all the words (except geographical and biographical names) which are contained in a first-rate encyclopædia; while the dictionary proper not only gives modern English words, but a nearly exhaustive list of obsolete words, and a very full vocabulary of words occurring in Scottish literature. A large number of technical terms and colloquialisms are also included, and the arrangement is all that could be desired. The illustrations are numerous, and as artistic in character as they are really helpful in elucidating the text. In a number of test examinations, we have been delighted to find not only comprehensiveness, but commendable accuracy, throughout the work, and great regard for etymological and critical detail.

For some years to come this will, doubtless, remain the fullest of complete dictionaries of the English language, and we cordially and strongly recommend it to committees of libraries and individuals who can afford to purchase it. We observe that it is now being published in monthly divisional volumes (fourteen) at 10s. 6d., and bi-monthly double volumes (seven) at 21s.

TREATMENT OF INEBRIETY.—In a letter to a medical journal on this subject, Dr. Clarke, of Leicester, says:—I have found it far better to break the habit at once by putting the patient in a Home conducted on strict total abstinence principles, than to try and break the habit by degrees in some less rigid way. Abundant experience from all quarters testifies to the safety with which this may be done. Suitable medical treatment, time, and persistence in total abstinence, are the great factors in insuring success. I also agree that it is indispensable that the family into which the patient returns should adopt total abstinence as a help and safeguard to the patient for the future. It is a cruel temptation for a husband to take stimulants at meals, or have such in the house, where his wife has a weakness or fondness for drink, and when a taste, or even a smell, is sufficient to light up afresh the old habit.

MR. DENHAM SMITH.

DEAR SIR,—This day week a letter was read at Clapton Hall, telling us how very weak and prostrate our dear brother, Mr. Denham Smith, was. It was feared that he would not survive the day, so prayer was requested that, should it please the Lord to take him, He would grant Him an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. But the Lord has determined it otherwise, and our brother is still alive in his frail tabernacle.

On calling this morning to inquire how he was, I had the great pleasure of seeing him. So I thought his many friends far and near, who are unable to have this privilege, would like to know a little about him.

He had passed a fairly good night and was free from pain, but no words could describe his helplessness and feebleness. It was difficult to catch all that he said or wished to say, but what I did hear was very precious. He reminded me of some great general who, having served his Queen and country so faithfully, was on the eve of being rewarded with a peerage and with a seat in the Upper House, there to enjoy his well-earned laurels and repose. His favourite expression was, "He was waiting at the gate," and so, to beguile the time, until "the porter openeth," he was full of the Good Shepherd who gave his life for the sheep—showing that his ruling passion all his life (the Gospel of the grace of God) was strong in death. "Ours," he said, "was an eternal redemption—we were eternally bought," and referred to heaven as the "sweet rallying place for all God's blood-bought children."

While he was talking, his face was beautiful to look upon—so peaceful, bright, and loving. "Waiting at the gate"—a ray of light from the glory of which the Lamb is the light thereof, had settled on his face. This is no imagination; for, as the perfumes of Arabia Felix exhale their odours in the neighbouring provinces, and, when travellers approach the confines of that country, they can tell by these perfumes Arabia Felix is not far off, in like manner our dear brother's bright face and heavenly talk indicate that he is not far from that country where the inhabitant shall not say, "I am sick." I repeated—

Here we suffer grief and pain,
Here we meet to part again,
In heaven we'll part no more.

In taking my farewell, with a loving embrace, he said—

In heaven we'll part no more.

Yours faithfully,

Feb. 3. J. C. A.

SUMMERS TOWN, S.W.—Help is needed to carry on the work in this locality, which is a sort of "no man's land," between Lower Tooting, Wimbledon, and Wandsworth Common. There are about 500 houses in the district, inhabited almost exclusively by the labouring classes. Besides Gospel services at the mission-hall on the Sunday, the following branches of Christian work are in operation:—Sunday-school, mothers' meeting, girls' sewing class, Band of Hope, provident and penny banks, &c. The workers, many of whom come from long distances, hope that outside friends will help, that the work may be efficiently carried on. Miss Haddon, Naseby, Bedford-hill, Balham, will give further details.

WORK AMONG SAILORS IN GLASGOW.—During last year the many agencies of the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society were not only carried on with vigour, but greatly blessed in their operation. The efforts for the temporal good of the many sailors visiting the port are all inspired by, and subordinated to, a desire to secure the highest benefit of the men. During the year 107,000 visits were made by seamen to the institutes upon the north and south sides of the river, while 95,000 seamen and their friends attended the Gospel meetings. In every branch of work there was cheerfulness and animation, funds being very conveniently available. At the sixty-sixth annual meeting, held a few days ago, Mr. John Burns, who presided, spoke in favour of a Seamen's Orphan Institute being founded in Glasgow. The hon. treasurer and secretary of this excellent Society is Mr. R. H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow.

THE MINISTERING CHILDREN'S LEAGUE.

BY THE COUNTESS OF MEATH.

THE report of this League for 1888 has been lately issued. Any unprejudiced person glancing over its pages would, I think, feel satisfied that the work which this Society has accomplished during the four years of its existence has been very material and far-reaching. It now possesses some 500 branches scattered over the globe, and its members and associates number nearly 24,000. Two charitable institutions have been started in connection with it, one a Home for Destitute Children at Ottershaw, Surrey; the other in Ottawa, Canada, where a Hospital for Sick Children has been for some time established, and is affording great relief to suffering little ones. Quantities of clothing for the poor are made by those who belong to the Society, and delightful gifts of playthings, scrap books, &c., find their way into toyless homes. One London branch alone contributed over 1000 garments, toys, &c., besides giving £25 towards the Ministering Children's League Home. Other branches have contributed equally large sums for charitable purposes; and, when we consider that if this League had not been established little or nothing of this help would possibly have been afforded, we cannot but think that the Association is carrying on most useful work.

The "M.C.L." must not, however, be regarded only as a society for supplying the needs of the poor. It has been termed, not inaptly, the "Practical Christianity Society," deeds of kindness at home, as well as to the poor, being promoted. The children are taught to pray as well as to work; and who will say that the prayer, asking that the little members should become "loving, kind, and useful to others," which is being offered up by thousands of youthful hearts, is not being answered, and that their lives may not hereafter become greatly blessed? The League is unsectarian. In England it has not been so much taken up by Nonconformists as it might have been; but both Dr. Clifford and Rev. J. Chadburn, leading Dissenting ministers, have established branches amongst the members of their respective congregations. If anyone would like further information, with a view to starting a branch of the League, will they kindly write to me, at 83, Lancaster-gate, London, or to our hon. secretary, at the same address.

"POPULAR SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE" are being held by several churches in Birmingham, both Established and Nonconformist. At the monthly meeting of Nonconformist ministers of the town held a few days since, Dr. Dale remarked that he has watched very anxiously recent movements among the working classes in regard to religious matters, and he is of opinion that a great change is observable in the attitude of the working men of that town towards religion. Thirty years ago anyone who went to speak to them of Jesus Christ would not be listened to. But a great change has come. Everywhere the people are ready and eager for the Gospel, and wherever it is carried to them are ready to receive it.

WOOD GREEN.—In this rising North London suburb a new Gospel Mission has been inaugurated by Mr. James Bryant, of the Evangelisation Society, who has erected a comfortable iron building in which to hold evangelistic services. The hall is in Mayes-road, in the centre of a very needy district, and is capable of seating about 200 persons. At the opening meeting a few days ago, Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. James Townley, G. Clarke, J. L. Wood, and David Baron (Mildmay Mission to Jews). At the service on the Sunday evening following the opening, some 160 were present, and there were manifest signs of the Lord's blessing. It is earnestly hoped that much good work may be accomplished through this new agency for the evangelisation of the people in a neighbourhood where there is large scope for aggressive Christian effort.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The "Confidence Fund" of the Church Missionary Society, started by the Bishop of Exeter, in response to Canon Isaac Taylor's charges amounted on January 21 to £2354.

The Bishop of North Queensland is appealing for clergymen to go pioneering in outlying districts of his large diocese. He is anxious to send a pioneer to Thursday Island and the group around it, lying between Australia and New Guinea.

At St. Mary Magdalene Church, Upton, Torquay, an interesting event recently took place. Mr. Hero Yoshi Honda, a native of Japan, whose father holds a position of importance in the Japanese Government, was admitted into the Church by baptism.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Many English Friends will join their American brethren in the pain and regret felt that Barnabas C. Hobbs, through an accident, has had to have the two middle fingers of his right hand amputated.

According to The Friends Review, Philadelphia Friends seem waking up to the duty of holding public meetings, and making themselves felt as a power for good in and around the Quaker City of "Brotherly Love."

President Joseph John Mills, of Earlham College, U.S.A., is on a visit to England, and has the prospect of visiting Egypt and Palestine, as well as Ireland, before returning home. He will probably be at London and Dublin Yearly Meetings.

In The Christian Worker, of the 17th ult., is a very able paper on "Our Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies," by Esther Tuttle Pritchard. The subject of women's separate control and organisation of foreign work is forcibly and convincingly dealt with. It is hoped that English and American Women Friends may co-operate therein.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Professor McAlister, of Cambridge, is exerting himself to secure the transference of the Presbyterian College from London to that seat of learning.

The Italian Mission on Great Saffron-hill, with which the late Professor Leone Levi was so closely identified, is shortly to be closed owing to the difficulty of finding anyone to carry it on.

Rev. James Paterson, of Ballater, has accepted the call from Belgrave Church, which has been vacant since the resignation of Dr. Adolph Saphir. Mr. Paterson is an old college friend of Rev. John McNeill.

Although the Regent-square congregation has for six months been without a minister, the church has suffered little, either financially or numerically. From the report circulated at the annual meeting it appeared that the membership at the end of the year was 739, against 843 twelve months previously. The many and varied agencies of the congregation are in a flourishing condition. Rev. J. B. Thorburn, who acted as assistant to Dr. Dykes, and has rendered such good service during the vacancy, has recently started a Working Men's Institute.

BAPTIST.

The Manual of Longcross-street Church, Cardiff, for 1889, shows that the church, under the pastorate of Rev. F. C. Spurr, has prospered during the past year; the clear increase of membership has been ninety-three, making the present number of members 303.

The church at Crayford, Kent, has received new life into it since Rev. T. F. Waddell became the pastor three years ago. During his pastorate about ninety have been added to the membership, and the church has received much spiritual blessing. The congregation are active in good works.

Rev. E. E. Fisk, of Walthamstow, has received a very hearty invitation to the pastorate of Priory-street Baptist Chapel, York. It was here that the great tidal wave of blessing rose in connection with the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Rev. F. B. Meyer was then pastor of the church. The savour of his ministry still abides in the city.

At Ebenezer Chapel, Cefn, North Wales, there has been a great revival, extending over three months, which is still going on. Some forty have been added to the church, and sixty or seventy more have professed to find Christ, and are either before the church for baptism, or have joined other churches. Special services have been held nightly since the revival began.

Rev. William Cuff, of Shoreditch Tabernacle, although still in a weak state, is slowly recovering, and it is hoped will soon be completely restored to health. His congregation are full of sympathy for their pastor, and are looking forward with interest to the forthcoming special evangelistic services to be held at the Shoreditch Tabernacle by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith.

The anniversary of Penge Baptist Tabernacle was celebrated on Wednesday, last week. Encouraging reports were presented of fourteen branches of work in connection with the church. The number of members is 532, there having been ninety additions during the year. The Sunday-school has about 500 children, with forty teachers, and a Young Christian's Association, formed last October, numbers sixty members. During the year over £75 was distributed amongst the poor.

SALVATION ARMY.

At Lancaster much opposition has been encountered, but a recent eight-days' report is encouraging.

On Saturday and Monday last two new Rescue Homes were opened by the General and Mrs. Bramwell Booth, accommodating 30 each; both are within easy distance of the Receiving House, 259, Mare-street, Hackney.

"Captain" Sterling, of Chillon fame, has spoken recently at the great conventions led by General Booth at Manchester and Brighton. Her many sympathisers in London will probably have the privilege of hearing from her own lips the story of modern Swiss persecution.

METHODIST.

A Methodist Foreign Missionary Convention was held at Birmingham last week. Rooms were fitted up to illustrate life in India, China, Africa, Palestine, and the Fiji Islands.

Mount Pleasant Chapel, Liverpool, is to be transferred to Rev. Charles Garrett's Mission. During recent years it has been a severe struggle to sustain the cause in a condition approaching real prosperity.

The Primitive Methodists have under consideration a movement for the employment of lay agents, similar to Rev. Thomas Champness's Joyful News Mission. Nine districts belonging to this Methodist Church are now employing lay evangelists.

The next Wesleyan Conference is to be held at Sheffield, commencing on July 23. The Fernley Lecture is to be delivered by Rev. Joseph Agar Beet. The subject will be "The Credentials of the Gospel: A Statement of the Reason of the Christian Hope."

The Studley-road (Lambeth) Mission Band has a membership numbering 133. There are also a total abstinence society, a children's service, Gospel temperance meetings, lodging-house and open-air services, &c. Among the members of the band are some of the converts due to its instrumentality.

A meeting was held at Islington Chapel, Birmingham, with the object of raising portion of a sum of £5000, part of which is required to build a new chapel. Before the meeting closed, over £2605 had been promised. A report from the circuit says, "The work of God is prospering among us in all its departments."

The Belfast Students' Missionary Association is making a new move, and one, says The Belfast Witness, which ought to be attended with good results. The committee have arranged to send out some of the senior students to plead the cause of the Association in the pulpits of some of the leading Presbyterian Churches in Ireland, as opportunity may be given.

The Shaftesbury Hall (City) Wesleyan Mission Band have met to organise themselves for the coming year. The year's work is to comprise house-to-house visitation, tract distribution; open-air preaching, "popular" services, the ragged school and mission at Hare-court, under Mr. John Taylor, and—as a new feature—a monthly meeting of workers to report progress and consider suggestions for improvement.

At a home missionary meeting at Old Market-street Chapel, Bristol, lately, Mr. J. P. Distin related the interesting story of the Barrow-lane Mission. A public-house in a prominent position, afterwards used as a Mormon church, was opened as a Methodist mission-hall about twelve months ago. Souls were saved on the very first Sunday, and these were only the firstfruits of a harvest which has been reaped nearly every Sunday since. All work is done voluntarily, the services on Sunday evenings, which are of a distinctly evangelistic character, being conducted by members of the men's Bible-class (which numbers over 800 men), under the guidance of Mr. C. R. Parsons.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Methodist congregation in Stephen's-green, Dublin, is flourishing. Vigorous mission work is carried on throughout the circuit.

Three weeks' Gospel services, largely attended, have been held by Mr. Thompson, of Glasgow, in Westbourne Presbyterian Church, Belfast.

A fortnight's evangelistic services have been held in the Methodist Church, Wilton-street, Belfast. Hundreds of families were visited every evening by Christian workers, and several persons have professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

Rev. John Fordyce, of Belfast, sailed last Friday from London for Sydney, Australia, where he has accepted the pastorate of Piper-road Church, Woollahra. Dr. McMordie is to succeed him as editor of The Irish Temperance League Journal.

Three weeks' evangelistic services have been held at Newtownbutler by Rev. Dr. Ker; and similar services have just been held at Pettigo and the neighbourhood by Revs. Wm. Addy, Geo. Barnes, and G. L. Webster In each case much good is believed to have been done.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. A. Smith, United Presbyterian minister, Eccleſechan, N.B.—At Loughgall, co. Armagh, Rev. A. M. Dobbs.—At Belfast, Mrs. McKay, wife of Rev. Dr. McKay, President of the Methodist College, Belfast.—Rev. F. J. Armitage, vicar of Casterton, Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmoreland.—Rev. E. Minton, of Heaton Moor, for many years pastor of the Congregational Church at Mossley, Ashton-under-Lyme.—Rev. John Henderson, minister of St. James's Established Church, Glasgow.—Rev. William Richardson, rector of St. Chad's, Poulton-le-Fylde, near Preston, Lancashire. — Rev. John Williams, for nearly sixty years in the Congregational ministry.—Rev. J. Builder, Canadian Presbyterian missionary, Mhow, Central India.—Rev. George Anderson, for nearly thirty-five years minister of the Free Church, New Cumnock, Ayrshire.—Rev. A. F. Muir, recently minister of Perry-hill Congregational Church, Catford.

"MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS."

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, The Written and Living Word of God.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

"A word preliminary. The writer of these pages once found himself getting into the deep darkness of doubt.

"Beginning at the foundation he searched for himself, till he found the proofs ample—that the Bible is the Book of God, and Christ the Son of God. It was like finding one's way out of a dense wood into the full light of day.

"Others are still in the dark, and these chapters are the 'blazed' trees that mark the path by which one may get out of the forest. Perhaps some one else may try the same route with a like result."—ARTHUR J. PIERSON.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day, and found that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"—Methodist Times.

"A book like this deserves a place beside Cooper's 'Bridge of History over the Gulf of Time,' as a forcible and interesting evidence of the truths of Christianity. Dr. Pierson tells us in his preface that, having himself been in the dense thicket of doubt, he is desirous of leading others out by the pathway by which he emerged into the light of faith. This volume reiterates the unshaken proofs of the Bible as a Divine Revelation, and also shows how Jesus Christ was none other than the Son of God. It is neatly bound, and has a portrait of the writer."—The Bookseller.

"'You call yourself a Protestant: do you know any good reason why? Are you such because you were brought up to be?—and is that all the answer you have to give for your faith and hope? Then I do not see how you can be sure you are not as wrong, and as mistaken, as any Mohammedan or Pagan or Papist whom you condemn.' These words, culled from Dr. Pierson's book, very effectually denote its character. The majority of people believe because they believe; and if called upon for a reason (we avoid for obvious causes use of the word 'proof,' which is so frequently in our author's mouth), they are unable to give one. It is for the purpose of aiding those who have begun to think for themselves, and have fallen into doubt, that Dr. Pierson has written his book. It conveys clearly and vigorously the origin for the truths of the Scripture, and the evidence upon which the Christian religion is founded. In this respect it may favourably be commended."—Publishers' Circular.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive CHRISTIANITY; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of ROMANISM: Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the EARLY CHRISTIANS at ROME.

From DR. ABBOTT, Head Master of the City of London School:—

"I heartily agree with you that the tendency toward Romanism and Sacerdotalism denotes a misappreciation of the fundamental truths of Christianity; and any one who can do anything to lead people back to those simple spiritual truths is doing a good work for mankind."

From the DEAN OF ACHONRY:—

"'THE CATACOMBS AT ROME' is one of the most useful books I know, as showing the purity and simplicity of the early Church at Rome, and exposing the spurious Christianity of the modern Church of Rome, and the corruptions and incrustations by which she has hidden or destroyed the pure faith of the New Testament."

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the Catacombs of Rome. Many of the pictures depict harrowing scenes of idolatrous cruelty, and others show the inscriptions on the walls of these underground sepulchres. All through the book is a desire manifested to vindicate the purity of the Christianity of those times, compared with the corruptions of Rome."—The Bookseller.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY BIRTHDAY BOOK.

With Beautifully Illuminated Frontispiece.

Presentation Editions: Morocco, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; rich coloured leather, padded, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

Cheap Edition: Cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read as BOGATZKY'S "GOLDEN TREASURY." In addition to the issue of BOGATZKY in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition, ARRANGED AS A BIRTHDAY BOOK, a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "BIRTHDAY" Edition four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank square spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries; consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to OVER FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 103 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.

Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

EAST END DISTRESS. — Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, 41, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, London, E., appeals for assistance for destitute families. Children's Free Dinners, and Soup Kitchen Fund in urgent need of funds. Gifts of money, food, or clothing promptly acknowledged, and exclusively appropriated to the relief of destitution.

ABBEY STREET SUNDAY AND RAGGED SCHOOL and Mission and Institute. Mr. WIRE, the Hon. Superintendent of the above, again makes an earnest appeal for providing Free Breakfasts and Clothing for destitute children attending our Board schools. Hundreds are sent to school without food, and scarcely shoes to their feet. During the last three winters, through the generosity of the public, 42,000 free breakfasts have been given, also about 5,000 boots and garments have been given through the recommendation of our School Board visitors and head-masters and mistresses, also our visiting committee. We are unable this winter to continue this good work unless funds are forthcoming. We trust this will meet with a generous response. Gifts of cocoa, sugar, and milk, or left off clothing, will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mr. B. WIRE, 25, Church-row, or Bethnal Green-road; 60, King Edward's-road, Mare-street, South Hackney; also Mr. J. D. LINK, Heath Lea, Amhurst Park-road, Stamford-hill.

£500 REQUIRED IMMEDIATELY, to carry on Evangelistic Work amongst Poor at East End. We are in great need of funds just now to carry on our SOUP KITCHEN AND CHILDREN'S HALFPENNY DINNERS, open five days per week, besides other meals. Also our Evangelistic Work. Visits are paid to dock labourers, ships, hospitals, police stations, railway warehouses, public-houses, &c., &c. The work is strongly recommended. Who will come to rescue and help His poor ones? We have many sad cases which continually come under our notice. If every reader will send, their "offering" would be gratefully received and duly acknowledged by GEORGE FULLER, Superintendent, Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E., or by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, THE CHRISTIAN Office. Left-off clothing, hats, &c., thankfully received. The "Widow's Mite" would be welcomed.

NORTH BOW MISSION, London, East.—REACHING THE MASSES.—£2,700 will entirely liquidate our debt upon three splendid Freehold Churches, and one large School-room. The property accommodates 1,500 adults, and 1,000 children. The population are all working people, and mostly very poor. Nearly 1,000 persons have been admitted in Church fellowship upon profession of conversion since Aug. 1876. Contributions will be acknowledged through THE CHRISTIAN. The Lord's houses should not be mortgaged to money lenders, whilst the Lord's stewards are rolling in wealth.—JOHN FLETCHER PORTER, Superintendent Missionary, 362, Old Ford-road, Bow, London, E.

CONTRIBUTIONS of Money, Clothing, Coal or Bread Tickets in aid of the poorer patients who are attending the Hospital for treatment, will be very gratefully received by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, W.C.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION, 32, Chamber-street, London Docks. — Great distress prevails among the unemployed labourers standing daily at the dock gates cold and hungry. Funds are much needed to assist them.

KONIGSHEIM HOUSE OF REST, Weston-super-Mare. — This Home affords rest and change to English and Foreign Governesses, also to Lady Christian Workers. Terms, 12s. to 21s. inclusive.—LADY SUPERINTENDENT.

THE SUFFERING POOR.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

Is in URGENT NEED of DONATIONS for AID to the POOR by Tickets for Coal, Bread, Lodgings, &c., which are available all over London and Suburbs; also for its Convalescent Homes at Bournemouth and Sandgate, with 185 beds.—Donations will be most thankfully received by JOHN JAMES JONES, 58, High-st., Homerton, London, E.

A BAZAAR,

Under the Patronage of H.R.H. Princess Christian,

FOR THE BENEFIT OF

MRS. HILTON'S CRÈCHE AND ITS BRANCHES,

Will be held at CANNON STREET HOTEL,

On MONDAY, TUESDAY, and WEDNESDAY, MAY 27, 28, and 29.

Mrs. HILTON earnestly solicits your help and sympathy in this undertaking. Funds are greatly needed to support the large family of little Children sheltered in these Homes. The Country Branch has been closed during the winter months for want of Funds, but has now been re-opened in faith that this Bazaar will supply the means for its maintenance.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the Bazaar may be sent in on or before May 20, addressed to Mrs. Hilton's Crèche, 12, 14, & 16, Stepney Causeway, Commercial Rd., E.

Parcels should be plainly marked with the name and address of the sender.

The Bishop of Liverpool's important Sermon on SUNDAY OBSERVANCE is now ready.

Paris City Mission.

President: LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

This Mission was formed in Paris during the time of the last Exhibition there, and it has proved a great and permanent blessing.

Its model is the London City Mission, both in constitution and action.

Sixteen leading Pastors, Ministers, and Laymen form its Committee, including Pastor Theodore Monod, Rev. F. Howard Gill, and Rev. R. W. McAll.

Eight devout and earnest Missionaries—seven French and one English—now carry a knowledge of the glorious Gospel to the poor of Paris; teaching from room to room and in public places, defending and circulating the Holy Scripture. So pressing is the

that the small and overpressed French Churches will contribute a third, and in some cases half, the support of new Agents.

The International Exhibition of this year opens an effective door for evangelising Paris and France.

CONTRIBUTIONS are earnestly needed to sustain and increase this testimony of Jesus.

Statements about the Society will be sent free by the Hon. Secretary for England, J. M. WEYLLAND, 31, Carlton Hill, St. John's Wood, N.W., who will gladly receive Contributions.

Bankers: BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM & CO., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

ASHLEY MISSION, Bethnal Green, E.—Assistance is earnestly asked for, to maintain this Mission. Large Mothers' Meetings. Classes for Factory Girls, for Men and Lads. Sunday-school. Band of Hope. Tract distribution and Temperance work. All in efficient working order. Cast-off Clothing thankfully received, and the smallest contributions.—Miss BONTEIN, 22A, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, W.

A CONFERENCE ON The Work of the Holy Spirit

Will (D.V.) be Held in the Congregational Church, East Finchley,

On TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY & THURSDAY,

March 5, 6, and 7,

AT 3 AND 7 P.M. EACH DAY.

Addresses will be delivered by Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., The Rev. Principal Cave, J. B. Figgis, W. Guest, Rev. F. Hastings, R. F. Horton, C. New, A. Rowland, H. Simon, W. Skerry, E. White, and others.

The special subject of Tuesday will be, "The Promise of the Spirit; its Meaning and Condition of Realisation Now"; on Wednesday, "The Fruit of the Spirit, in Secret, Domestic, and Social Life"; and on Thursday, "The Power of the Spirit, in Public and Private Ministry."

There will be time for open Conference at each meeting. All who are interested in these subjects are cordially invited.
